As I have said, the engineers already have discretion to protect the Government against exorbitant charges; that discretion has been exercised for the protection of the Government in the past; and we have no reason to doubt that it will continue to be exercised. But there might be some particular work to-day in connection with which there might be a question whether the cost would not exceed 30 per cent of what it would have cost a year ago, and yet it is absolutely important that that work be done; there may be reasons why it should be done which would overcome the mere difference in cost of construction, which might not amount to a great deal in some instances. There are various circumstances which would enter into a determination to proceed with that work which, it seems to me, we ought not to sweep away and compel by legislative act the engineer to refrain from carrying on the work or making an improvement simply because in his judgment, or according to the figures furnished him, the cost might exceed 30 per cent of what the cost would have been a year ago.

I hope the amendment will not be adopted. As I have said, we ought to keep in mind that every item in the bill is regarded as important, as essential just at this time in view of all the conditions; and that ought to settle the question without restricting and limiting the engineers in the effort to carry out the provisions of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, just a word in order to indicate the reasons why I propose to vote for this amendment.

I can not accept the statements made by the distinguished chairman of this committee as a reason for the defeat of this amendment. I recognize the tremendousness of the Ohio River improvement, and I want to see that improvement completed at the earliest practicable moment. I think those who have had charge of river improvements have adopted the worst policy that could be adopted in order to demonstrate the wisdom or unwisdom of river improvements. If they had seen fit to go ahead with one or two or three or four projects and complete them, so as to have some physical demonstration of the fact that they were wise or unwise, then I think we would all have some safe guide before us for our future action. But now let us apply the reasoning to the present project.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. In other words, the Senator believes that every other river and harbor of the country must go without any development whatever until the whole $63,000,000 is spent on the Ohio River and that project is finished?

Mr. POMERENE. I did not say that, sir.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what the argument leads to, it seems to me, when the Senator says that the policy should have been to complete one thing before we entered upon another.

Mr. POMERENE. That is exactly what I said. I did not say that we should complete the Ohio River project before the Mississippi River project should be completed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was using that simply as an illustration.

Mr. POMERENE. I know; but I do not propose to be put in a wrong attitude while I am discussing this question. If it had been for me to prescribe the course to pursue, I would have completed the Mississippi River project first. Then we would know whether or not it was going to prove profitable; but I was addressing myself to the Ohio River project.

Assuming that all of the locks provided for in this bill are to be completed within the next year, still the entire project would not be completed. It would be necessary to construct other locks at some other time. They are not provided for by this legislation. It is true that they are in contemplation; but if we complete the three or four locks that are provided for in this bill the river will be no more able to carry present commerce than it is now, because there are certain shoals and shallow places and locks and dams must be built in order to provide the necessary depth of water for the river boats, and I have no doubt they will be provided for when the entire project is complete. There can not be any question about the fact that there is a very great increase in the cost of improvements of this kind. We have provided for a finance commission to pass upon projects for road improvements. They are discouraging all road improvements unless they are for the immediate purposes of the war. We passed that law—we gave the commission that authority—and now we find that many of these projects are to be discouraged. They can not go on with them because the money is needed for the more immediate purposes of the war, or because the labor is needed, or for some other reason.

Can any sound reason be urged why we should not apply the same principles to river improvements? I do not know of any. I do not know of any reason why we should not complete this Ohio River improvement immediately after the war and make up for lost time. I am willing to accept the responsibility for temporary delay, so far as I may. We are straining every means to get moneys for our war chest. We must go on with the war. We must win and we are going to win. But we should not incur unnecessary expenses now at present high prices unless they are required for war purposes. Those improvements are not necessary for present purposes, and after the war we can redouble our efforts on proper river improvements.

For these reasons, very briefly expressed, I shall vote for the amendment of my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] as modified.

Mr. HARDING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as on the previous roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is necessarily absent, to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMPSON (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who, I observe, is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING (after having voted in the affirmative). I note that the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the negative). I have just been informed that the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], with whom I have a general pair, did not vote, and is absent. I transfer my pair with him to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Borah	Henderson	New	Sutherland
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Townsend
Curtis	Kenyon	Page	Wadsworth
Fernald	King	Pomerene	Walsh
Hale	Lenroot	Shafroth	Weeks

Goff	Lewis	Smith, Ariz.

So Mr. HARDING's amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. CALDER] I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 18, line 14, at the end of section 3, it is proposed to insert:

That upon the order of the President, examinations, surveys, and reports shall be immediately made of the practicability and estimated cost of restoring the canals which were formerly extensively used for the transportation of coal.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to say that we have not provided for any surveys in the bill. The bill came to us without any, and the Senate committee has not proposed any amendments providing for surveys. Therefore, if the bill is to be consistent, we shall have to oppose the proposition to put in any provisions for special surveys.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think perhaps the Senator from Florida, when he uses the term "surveys," means surveys of new projects. This suggestion is not that any surveys of new projects shall be made, but that surveys of existing canal systems, built years ago and owned in most cases by the States, shall be made on the order of the President for the purpose of ascertaining how much it would cost to put them in shape with such temporary repairs as might be necessary to carry the coal which they formerly carried before they were in effect partially put out of business by the railroads.

It is well known that the Pennsylvania coal fields are connected with the Atlantic ports at and around New York, and the Maryland coal fields with the Potomac by canals, which with very little expense or effort could be made serviceable for carrying coal from those coal fields. The amendment leaves the matter entirely in the discretion of the President to order such examinations to be made as might inform the Congress how much it would cost to put those canals in commission in the event that we are faced with another coal famine such as we had last winter.

That is the entire object of the amendment. I think the term "surveys" should not be understood in the fashion that it is used by the Senator from Florida, when he says that there are no surveys provided for in this bill. This is not for new surveys.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. [Putting the question]. The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. VARDAMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMPSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KELLOGG. Has the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have arranged a pair with the senior Senator from Iowa and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD. Making the same transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON. My colleague [Mr. KIRBY] is detained on official business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which I transfer to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and let my vote stand.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] is detained by illness.

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. JAMES] is detained on account of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Curtis	Hale	New	Sutherland
Dillingham	Harding	Page	Wadsworth

So Mr. WADSWORTH's amendment was rejected.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 18, line 14, at the end of section 3, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That such examinations and surveys shall include an examination and survey of the Missouri River within and on the boundaries of the State of South Dakota for the purpose of determining the location of practicable water-power sites and the relation of such sites, if developed, to the navigation of the river.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, on the 11th of this month I presented and had read into the RECORD a petition which was signed by thousands of citizens of South Dakota, including all the State officers, judges of the supreme court, and prominent men throughout the entire State. I wish to read the petition. It is brief:

To the SOUTH DAKOTA DELEGATION IN CONGRESS.

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners, citizens of South Dakota, most earnestly request you to use every influence in your power to secure provision from this Congress for the survey of the power sites upon the Missouri River in South Dakota. We represent that even if provision is made this year that actual expenditure of money under such act will necessarily be delayed several months, if not for a year or more, and we ask for congressional action at this time, that there may be no unnecessary delay in the accomplishment of the work when the war is over.

This amendment, Mr. President, does not call for an additional dollar of appropriation. It comes under section 3 of the bill, which reads as follows:

That for examinations, surveys, and contingencies for rivers and harbors for which there may be no special appropriation the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated.

The amendment is not affected by the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], although that was defeated, or by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING].

I hope, Mr. President, that this amendment may be adopted. The people of South Dakota have again and again expressed their faith in the development of the Missouri River and the great use to which the river may be put, instead of being a means of loss and destruction as it is through so great a part of its course of 500 miles through and along the boundaries of the State.

I think very little of the appropriation of $200,000 carried by section 3 will be needed for the necessary examinations and surveys in determining what are the practicable power sites within the State of South Dakota. With the data already on hand in the office of the Board of Army Engineers, together with what may be readily furnished from previous examinations, voluntary examinations, and preliminary surveys made by citizens of the State of some of these believed-to-be-good power sites, very little of the appropriation of $200,000 will be needed.

Mr. President, it is not alone for power purposes or for irrigation purposes that this survey and examination is asked. The Missouri River may be tamed and utilized for the purposes of navigation, and by the building of dams here and there there will be, of course, great stretches of placid water which will be easy of navigation. It is for the three purposes—power, irrigation, and navigation—that the survey of the Missouri River and the ascertainment of the power sites are asked. I trust that the chairman in charge of the bill will, instead of opposing the amendment, see fit to accept it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this amendment, somewhat like the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], would violate the principle on which the bill is reported; and much as I honor and respect my esteemed friend—and I may say no Member of this body has to a greater extent my confidence in his judgment and in his patriotism and public spirit—I can not consent, as far as I am concerned, to having the amendment agreed to. It would violate, as I said, the rule that has been adopted, that no surveys are to be taken care of in the bill.

In addition to that, it seems to me, according to the Senator's own statement and according to the reading of the amendment, it involves more of a power-site proposition than a navigation proposal. It has to do with the ascertainment of the power possibilities of the river rather than the navigation possibilities, and that, I take it, would come clearly under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department. The Senator might be able to work it out through that department. At any rate, I think it would violate the rule adopted in reference to this bill, and I could not agree to it. If the amendment were agreed to, it would open the door to numerous others.

Mr. STERLING. May I not ask the Senator from Florida, before he resumes his seat, whether millions and millions of dollars have not been appropriated under the river and harbor bill that were not primarily in the interests of navigation, appropriations the primary purpose of which was not for the improvement of navigation but for the protection of the banks on either side of the stream from erosion and of the farms on either side of the stream from overflow? Is not that the purpose of the great amount of revetment work that has been done on the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers already? Might we not as well acknowledge that?

But the amendment is not unrelated to navigation. The surveys are to be made with reference to that, and on selecting and determining whether this or that is a practical water-power site its relation to the navigation of the river is to be determined by the engineers who make the survey or examination.

We appropriated recently—within a year, I think—$45,000,000 for the lower Mississippi River. It is not all for the purpose of navigation, by any means. Ten million dollars—or not exceeding $10,000,000—is to be spent each year until the whole appropriation is used, and a great deal of that, it is understood I think by everybody, is for protection and not primarily, at least, to improve the channel for purposes of navigation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, opposition to river and harbor appropriation bills is usually attended with ignominious defeat. There have been a few instances in the history of river and harbor legislation where opposition has resulted in a temporary defeat of proposed appropriation bills. We are all familiar with the filibuster led by a former distinguished Senator from the State of Montana, which defeated for the session a river and harbor bill carrying millions and tens of millions of dollars. But those who enter the list against these measures may expect to be defeated. The car of Juggernaut moves resistlessly forward over their prostrate forms and over every influence or power interposed against them. It seems to be a hopeless task to oppose a system which is so strongly entrenched. Perhaps no Government policy has been more vigorously and justly assailed than the one which has prevailed for so many years in our Nation with respect to appropriations for harbors and so-called inland transportation. Statesmen of ability and students of transportation problems have inveighed against the profligate waste of money by the Government, found in the annual river and harbor appropriation bills, and they have often submitted plans for wise, rational, and legitimate improvement of harbors and of such inland waterways as justified Federal appropriations for their improvement.

The enlightened and independent press of the country for many years has denounced the vicious, indefensible, and wasteful policy or system adopted by the Government in dealing with this important question. It is incomprehensible that a system so archaic, so inefficient, so criminally wasteful and extravagant, so devoid of any justification for its adoption or continuance, should have been adhered to with such singular pertinacity as the one which has taken nearly a billion dollars from the Public Treasury and wasted a large part of the same under the pretext of improving the rivers and harbors of our country. The indignation of patriotic American people has been aroused again and again at the revelations concerning the selfish method employed in framing river and harbor bills, and the sordid and shameful way in which the Public Treasury has been invaded under the policy finding expression in river and harbor legislation. Scientific students of the question of water transportation, naval men of high standing, and others competent to speak upon the question of harbors and their improvements, as well for commercial purposes as for national defense, have upon many occasions mercilessly condemned and exposed not only the weakness, but the wickedness of the method under which our Government has dealt with this important question in the past; and they have submitted rational and scientific methods of treating this question, which is of such tremendous importance to the Nation in a military and naval way, as well as in its relation to the industrial and economical development of the country, but all efforts to effectuate any reforms have been unavailing. We still open the doors of the Treasury and invite its exploitation. Under the present system there is no creek or rivulet in the United States that may not obtain stupendous appropriations for its improvement. It matters not that it be dry the greater part of the year, that it never was and never can be used for transportation purposes, and that there is no freight to be carried, even if there were a navigable stream in the district. It matters not that it rises and ends in one county or one State. It is immaterial that it is purely intrastate. It is quite beside the question that if there is any benefit from it it is purely local and indeterminate. If there is sufficient effort made by the Representative of the congressional district in which the rivulet is found or sufficient influences are brought from other quarters, it is quite likely some appropriation bill will sooner or later carry an enormous sum for the so-called improvement of such rivulet. If anyone were to read the hearings before the various committees that have had the preparation of river and harbor bills, and if he should visit the hundreds and hundreds of unknown and almost unknowable sloughs and creeks and rivulets, he would be shocked and overwhelmed with indignation and be convinced that a government so unwise and profligate in its expenditures needed some corrective measures applied to its legislative methods. I have read hundreds of pages of testimony bearing upon the hundreds of items in various appropriations bills, and it is not too much to say that by far the overwhelming majority of items of appropriation ought never to have been made; and no defense in morals can be offered for the millions and tens of millions of the people's money literally squandered and thrown away. And of course this waste, this criminal folly, will continue so long as the present system prevails.

There ought to be enough patriotism and common sense upon the part of the representatives of the people, and the people themselves, to deal with this important question in a rational and scientific and national way. This ought not to be a political question. So far as the harbors are concerned, it is a broad national question, and the manner of their development and protection relates to the national safety and welfare of the people. Appropriations for rivers and harbors should be made only as required, in accordance with some scientific and rational program, prepared by scientific, competent, and patriotic men who are competent to deal with the question of national defense and of transportation in a broad, comprehensive, national, and patriotic way. A scientific board of trained, technical men, absolutely free from political or other influences, with power and authority to determine where improvements should be made in our harbors, and the extent of such improvements, as well as authority and power to determine what inland streams require improvement and the extent of such improvement, should be created. Of course, there should be coordination between this board and the naval and military authorities of the Government, and, indeed, there should be upon the board representatives of these branches of the executive department of the Government. Obviously, Congress would have to determine the amount which it was willing to appropriate annually or at stated periods to develop and improve harbors and the inland navigable streams. As stated, such a board, to be successful, must be free from political influences. Its decisions would have to be final if, after investigation, it determined that a harbor should be located at one point instead of another. It would defeat the system entirely if Congress could negative the action of the commission or supersede it by one devised by it.

Charges have been made for years that because of political influence certain points have been selected for the building or construction of harbors that were wholly unsuitable; that unimportant streams have received millions of dollars in appropriations solely because of the political pressure that was exerted. Certain it is that these charges are justified if one visits some of the harbors, so called, and some of the streams that have absorbed millions of the Public Treasury. Why do we not adopt a rational system, create a board, and confer upon it such unhampered and unrestricted power as that it may select and plan the improvement of our harbors, and adopt a policy for the development of our waterways as a result of which benefits will come to the people, and the country will be free from the scandals and deserved criticisms that must inevitably continue if the present plan is adhered to.

I confess that the outlook for any reform is exceedingly gloomy. Few voices are raised in either branch of Congress against the prevailing system. We seem to have accepted the present plan as a finality and seem determined to go on wasting in a wanton and criminal way the money of the people.

Old projects, upon which millions and hundreds of millions have been squandered without any benefit whatever to the country, are still demanding additional appropriations, and hundreds of new projects are clamoring for appropriations. A few people, residing upon some insignificant mountain stream or some sluggish slough, seeing appropriations made for other streams and sloughs and rivulets that never carried commerce and never will be available for commerce, demand appropriations to develop and clear out the sloughs and streams flowing through their lands or upon which they reside. Pressure is brought upon the legislature to memorialize Congress for an appropriation or demands are made upon the Representative in Congress from such section, and the result is that sooner or later an appropriation is made in answer to such demands.

It is immoral, it is in contravention of the Constitution, to make appropriations for such purposes. Even if some little stream, by putting in locks and dams, could carry the farm produce of a few agriculturists or a few loads of sand, dirt, or gravel, or float a few logs or sticks of timber, there would be no more justification for such appropriation by the Federal Government than there would for the construction of railroads to carry farm products from the prairies of Kansas and Nebraska to trunk lines or to the Mississippi or Missouri Rivers, or for the purpose of carrying ores or the mineral products from the mines of the West to the Pacific Ocean or to the great continental trunk railroads. As I have stated, it is not only immoral but it is unconstitutional to make appropriations to improve some little stream rising and ending in a State which, possibly after millions have been expended and locks and dams have been constructed, might carry a few hundred tons annually of agricultural or other products of persons residing contiguous to the stream.

But the moral sensibilities seem to have been blunted to such an extent that any sort of an appropriation will be welcomed. It is incomprehensible to me how anyone can defend a policy that appropriates money wrung from the people by taxation for any such purpose. I do not want to challenge attention in an invidious way to any particular State, but an examination of many of the river and harbor bills will show a surprisingly large number of appropriations for certain States and for scores and hundreds of little rivulets, streams, bayous, swales, and swamps that rise and end within such States. The idea seems to be that if a little stream can float a few logs for a few miles it is a subject for Federal appropriation.

I recall that in a State not far from the District of Columbia a large appropriation was made for the so-called "development" of a creek. It was admitted that it was but a few miles in length and that the only commerce that would ever be carried upon it was perhaps a few barge loads of stone and possibly a limited amount of mineral or agricultural products. The stream did not connect with another State or with the sea; it would not be used for interstate commerce; it served a few individuals in a purely local way.

And yet, as stated, the policy of the Government seems to be that no matter how insignificant the stream, and notwithstanding it may be confined to the limits of some interior county of some State, it is the subject of national concern and may receive millions of dollars out of the National Treasury. Naturally such a policy leads to intrigues, to logrolling, to methods of legislation detestable and abhorrent. The people of one section of a State, seeing that millions are expended upon some slough or creek flowing intermittently, will demand some appropriations in their section. And if one stream can get millions then some other stream near by will be entitled to like consideration, and representatives of the people will be importuned to secure appropriations for the benefits that will be derived from the expenditure of large sums in their midst, though the money is wastefully spent and must be placed in the Treasury by taxation.

Mr. President, this plan tends to debauch the people. I have said that it is immoral. If I could find a stronger word to employ in denouncing such a scheme I should not hesitate to use it. The present bill is freer from objections than many other bills of like character; but the proponents of the present river and harbor system boldly declare that because the appropriations called for in this bill have been cut down materially it does not mean that the policy is to be changed, and that as soon as the war is over the appropriation bills for rivers and harbors will be larger than ever before. It is clear that the claim will be made that the beneficiaries of the river and harbor bills were unselfish while the war was on, and did not demand such stupendous sums as formerly had been obtained, and that such virtue must not go unrewarded, that the reward must be a tremendously augmented appropriation for each year immediately following the war. So, Mr. President, the plan undoubtedly is to continue the old system, which is the present iniquitous, unscientific, wasteful, extravagant, demoralizing, and destructive policy. It is true the present bill carries but few new projects and limits the appropriation to twenty-odd millions of dollars. But new projects, as indefensible as hundreds that have received appropriation within the past, will be forced into subsequent appropriation bills.

Mr. President, the present demands made upon us to carry on this great war ought to silence the claims of all sections for appropriations for so-called improvement of rivers and harbors. By this statement I do not mean that there should not be needed appropriations for the protection of our harbors. As a war measure we should make liberal appropriations to defend our country, and the harbors should be put into a condition of defense so as to meet any possible invasion from a foreign foe. But it is obvious that in some sections of our country there is an irrepressible desire for staggering appropriations to be expended upon the little creeks and streams that have carried no commerce but have drawn millions from the Public Treasury. There are still some, notwithstanding the struggle in which our Nation is engaged for its preservation and to preserve liberty in the world, who have a burning desire to secure millions from the Treasury for expenditure in the same useless, ineffective, and wasteful way which has characterized the use made of the hundreds of millions taken from the Treasury under river and harbor appropriation bills.

I stated a moment ago the question of adopting a scientific method of dealing with appropriations for rivers and harbors had been discussed but never adopted.

Promised reforms with respect to the method of dealing with rivers and harbors have never been realized. It is a remarkable thing that statesmen of such broad experience as those who have been in the control of the House and Senate for a hundred years should not have provided and carried into effect some policy, some plan, that would result in developing the inland waterways of our country and would make proper provision for our harbors; but always when efforts have been made to provide some scientific and proper program dealing with this important subject, local questions, provincialism, a desire of some local character have crystallized a sentiment and developed a phalanx of opposition that have swept away all reforms, and now, after 100 years of extravagance, of wastefulness, and of criminal folly, we are repeating the same mistakes and pursuing the same indefensible and criminal course.

As stated, though we are at war, and will be compelled to raise billions of dollars in order to win the war, and at a time when we should practice economies and sternly repress plans, schemes, and intrigues to secure appropriations, a bill is reported calling for millions to be immediately available, which will require, of course, the laying of additional burdens upon the people. This bill calls for hundreds of separate items. It calls for appropriations for hundreds of creeks, rivulets, streams, and so-called rivers. I have not made full investigation but, from my hurried examination, believe that there are nearly as many items of appropriation in the pending bill as can be found in previous river and harbor bills. But there are hundreds of the same inconsequential, unknown streams referred to in this bill and calling for appropriations. There are Newtown Creek, Woodbridge, Matawan, and Compton Creeks. There are Cold Spring and Absecon Inlets, Absecon and Tuckerton Creeks. These last-named streams in New Jersey cry out for thousands of dollars from the Public Treasury; and Delaware, with her unknown creeks, such as Wicomico, Slaughter, Tyaskin, Broad Creeks, Twitch Cove, and Big Thoroughfare River, Lower Thoroughfare, Deal Island, speaks appealing for appropriations. And creeks and channels in Virginia call for hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the great (?) rivers, such as Scuppernong, Pamlico, Tar, South, Bay, Neuse, Fishing, Contentnea, Swift, and Smith Creeks, and Swan Quarter Bay and Deep Bay, also demand the treasures of the Government for their relief. It matters not that they are local and carry but little, if any, commerce, and carry less instead of more as the years go by. South Carolina, with her numerous swamps and creeks and streams, such as Winyah Bay, Waccamaw, Little Peedee, and Great Peedee Rivers, Alligator Creek, and the "branch at Morrison's Landing," are not forgotten. South Carolina is well provided for in this bill, and Georgia is not overlooked. There are Sapleo and Darien Harbors, Cowhead and Satilla Rivers, and Fancy Bluff Creeks, Altamaha, Oconee, and Ocmulgee Rivers (?). Florida has so many rivers and streams and inlets and swales and creeks that one is forced to the conclusion that it has only sufficient land to make banks for waterways and that geography was never taught in the schools.

There are Indian River, Saint Lucie Inlet, Miami Harbor, Kissimmee, Caloosahatchee, Orange, Anclote, Crystal, Withlacoochee, and Suwannee Rivers, Boca Ceiga Bay, Charlotte Harbor, Sarasota Bay, Clearwater Harbor, Tampa and Hillsboro Bays, Hillsboro and Manatee Rivers, Apalachicola and Chipola Rivers, Flint, Holmes, and Blackwater Rivers, Choctawhatchee, Escambia, and Conecuh Rivers, and the narrows in Santa Rosa Sound.

Then money is needed for the removal of the hyacinth from these great streams, and so appropriations are required for that purpose. Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas, with the hundreds of creeks and streams and rivers, the names of which are seldom, if ever, seen outside of river and harbor appropriation bills, are not forgotten, and millions are given by this bill for their improvement.

I am reminded of an incident that occurred when I had the honor to serve in the House of Representatives. When the river and harbor bill was under consideration a distinguished Representative came into the House during the discussion of the bill. He was attracted by hearing the name of his State mentioned in connection with an appropriation for a so-called river in his State. It transpired that it was an obscure, unknown creek. The Representative made inquiry as to the location of the stream, because he had never heard the name and did not know of the existence of a stream at the point where it was supposed to be found. He was tempted to object to the appropriation, but he was remonstrated with and so decided to offer no resistance to the appropriation that the bill carried for this unknown stream in his own State.

With the heavy demands made upon the people by reason of the war, and at a time when every available officer is needed for military service, we are calling by this bill for a great number of officers to superintend the work to be performed upon the projects carried in the bill. Not only will scores of military officers be demanded for this work, but hundreds and thousands of men will be engaged in the useless, wasteful undertakings which this bill provides for. I might add in passing that an appropriation for a given project carried in one appropriation bill does not mean that is all the burden that will rest upon the Government. That is merely the beginning of the great flood that ultimately will be poured into the project; and so the few thousand dollars for some unworthy scheme will in the end entail perhaps millions of dollars of expense upon the Government.

I recall that in the last river and harbor bill a small appropriation was made for the acquisition of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal. This entering wedge means ultimately a cost to the Government of more than $20,000,000. The evidence showed that this particular project had been unprofitable. It was owned by private parties, who operated it at a loss, but finally it was passed on to the Federal Government. In my opinion it will be as unprofitable in the hands of the Government as it was in the hands of the former owners. It is interesting to learn the methods employed to induce the Government to take over worthless and bankrupt waterways and so-called transportation projects, and also the course pursued to induce the Government to embark upon new schemes and projects. Business organizations are appealed to and they get behind the plan. Committees are appointed, dinners are given, and a vigorous and skillful campaign is entered upon to secure governmental appropriations. Perhaps it would not be parliamentary to characterize the methods employed in some instances to secure Government appropriations and to fix in river and harbor bills projects and schemes unworthy and improper. Selfishness, greed, and other sordid motives inspire many of the activities culminating in the Government taking over projects that are not only valueless, but of such a character as to entail millions of expense to the Government, and to undertake new projects purely local, and which never will be of any benefit for commercial purposes.

Speaking of the last river and harbor bill, I recall the discussion concerning some of its provisions. As I now remember, the appropriations which had been made prior to the date when the bill was being considered had not all been expended. In other words, such enormous appropriations had been made that the Government had been unable to expend the same, and on the 17th of March, 1917, there were unexpended balances in the hands of the engineers reaching the sum of over $50,000,000. As I recall, the record further showed that new projects had been adopted without specific appropriation, but by reason of the transfer of balances—that is, sums unexpended and in the hands of the engineers—and after these balances had thus with authority been expended, the new schemes were fastened upon the Government; and in this manner projects not authorized by Congress finally became a part of the river and harbor scheme, resulting in charging the Government Treasury with millions and tens of millions of dollars.

Mr. President, it seems highly unpatriotic and is evidence of provincialism and selfishness that can not too strongly be condemned to urge the passage of river and harbor bills of this character at this session of Congress. The imperative demands made upon the Government call for amounts so stupendous that the ordinary man can not comprehend what they mean. When Congress appropriated during one session a few years ago only $1,000,000,000 it excited severe criticism and roused the Nation to indignant protest. The sum seemed so staggering that the people could not be convinced that it did not involve extravagance and waste to the verge of corruption. It is not my purpose at this time to discuss the questions of finance and the means of raising sufficient money for the prosecution of the war; but whenever any appropriation bill comes before Congress, it seems to me that it is the duty of every Senator and every Representative to scrutinize with the utmost care the appropriations asked for, with a view to preventing the expenditure of a single dollar that is not absolutely required at the moment. When legislative bodies are in the habit of dealing with enormous amounts there is a disposition to treat lightly measures calling for small and apparently insignificent sums. Often men who deal with millions are careless with thousands and hundreds, and Governments may sometimes become so intoxicated in handling great sums as to be criminally negligent in the disposition of smaller amounts. But Senators know that this war will be won by the nations having the financial resources. Our Government and our allies have sufficient man power to meet their enemies. The financial resources of most of our allies are limited if not substantially exhausted. The financial burden of carrying this war will rest heavily upon this Nation. We will have to supply not only men by the millions, but we will be required to provide money to the extent of billions. The inflation resulting from the expansion of credits and other causes contribute materially to the rising prices. The conditions prevailing will result in the augmentation of prices, thus increasing the cost of the war. We shall be compelled to bear heavily upon the people in the next revenue measure that shall be enacted into law. We shall be compelled to raise by taxation for the fiscal year of 1919 between seven and nine billions of dollars. We shall be compelled to raise many billions of dollars by issuing bonds.

When we contemplate these staggering sums that will be demanded to sustain this Nation until the war shall have ended we can not be other than overwhelmed with the greatness of the task resting upon the American people. The credit of the Government must be unimpaired. To meet what is absolutely necessary for war purposes requires that we shall practice economies to the extent of parsimony with respect to all other appropriations. The American people, with a loyalty and devotion that have never been excelled, are behind the President in this mighty contest. There is almost universal demand in our country that no matter what the cost the war must be won. The American people are beginning to appreciate the issues involved in this mighty conflict. They see that if Prussian militarism triumphs the dark night of bondage and forgotten medievalism would come upon the world. The nations would be plunged a thousand years into a buried past. They realize that our Nation would be destroyed. Democracy would be swept from the earth and a reign of blood and iron would overwhelm the whole earth. They see that now the brave men who are holding upon the battle front the hordes of barbarous Huns are protecting not only our land but the cause of civilization, and from one end of our land to the other patriotic men and women are offering their prayers and giving their sons and their treasure for the triumph of the cause of righteousness and justice. They are praying that strength may be given to their brave and gallant sons and to the heroic men from other lands who fight as our allies, shoulder to shoulder with those whose flag is the Stars and Stripes, and that they may hurl back the opposing hosts and win a glorious victory which will culminate in a lasting peace.

Confronted with this situation, as I have said, we should conserve our resources and devote all the means at our command to the prosecution of the war. Not one dollar should be expended that is not needed, and river and harbor appropriation bills should wait until more vital questions are settled and determined. The record of appropriations for rivers and harbors made during the past 50 or 60 years is tragic. It would be humorous were it not for the facts which it reveals and the sinister, sordid, selfish characteristics which have been exemplified by some of the people and by the American Congress. We have spent nearly a billion dollars for rivers and harbors. Considerably more than 50 per cent of this sum has been expended upon inland waterways. No conscientious, fair-minded man can read the record of these expenditures and look at the results achieved and defend them. Every honest man must confess that we have filched from the Treasury hundreds of millions of dollars; that unworthy and indefensible projects have been fastened upon the Federal Government; that millions have been squandered within the districts and States, if not to aid politicians, contractors, and political parasites, at least not for any worthy purpose or substantial benefit to the country. It is a national scandal. It is an ugly, putrid, frightful spectacle. This record is a severe condemnation of our legislative activities and demonstrates a lack of patriotism and of national spirit and national conscience that must fill the leaders of this Republic—those who believe in the perpetuity of free institutions—with disquietude and with profound regret. It looks as though when it comes to dealing with the National Treasury there is danger of high-minded men losing their sense of honor and their moral precepts.

I recall reading a number of years ago a preface to Judge Dillon's work on Municipal Corporations, and he discussed the fact which appears to have received attention at the hands of political and sociological writers, that the individual conscience is more acute than the conscience of the mass. As I remember, attention was called by the author to the frequent misconduct of municipal authorities in dealing with franchises and other public questions. The moral perceptions of the individual members of city councils have been as keen as those of the average citizen, and the ethical standards of public officials in the cities, Judge Dillon pointed out, were perhaps in the main higher than those of the majority of the people constituting their constituencies. Nevertheless the history of municipalities shows that these men of high moral standing, men who acting alone would measure up to the highest standard of ethical conduct, when acting with others and where responsibility was divided supported measures that were unjust and in some instances corrupt—measures which if they were called upon to pass upon them individually they would have regarded as detestable and abhorrent. There is, of course, an evolution in the sociological world, as there is in the biological world, and the individual ethical standard is superior to that of the crowd, and the survival of the highest ethical and moral standards makes possible the advancement of the human race and the slow but steady progress from darkness into the light of a brighter and fairer day.

Recommendations have been made by executives, by organizations effected for the public good, by statesmen and thinkers, looking to the abolition of the present system of dealing with rivers and harbors; but, as stated, as often as such recommendations are made, and notwithstanding the fact that plans, scientific and rational in their character, have been devised and suggested, nearly every session a river and harbor bill has been passed that flagrantly violated the principles of justice and that indicated that appropriations were not made in the interest of the public but too often for the benefit of private parties and local interests. It is a matter of history that whenever a particularly obnoxious river and harbor bill was offered, and its infirmities and its hideous deformities were exposed to public view, promises were made that it was the last bill that would be enacted under the existing system. But the next session of Congress would witness a similar bill prepared in a similar way, and it would be driven through Congress by the same methods and influences. And there is always the same formidable, persistent, bitter, and implacable opposition to any reform or to the adoption of any just and scientific system to deal with this important question. So it happens that as often as a new bill has been presented and as often as a scientific and rational plan for reform has been suggested, the latter has been overwhelmed and the old, corrupt, wasteful, pernicious, and indefensible system continued.

I wish I had time to invite attention to the debates that have occurred during the past quarter of a century upon the river and harbor appropriation bills. Men of character and patriotism have challenged these measures and in bold and incontrovertible manner have exposed the follies and wastefulness and criminal expenditures resulting from the policy adopted and still followed by the Government.

I recall that during the discussion of the river and harbor bill in the spring of 1917, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] stated that the Hennepin Canal, which was within his State and upon which had been expended over eight millions of dollars, had brought no benefit to the State and that the money expended had practically been wasted.

If I had the time, Mr. President, and Senators had the patience to listen, I could present from the records hundreds of examples of projects upon which amounts ranging from a few thousand dollars up to tens of millions of dollars have been expended without profit to the Government or benefit to the people, except such benefit as flows from squandering huge sums in their midst. I want to call attention, however, to a few items on projects that I happened to lay my hand on during the discussion to-day.

These items indicate in rather striking manner some of the evils of the present system. Cold Spring Inlet in New Jersey has received appropriations of more than $980,000. House Document 388, Fiftieth Congress, second session, shows that the commerce by water is practically nothing:

> The proposition for the General Government to join private interests in creating a harbor when there is no present commerce is unusual. Only Congress in its wisdom should decide.

The report concerning this harbor made by the engineers in 1916 states that—

> It is not practical to obtain commercial statistics as to the commerce carried, but the records show that no vessels are trading with Cold Spring Inlet.

The hearings upon this project show that private business interests purchased land near the inlet, and that the hundreds of thousands of dollars expended by the Government were rather in the interest of some real-estate venture than in the interest of commerce. The War Department further reported in respect to this project:

> Regarding commercial advantages little definite information could be obtained. Mr. D. H. Lovell, superintendent West Jersey division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, quotes the present annual tonnage to Cape May as 100,000. This consists largely of supplies that would probably follow the rail route even were water transportation available.

The report further states:

> As increasing the attractive features of Cape May to visitors, a good harbor would doubtless have a very large effect. It would enable persons to travel to and from the cape by water in passenger boats and yachts, would offer good sheltered and open-sea sailing, and would also permit a resumption of the yacht races that were at one time sailed at Cape May and formed the most attractive event of the season.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent on what is known as Absecon Inlet. The commerce resulting from the expenditure is practically nothing. The record shows that no vessels entered the inlet excepting light pleasure craft and "the only large boat approaching the harbor—so called—is the Government dredge that pumps up sand" and carries it farther from the shore. I find in one of the documents published by Congress the report of Engineer Flagler concerning what is known as Tom River.

It is reported that this is "located on one of the principal automobile lines of travel," and would increase the traffic "owing to the ease with which owners could communicate with their yachts at this point." The commerce for 1914 on this river was 92 tons. An item known as "The pier, Delaware Bay," has received hundreds of thousands of dollars of appropriations, and no commerce has ever been reported as the result of these appropriations. I called attention a few moments ago to the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal. In the river and harbor bill of 1917 the acquisition of the canal by condemnation proceedings was authorized and while the cost was suggested as $20,000,000 no one knows what it will be. One of the reports bearing upon this subject states: "The value of the work of the present canal as a part of a ship canal is relatively very small and has not been estimated."

Another item is known as the waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort. This is a so-called inland waterway. It calls for more than $5,000,000, and the record, I understand, shows that it will be of little or no value to the country or to the people. In one of the appropriation bills a large sum was appropriated to purchase 800 acres of land, largely marsh land, in connection with this project. The Black River project has received large sums. It carries no commerce except a little timber which is floated down the little stream. In a report from the War Department concerning the Congaree River, S. C., it appears that locks and dams are required and that—

> While persistent efforts have been made to keep the channel open by the use of a 12-inch suction dredge, it appears that there are times when depths scarcely more than 2 feet are available in place. The survey discloses the fact that there are 10 shoals below the dam having depths less than 4 feet at low water.

The report further shows that with the "dredging and the snagging" the Government has not been able to maintain the project, and that a new plan was required calling for hundreds of thousands of dollars additional appropriation. Of course, a fair reading of all the record as to this project shows that to plunge the Government into such an undertaking was wholly improper and unjustifiable. After spending nearly $7,000,000 on the Congaree River the War Department report for 1916 shows that expenditures did not result in any permanent increase in depth.

I have here the report by Col. Abbot, of the Corps of Engineers, dated March 8, 1916, with reference to the Ouachita River in Arkansas. Appropriations were made for the "removal of snags and leaning trees." Notwithstanding the expenditures there was no commerce whatever on the river and "there is no evidence that any is in prospect."

The same report refers to Camden Locks and Dams Nos. 2 and 3 in Arkansas. Nearly three millions had been expended at the time of the report. The engineer reported that the territory adjacent "offers but little commerce other than in timber products." Under the heading of "Ouachita and Blacks Rivers, Ark. and Ala.," the engineer further states that of the 70,000 tons in 1915, 35,000 were timber products, and nearly 9,000 tons were sand and gravel. The report further states that the district officer "is of opinion that the resources of the adjacent country are not sufficient to justify the continuance of operations above Camden." The report further states that at the request of interested parties a hearing was given March 7, 1916, to determine whether the project should be continued. Reference is made to the canalization, and the report states that the project was not "preceded by the usual form of investigation to determine its advisability." In other words, appropriations were made for the purpose of canalizing the stream without any survey or investigation. The report further states that the department is now called upon to "reexamine this project, with the view to determine whether the adopted projects shall be modified or the improvement abandoned." It is then stated that—

The commerce, consisting largely of timber products, is not extensive, and, owing to the character of the adjacent country, which is devoid of large commercial, mining, or manufacturing industries, the river traffic can not reasonably be expected to assume the magnitude considered essential to warrant the construction and maintenance of an expensive system of locks and dams. The question is now complicated, however, by the work already done, and it must be decided to what extent the unexecuted portion of the project should be continued or abandoned.

This report shows the waste and, indeed, the almost criminal methods employed in these waterway projects. Here is a little stream local in character. A few people ask for appropriations, ask that it be made a Government project, and, without having an investigation to determine its advisability, the project "was entered upon." It transpires after thousands of dollars had been squandered that there is practically no commerce, and the character of the country indicates there never will be. It is also apparent that without expensive locks and dams on the stream, if there were any commerce, it could not be carried. So, after these great expenditures, the question is presented whether the project is to be abandoned or not. Hundreds of projects are of like character, only more indefensible, more wrongful, than this one. The same report states that hearings were held at various points, notices being sent out to Senators and Representatives as well as to persons known to be interested. It is further stated that at these hearings information was sought on the following points:

What use would probably be made of the river after the improvement was completed? Where would such freight as might be carried originate, and what would be its character and amount, and what river towns along the river proposed to do in the way of establishing terminals adapted to economically loading and unloading boats?

It must be borne in mind that hundreds of thousands of dollars—and, as I recall, considerably more than a million dollars—had already been spent upon the river, and yet at this date people were being importuned to "come together" to see whether there was any freight and to determine whether any could be carried even if the project were completed. The report of the engineer shows that the project should never have been undertaken and that it was not within the rightful authority of Congress to make appropriations for any such purpose. The report indicates that there might be a slight "carrying business developed to handle lumber." It further states that there is a project on foot to organize a body called the "Ouachita River Navigation Association."

This movement has not yet been long enough under way to justify an opinion as to its practical value. It is proposed that this association shall undertake to see that terminal facilities are provided, boats are run on satisfactory schedules, and in general that a healthy interest in this improvement is maintained.

The following language is quite significant:

There are a number of persons living in the vicinity of Arkadelphia who show marked interest at this time in the continuation of the improvement up to that city. However, since 1909 no commerce had been reported on the Ouachita River between Camden and Arkadelphia, while during the fiscal years 1911 to 1914, inclusive, the Government spent for improvement in this section alone $24,976.68.

All of which shows a sordid, ugly picture. A few people get together or are urged to congregate by some governmental officials to see whether some plan can be devised to secure an appropriation by Congress. There is no commerce and no prospective commerce. Some little stream is to be used as a pretext to burglarize the Treasury.

After spending hundreds of thousands of dollars upon the Big Peedee River the commerce (?) in 1915 consisted of 15,758 tons, of which refuse logs and timber constituted 12,548 tons. The timber would have been carried by the river just as well without the waste of money. After spending thousands of dollars upon the Little Peedee River the commerce in 1914 was 1,626 tons, and in 1915, 1,442 tons. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were expended in the building of the waterway from Mississippi to Sabine. This will be a canal 37.5 miles long and 5 feet deep and 40 feet wide. If there shall be any commerce carried upon the canal, it is purely conjectural. Large appropriations have been carried in bills to remove hyacinths from little stagnant creeks and pools.

As I recall, approximately $7,000,000 have been expended on the Cumberland River. A few tons of timber and sand are carried upon the stream, and aside from that but a few thousand tons are carried during the year. The annual cost of merely operating the locks is approximately $40,000, and the interest and maintenance charges per annum would reach nearly $140,000.

Nearly $12,000,000 have been expended upon the Tennessee River, and the actual commerce has decreased over 50 per cent in 10 years. More than $60,000,000 have been expended upon the Ohio River. It is estimated that it will require $40,000,000 to complete certain contemplated improvements. The reports show commerce carried upon the river as being small in amount. The appropriations for the Missouri River are concededly wasted. Many years ago there were boats used upon the Missouri River for the transportation of passengers and freight. Now there is substantially no commerce whatever upon the river, notwithstanding the millions of dollars appropriated. It is also known that the stupendous amounts appropriated for and expended upon the Mississippi River have not resulted in increasing its commerce. Indeed, the Mississippi River for many years was an important commercial highway. Hundreds of boats carried much of the commerce of a number of States. Until long after the Civil War the river was an important highway, but as railroads were constructed and freight rates upon the railroads were reduced the traffic upon the river grew less, until finally the great Mississippi has ceased to be of commercial benefit. I do not purpose examining the reasons why there is so little water transportation in the United States. This much may be said, however, that the unparalleled development of the railroads, and, in the main, the cheap and satisfactory rates provided by them had great influence in depriving our inland streams of use as means of transportation.

In this connection I desire to submit without reading a resolution which was offered by Congressman FREAR in the Sixty-third Congress, second session, and ask that it be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

[H. Res. 603. Sixty-third Congress, second session. In the House of Representatives, August 25, 1914. Mr. FREAR submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Rules and ordered to be printed.]

Whereas the river and harbor bill as it passed the House carried $43,389,000 in cash and over $76,000,000, including proposed dribbling appropriations, for new projects; and

Whereas the said river and harbor bill, now under consideration by another body, has had added to it by the committee of said body over $10,000,000 in additional cash items over and above the $43,000,000 contained in the House bill; and

Whereas some of the items so added had been previously refused approval and place in the bill by the House committee; and

Whereas the said committee of such other body has now stricken from said bill as passed by the House approximately $1,000,000 alleged to have been for wasteful and vicious items, including $72,000 for Mattawan Creek, $47,000 for Kissimmee Creek, $733,000, present and prospective, for Okalawaha Creek, and various amounts for other insignificant creeks; and

Whereas it is currently reported that a proposal is pending to strike from the $53,000,000 rivers and harbors bill, now before another body, approximately $10,000,000, thereby leaving the amount of the appropriation at practically the figures approved by the House, but upon different projects; and

Whereas the Chief Engineer of the Army is authoritatively quoted as stating that not more than one-half of 1 per cent contained in the present bill is "pork"; and

A $93,000,000 PORK BARREL FOR 1914.

Whereas approximately $7,000,000 has been appropriated by Congress during the present session by the sundry civil bill of 1914 for river and harbor improvements in addition to the pending bill of $53,000,000 cash and $33,000,000 new projects, or approximately $93,000,000 in cash and new projects for 1914; and

Whereas press dispatches report that employees of a House committee have circulated letters of inquiry throughout the country asking if people of the particular locality affected by the 400 different projects included in said bill are ready to concede that the local project is a "humbug and a fraud"; and

Whereas House concurrent resolution 38, introduced on the 4th day of May, 1914, is now before said House committee for action and in words and substances is as follows:

"Whereas many millions of dollars of public moneys are annually wasted on our rivers and an absence of businesslike methods is being pursued by the Government in carrying on river and harbor improvements, the following facts are submitted as a preamble in support of this resolution:

"That on March 17, 1914, the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee stated to the House as follows: 'Why, there are propositions advanced, some of them are now before Congress, advocated and supported by men of national repute, the adoption and carrying out of which, it is said by competent engineers, would cost billions of dollars';

"That river and harbor appropriations have increased approximately 500 per cent, while navigation on rivers has decreased 80 per cent, as is shown by the following Government data:

"Appropriations for rivers and harbors: 1875 to 1894 (20 years), $187,099,000; 1894 to 1904 (10 years), $184,425,000; 1911 to 1914 (4 years), $184,345,000;

"The following river traffic is reported from the city of St. Louis: Missouri River, 1890, 31,385 tons; 1906, 6,050 tons; loss, 80 per cent. Lower Mississippi, 1890, 765,880 tons; 1906, 141,575 tons; loss, 81 per cent;

"That commerce on practically all of the inland waterways, excepting the Great Lakes, has greatly decreased and often been driven from the rivers by railway competition;

"That the Interstate Commerce Commission and railway commissions of the several States have general powers to reduce railway freight rates wherever conditions warrant and to prevent increase wherever reduction has been made;

"That the river and harbor bill for 1914 as passed by the House appropriates or authorizes an expenditure of $43,289,004, in addition to $32,895,871 in new projects begun and to be maintained by continuing appropriations from future Congresses, in all calling for a proposed expenditure of $76,184,875. To this vast amount, judging from past experience, will be added from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 before the bill is returned from the Senate;

"That the adopted projects which we are obligated to complete, including those embraced in the 1914 bill, include a future expenditure of $305,500,000;

"That in addition thereto the Army engineers have recommended 93 new projects, which will require a further expenditure of $92,500,000 whenever Congress can be prevailed upon to make such appropriations;

"That 120 additional surveys are authorized by the 1914 bill as it passed the House, which will require an indefinite amount for such projects, possibly reaching $100,000,000, judging from the average last noted;

"BILLIONS OF DOLLARS FOR PORK BARRELS.

"That to these extravagant expenditures will eventually be added billions of dollars, according to the opinion of the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, whenever men of national repute now advocating and supporting other projects can secure their adoption;

"That the 1914 bill as it passed the House appropriates $9,500,000 for the Mississippi River, 84 per cent of which is to be expended on the lower river, notwithstanding its commerce decreased over 80 per cent during the past 20 years;

"That the Mississippi River Commission on April 14, 1914, at St. Louis, recommended to Congress a further appropriation of $12,000,000 for the Mississippi River for next year;

"That the 1914 bill as it passed the House appropriates $2,000,000 for the lower Missouri River between Kansas City and the Mississippi, which appropriation is part of a $20,000,000 project for that portion of the river, notwithstanding traffic is negligible and actual commerce is alleged to have cost the Government approximately $100 per ton for 1912;

"That the 1914 bill as it passed the House appropriates $5,000,000 for canalization along the Ohio River, a $64,000,000 project, comprehending 63 locks, but no part of the open-river service. Canal freight for 1912 is alleged to have cost the Government over $35 per ton, after allowing full railway freight rates for coal traffic;

"That after spending many millions of dollars on the Coosa, Trinity, Brazos, and Red Rivers, these projects are now alleged to be of no practical benefit to navigation;

"That the intracoastal waterways project, present and postponed, as reported by the Government engineers, involves a past, present, and proposed expenditure of $96,931,006;

"That this system includes the construction of new canals of doubtful value, the purchase, through the 1914 bill, of a bankrupt canal proposition, the stock of which is shown to be worthless; of projects that propose to especially benefit certain communities to the injury of others, and projects which it is alleged will drive legitimate private waterway ventures into bankruptcy;

"That the 1914 bill as passed by the House contains appropriations for projects where the expenditure, according to engineers' reports, is exclusively for local private business interests and not for use by the general public;

"That the 1914 bill as passed by the House contains appropriations for creeks which, according to the accompanying engineers' reports, are dry for eight months in the year;

"That the 1914 bill as passed by the House contains appropriations for creeks involving in a single instance an appropriation of $750,000, wherein it is alleged the engineers' report was reversed after real estate speculators had brought political pressure to bear in such case;

"That the 1914 bill does not carry appropriations for the amount required to complete projects as asked for by the engineers in many cases, thereby preventing the Government from entering into proper or profitable contracts until full appropriations are made;

"That the 1914 bill is open to all the objections urged by President Taft against the 1910 bill for the last-mentioned reasons, and contains wasteful appropriations amounting to many millions of dollars:

"Therefore, for the foregoing reasons, it is

LET THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION INVESTIGATE.

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to immediately investigate and as soon as practicable report to Congress the following information:

"First. The character and amount of proposed expenditures by the Government now being advocated and supported 'by men of national repute,' as stated on the floor of the House, the adoption and carrying out of which will cost billions of dollars.

"Second. The character and value to the general public of projects to which the Government is now committed aggregating $305,000,000.

"Third. The character and value to the general public of 93 new projects recommended by Army engineers, but not yet adopted by Congress, which will require a further expenditure of $92,500,000.

"Fourth. The character and value to the general public of 120 new surveys authorized by the 1914 bill as it passed the House, which will require an indefinite amount reaching to over $100,000,000, based on average last noted, providing such projects are recommended by the Army engineers.

"Fifth. To report all river or harbor projects begun and afterwards abandoned by the Government within the past 40 years, together with all expenditures so wasted and reasons for such abandonment.

"Sixth. To report as to the truth or falsity of the statement made upon the floor of the Senate that 'the whole scheme of river improvement is a humbug and a steal,' and to report further as to the truth or falsity of statements made during debate in the House that the river and harbor bill for 1914 as it passed the House is a fraud upon the people, a pork-barrel raid upon the Federal Treasury, approximating in its scope an expenditure of over $76,000,000, and more vicious in character than any of its predecessors.

"Seventh. To investigate and report all active influences urging the adoption of the Mississippi River reclamation, the Ohio River canalization, the Delaware & Chesapeake Canal, and other projects contained in the 1914 bill as it passed the House, together with the names of all organizations, companies, individuals, or hired lobbyists now actively engaged in urging such projects.

INVESTIGATE THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER LAND RECLAMATION SCHEME.

"Eighth. To report fully as to the Mississippi River reclamation project, its probable cost, local benefits to be conferred, and value of any lands to be reclaimed; the ownership of such lands; the contributions equitably required from adjoining States, municipalities, or individual interests, if any; the injuries to Memphis, Vicksburg, or other communities alleged on the floor of the House to have been caused by ill-advised engineering projects, and, further, to report as to the permanence of the reclamation project and probable value compared with Government expenditures required.

"Ninth. To investigate and report as to the desirability of having the Government take over the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal at double its actual value fixed by the House committee; to report whether the canal company stock is worthless and its bonds valued at only 50 cents on the dollar, as stated on the floor of the House; to report whether this canal project can be completed for $10,514,290, as estimated by the Army engineers; to report whether such amount includes the Government contribution of $450,000, made about 90 years ago, and interest and dividends wrongfully withheld during that period; and to report further whether or not the project is to be taken over for the especial benefit of canal bondholders and shipping interests of Baltimore and Philadelphia. In making such investigation the commission is directed to not limit its hearings to stock and bond holders of the canal company, or to local political influences or interested shipping interests of Baltimore and Philadelphia.

"Tenth. To report further what river and harbor projects now under consideration are for the benefit of strictly private business interests, without corresponding benefits to the general public, and the interests that secured such projects for such interests.

"Eleventh. To report what proportionate benefits should occasion contributions, and to what extent, from local communities, particularly where improvements are of strictly local value and of no material aid to navigation.

"Twelfth. To report the financial policy or absence of policy pursued by the Government as to the rivers and harbors during the past 40 years; benefits that have accrued to the public through improved river navigation and increased river traffic, if any, resulting from such improvements, together with all further available information on the subject that may be had, together with such recommendations based thereon as may be found proper to make in the premises, having particular reference to the following information:

"Thirteenth. To report the practicability of taking away from the Chief of Army Engineers the exclusive right and power of determining the commercial necessity of river and harbor projects and leaving with the Army Engineer Bureau the single question of technical engineering work.

"Fourteenth. To report the practicability of turning over to the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Department of Commerce all river and harbor improvements, with full power to exercise all the duties now imposed upon the Army Engineer Bureau, excepting such duties as strictly pertain to civil engineering"; and

LET THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE INVESTIGATE.

Whereas no report has been made to the House in reference to such resolution, nor has any hearing been called for its consideration: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the House Judiciary Committee, in lieu of the Interstate Commerce Commission, be requested to hold hearings upon said resolution (H. Res. 38) at the earliest practicable day and to report to the House its findings, in order that the House membership may be informed as to the facts contained in recitals in such resolutions.

Resolved further, That said committee be directed to ascertain from the Chief of Engineers of the Army what $260,000 contained in the river and harbor bill, being approximately one-half of 1 per cent, is conceded to be "pork."

Resolved further, That such committee be directed to ascertain if the appropriations struck out of the bill for the Kissimmee, Mattawan, Oklawaha, and other creeks, amounting to approximately $1,000,000, consist of wasteful and improper items, as found by the committee of another body.

Resolved further, That such committee be directed to ascertain if the additional amount of $10,000,000 in items proposed to be struck out by such other committee consists, as alleged, of wasteful and improper items.

Resolved further, That such committee ascertain the importance and character of the $10,000,000 added to the House bill of $43,000,000 by such other committee, and that the result of such investigation be reported to the House at the earliest possible moment, together with its recommendations thereon; and the said Judiciary Committee is hereby authorized and empowered to issue subpœnas and examine witnesses and to procure all documents bearing upon the matters referred to, and to employ needed stenographers and clerks in the prosecution of such inquiry.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, an examination of many of the projects undertaken by the Government furnishes convincing proof that the system is wrong and that appropriations have been obtained by improper methods. However, there are parallels found in other legislation enacted by Congress. Scattered throughout the Republic are found in towns of but a few hundred inhabitants magnificent public buildings erected by the Federal Government. The welfare of the Nation has not been considered. The Government has been regarded as legitimate prey, and hundreds of millions of dollars have been taken from the Treasury and expended in unnecessary public buildings throughout the land. It is regrettable that there has been such a lack of moral perception upon the part of the people as to the iniquity of a course that takes from the Public Treasury funds before the demand therefor is imperative and justifiable. It is a matter of common knowledge that men have been retained in the National Congress many years because of the success which has attended their efforts in securing appropriations for public buildings, and for brooks and creeks and streams and rivulets and for other local purposes. The success of a Senator or Representative is often measured by his constituents by the frequency with which he secures appropriations and the extent of such appropriations. I have heard Congressmen and Senators extravagantly praised by the people of their States because of the offices which they had secured or the large and numerous appropriations which they had obtained for their States and districts.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I think that is true. Just what the Senator from Utah has said I have said before on the floor of the Senate, and have been severely criticized for doing so. Is it not, however, really an indictment of the people, as well as of the Members of Congress, that the people of this country regard a Representative or a Senator as a great Representative or a great Senator because he comes home with an appropriation for Podunk Creek or for some public building that is not needed? Will not the reform have to come through the education of the people? Must they not learn that Uncle Sam is not merely a great Santa Claus to pass out gifts, and that, instead of their owing no obligation to the Government and the obligations of the Government being to them, exactly the reverse is true? I thought a good deal about that question, and I have wondered how it could be solved.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa perhaps has shown as intelligent an appreciation of the evils of the present method of dealing with rivers and harbors and public buildings as any man in public life. He has frequently raised his voice against the evils which have characterized our national legislation. Unfortunately, Mr. President, the people have not been sufficiently alert and their consciences have not been sufficiently quickened in dealing with these great problems.

I recall, Mr. President, what a Representative said to me a number of years ago, that when he refused to present petitions in favor of public buildings for certain inconsequential cities within his district he was defeated for renomination. We need an awakening of the public spirit of some of the people. They should appreciate this fact, that the Government is not a mere distributor of gratuities; that the National Government must not be converted into a gigantic paternalism or a devouring autocracy.

The independence, the virility, and the strength of the States is slowly being undermined. Indeed, some of the functions of the States seem to be paralyzed. The trend of thoughtless opinion is in the direction of assumption by the National Government of prerogatives and duties clearly resting upon the States. There is nothing so potential in undermining the autonomy and in atrophying the functions of the States as the appropriations obtained from the Federal Government. No matter how purely local an enterprise or scheme may be, if an appropriation can be obtained from Congress it is received with enthusiastic joy by the district or State in which it is to be expended. The very virtue and honor of States are being attacked in an insidious way through the influence of governmental appropriations. The disease is growing and poisons our entire political life. Pleas that legislation by the Federal Government is paternalistic or unconstitutional or beyond the functions and powers of the Federal Government or that the legislation invades the province of the State and relates to purely local and domestic affairs are regarded with disapproval or treated in a half complacent and half contemptuous manner as emanations of a mind too highly technical or too much devoted to academic and legal confinements. It is so easy to justify the reception of gifts and gratuities and bounties and subsidies and appropriations. More and more the people are beginning to regard the National Government as the fountain and the source of all blessings.

Little by little the principles upon which independence and true representative government rest are being undermined and the people taught to appeal to the Federal Government for those powers which they alone possess and for the exercise of functions which can be performed satisfactorily only by the people or by the States to whom the people have delegated certain powers. Unfortunately many who are holding responsible positions in the Government encourage this view and appeal to the people to rely more and more upon the Federal Government and to appeal to it to extend its operations and activities into the remotest corners of the Republic and into domestic and local matters pertaining to the people and to the States themselves.

Mr. President, we are pursuing a dangerous course; we hope and earnestly pray that the ship of state may avoid the shoals and reefs which have wrecked other nations in the past. At this hour the States should be aroused to the responsibilities resting upon them and the people should be jealous of their rights and their liberties and oppose policies that lead to concentration and consolidation and to the overthrow of the form of government established by our fathers. The lines determining the rights of the States should not be obliterated; there should be an awakening of the people against the insidious influences tending to centralize all Government powers at Washington, stripping the people and the States of their reserved and undelegated authority. History is so replete with examples that it seems that we ought not to go astray. Lord Byron stated that—

> 'Tis the moral of all human tales;
> First freedom, wealth, vice, corruption, barbarism, at last,
> And history, with all her volumes, hath but one page.

Strong and vigorous people build Commonwealths under which they enjoy liberty; wealth is produced, and then there comes too often a desire for the trappings of imperial power. Blessed with enormous wealth, there is a disposition to seek special privileges under the protection of centralized authority. Then there follows a decadence of those rugged virtues which make the people great, mental and moral lassitude, autocratic forms of government, and finally a tyranny unendurable. The sequel is revolt, civil strife, a leveling of the citadels of power, and the building anew of a government by the people; thus, as the poet states, "History, with all her volumes, hath but one page."

We sincerely hope and fervently pray that the seeds of dissolution may not be found within our Government; that it has such elements of immortality as to endure for the ages. But we must maintain the letter and the spirit of our Constitution and not wantonly violate the clear mandates laid upon us and upon the people. The people and the States must be aroused to the responsibilities resting upon them and they must see to it that their functions and powers are not destroyed and the solemn duties resting upon them are not abandoned and forgotten.

Congressmen coming to the National Legislature with high purposes and with desires to deal with public questions in a national and in a comprehensive way have been forced by their constituents into a sordid, indecent provincialism.

I recall a number of years ago speaking with one of the great Senators of our Nation. I refer to Senator George Frisbie Hoar, deceased, who for years in the National Congress, with great ability, represented the State of Massachusetts. I would like to say, Mr. President, by way of parenthesis, that we often talk of Webster, Clay, and Calhoun, and the sentiment is sometimes expressed that modern statesmen do not measure up to their standards. This may be true, and yet I have sometimes felt that Senator Hoar was a greater man than Daniel Webster. In scholastic training, in culture, and in general as well as technical knowledge he was superior to Webster. He was a great lawyer, a great statesman, a profound philosopher, and a patriotic, loyal American. He lived up to the highest ideals and traditions of the Senate, and left to his State and to his country a patrimony that has enriched us all.

In the course of our conversation I asked Senator Hoar how he had found time in his arduous public service in the House and in the Senate to make so great a study of the great national and international questions and problems that engaged his attention, and at the same time to cover so many other fields of human thought. I had remarked that I had been compelled to give much of my time—I was then in the House—to looking after local matters and to the answering of communications from my constituents. His reply in substance was that he regarded it as his primary duty to consider great public and national questions, and that local matters were given less consideration. Of course, Senators represent sovereign States, and consideration must be given to the legitimate interests and demands of their States, but in so doing it must not be forgotten that Senators and Representatives are the protectors of the Federal Government, and must uphold, under their oath, the Constitution of the United States. While representing their respective States, they must not make mendicants of their States or permit them to be debauched by gifts and gratuities and contributions and appropriations taken from the Treasury of the Federal Government.

It is a shortsighted policy that leads to heavy taxation upon all the people to draw money into the Federal Treasury, merely for the purpose of taking it out of the Treasury and transmitting it back to the people. It were far better to develop the spirit of independence upon the part of local communities and encourage the growth of a spirit which leads the States to an assertion of their reserved and undoubted prerogatives. We must not break down the States and produce a vast consolidated Government, all powerful, all dominant, all controlling.

Persons acquainted with the rural press will frequently find most eulogistic references to the Representative or Senator from the district or State because he has succeeded in obtaining a large appropriation for a post office or the promise of a still larger one, or an appropriation for some stream, which it is claimed will be of service commercially to the State. It is well known that many high-minded and conscientious public servants have been defeated for renomination or reelection because they have not enthusiastically supported the demands of some of their constituents that raids be made upon the Public Treasury and that local schemes be carried into execution at the expense of the Federal Government.

The debates in this body and in the other branch of Congress during the past 25 years will show that Congressmen have been threatened and intimidated whenever they have refused to enthusiastically support the biennial raids which have been made upon the Public Treasury under the guise of river and harbor bills.

Right at this point I want to express my disapproval of an organization known as the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, which has its headquarters in this city. This organization has boldly and defiantly announced that its object is to secure millions of dollars from the Treasury of the United States. Its last declaration, so far as I am advised, is that there must be appropriations of $50,000,000 each year for rivers and harbors. It seeks to differentiate itself from other lobbies by contending that its purpose is national and for the benefit of the country, whereas other lobbies that sought to secure legislation were engaged in selfish and sinister and wicked undertakings. For myself I do not see much difference between the latter organization and any other confederated body which, directly or indirectly, secretly or openly, attempts to intimidate or cajole Congress and obtain appropriations from the Public Treasury or obtain desired legislation. We denounced the manufacturers' organization because it sought to obtain tariff legislation. We all know that a large portion of the American people believe in the protective system and in the application of that system for the claimed purpose of stimulating local industries. They believe the Government should impose tariffs in aid of the domestic producer. It is known that organizations of the wool men, the steel men, and other branches of trade and of production have been effected, and that these organizations from time to time have exerted all the influence within their power to secure legislation that would be favorable to those engaged in the industries represented by such organizations. Some of these organizations have been denounced as wicked, corrupt lobbyists. It has been charged that they have debauched, or attempted to debauch, committees of Congress and the Government itself, and have sought to obtain a monetary advantage from the legislation enacted by the National Legislature. It has been alleged that agents have been retained at Washington to represent these organizations; that they have conferred with Senators and with committees and in direct and devious ways sought to influence the tariff and financial legislation of this country.

The people have demanded pitiless publicity and that all lobbyists be scourged from the Capitol and that the atmosphere attending legislation should not be contaminated by the selfish influences which, it is alleged, have been powerful in the history of past congressional legislation; yet, with this quickening of the public conscience, this improved ethical standard, which, I think, influences and is manifest in the labors and work of the House and Senate and public officials generally, there has been a strong and powerful organization seeking to impose its will upon Congress and to secure enormous appropriations each year to be expended under the old, archaic, discredited, and wasteful plan.

It is significant that this organization places itself behind the general river and harbor scheme. It makes no investigation of the rivers and harbors for which appropriations should be made because of their merits, but it stands behind the entire system, bad and vicious as it is, and behind lump-sum appropriations, knowing that millions of dollars will go to improper projects and that millions and hundreds of millions will find their way into the pockets of contractors and machinery men and into districts the result of which will be to aid political machines and political parasites therein.

Heretofore attention was called to one of the activities of the lobby above mentioned by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. In the March session of 1917 a bill carrying $38,000,000, in round numbers, was reported. Eighty-two new projects were added to that bill. It was a vicious omnibus bill, and when patriotic Senators indicated their purpose to oppose it efforts were at once set on foot by the organization referred to to intimidate them and to prevent their opposition to the passage of the bill. This organization had published in various publications of the country statements calculated to incite the people to influence their Senators to support the bill. I have here a copy of one of the circulars, or letters, written in support of that position, which, without taking the time to read, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The river and harbor bill now pending before the Senate is the most constructive piece of waterway legislation introduced in many years. It eliminates a number of the projects which have been sharply criticized and provides for beginning work on 90 new projects, every one of which is of undoubted merit and importance and has received the unqualified approval of the Army engineers. Moreover, provision is made to prosecute and maintain every worthy waterway project in the land which is already under way.

Notwithstanding the great merit of this measure, which carries an appropriation of about $39,000,000 for the next fiscal year, a minority report has been filed by Senators KENYON, JONES, SHERMAN, HARDING, and WATSON, which proposes to substitute a lump-sum appropriation of $25,000,000 to carry out existing projects and also authorizes 11 new projects of more or less importance.

If this substitute is adopted, it will be the hardest blow ever received by river and harbor legislation. I earnestly appeal to every friend of waterways to do his uttermost to defeat this substitute and secure the adoption of the bill as reported by the majority of the Committee on Commerce.

There is great congestion of traffic throughout the Union, and every agency of transportation should be fostered and encouraged to the utmost; not destroyed, or at least badly crippled, as is done by this substitute. The time is short. The emergency is acute. Any action to be effective must be taken at once.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Iowa, in a splendid speech which he delivered when the river and harbor bill was under consideration last year, referred to the fact that this article was published in the newspapers in his State for the purpose of arousing a sentiment that would demand of him the support of the measure.

In the Sixty-third Congress, Representative JAMES A. FREAR, of Wisconsin, introduced the resolution which I have placed in the RECORD, for the purpose of investigating this organization. I am not advised what was done with the resolution, but in a speech made by this same distinguished Representative on the 3d of March, 1917, he made this statement:

Original evidence now in my possession was offered to show that, directly or through subsidiary lobbies, the dredgers, railways, and other interests that have a direct financial claim on Government grabs contribute secretly toward the lobby's support. In some instances this lobby equally divided with its collectors the subscriptions paid by gullible supporters. Intrenched from the Capitol Building to the Southern Building, it instigates back fires on Members of Congress to compel support for "pork-barrel" bills. Public and private citizens of undoubted probity have lent their names and presence to the lobby under misleading and persuasive arguments that by so doing they are performing a local duty and advancing legitimate waterway legislation.

The report of the Rivers and Harbors Congress, the organization referred to, on pages 60–62 of the 1911 report (RECORD of Oct. 8, 1914), contains a list of appropriations given to the different States of the Union amounting to $178,616,897 from 1907 to 1911, inclusive. Statements are made in this report for the purpose of giving the relation between the appropriations made to the States and the amounts contributed by the States to this organization.

A statement from this same official report, referring to 14 States and the District of Columbia shows the amount subscribed by each of them and the amount received by way of appropriation from Congress. Without taking the time to read them, Mr. President, I ask that these figures be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

	Amounts subscribed by States, 1906–1911, inclusive.	Amounts of appropriations received by States, 1907–1911, inclusive.
Pennsylvania	$4,295	$4,837,745
Connecticut	2,115	2,318,000
Massachusetts	2,850	1,451,733
Maryland	1,775	2,778,265
New Jersey	2,735	3,481,895
North Carolina	2,538	2,259,614

Texas	8,825	9,193,300
Mississippi River		21,842,775

Mr. KING. One Capt. Ellison was official secretary of the congress, and the official organ of this organization quotes from one of his addresses, which, it is stated, provoked applause. He stated:

We send Congressmen here to legislate for the Nation, theoretically, but actually to get all he can for us; and if he does not get our share, and then some, we do our best to replace him.

A Mr. Thompson was the secretary in 1914, and in his speech before the annual meeting in December of that year he said:

We amended our constitution in 1912 so as to strike out the recommendation of $50,000,000 a year. We did not strike it out because we are the kind of chumps who believe that $50,000,000 a year is too much, but because we believe the safe, sane, and wise policy would be for the Government to spend $100,000,000 or more every year on this great work.

It will be observed that this patriotic "philanthropist" shows his generosity by boasting of the fact that their constitution was amended because it asked for only $50,000,000 a year out of the Public Treasury, when these patriotic and public-spirited men, who were not "chumps," insisted that $100,000,000 was required each year. Congressman FREAR quotes a letter received by him, which is as follows:

WATERWAYS AND COMMERCE,
No. 150 Nassau Street.

HON. JAMES A. FREAR,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN FREAR: I inclose herewith original subscription lists obtained from a canvasser named John M. Williams, of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, who received 50 per cent of the amount set opposite each name. As you will see, these subscriptions cover 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, and 1912.

You may regard them as your property to do as you please with them.

Sincerely, yours,

RICHARD M. MCCANN, Publisher.

It is known that a plan has been devised to secure several hundred millions of dollars out of the Treasury for a canal system along the Atlantic coast. The broad Atlantic is not big enough for the traffic, so a narrow canal must be constructed following the sinuosities of the coast. The construction of this canal system, of course, would mean large sums of money to contractors, dredgers, and manufacturers of machinery used for such purposes. Mr. Williams, representing the organization aforesaid, received authority from this organization to make collections to be used in promoting the purposes for which it was created. This letter of authority was signed by the officers of the organization, and is in part as follows:

WASHINGTON OFFICE, 1910.

To the business interests of Baltimore, Md.:

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress is working earnestly to secure the adoption by the Federal Government of a permanent waterway policy that will provide for improving all the worthy waterways of the Union.

The improvement of the canals and waters of the Atlantic coast, in which Baltimore has such a direct and vital interest, should be among the first to receive the benefit of the increased and regular appropriations for rivers and harbors that this organization is working to bring about.

Funds are needed to carry on the work which the National Rivers and Harbors Congress has persistently urged, and to the end that a strong demand may come from every section of the Republic, we earnestly invite your financial cooperation.

John M. Williams is authorized to receive and receipt for all moneys that may be subscribed. He is working under the direction of and reporting to the undersigned officers of the congress.

The record shows that one of the subscribers to this organization was the Dredge Owners' Protective Organization. Of course it goes without saying that when hundreds of millions of dollars are expended by the Government, millions being expended annually for these schemes covered by the bills known as river and harbor bills, there would be many concerns organized for the purpose of obtaining contracts from the Government, and it is not to be wondered at that these concerns would form associations and organizations in order to procure as large appropriations as possible. The Dredge Owners' Protective Organization, responding to Mr. Williams's efforts to secure money to aid in the purposes of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, wrote letters to various persons. I have here a copy of a letter signed by Mr. W. P. Ryan, secretary, and, without taking the time to read it, I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

[Dredge Owners' Protective Organization: Frank A. Furst, chairman; William P. Ryan, secretary. Executive committee: F. A. Furst, George Leary, John Gerrish, J. McMullen, P. Sanford Ross, W. J. Bradley.]

BALTIMORE, MD., August 4, 1910.

MR. JOHN M. WILLIAMS,

Yours, very respectfully, W. P. RYAN, Secretary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is very plain that the members of this dredging organization were being used for the purpose of getting money to influence legislation that would result in giving them additional contracts.

Representative FREAR, in his speech delivered March 3, 1917, and above referred to, stated that during the debate on the 1917 river and harbor bill he submitted a statement signed by Mr. Furst, president of the dredgers' organization, in which it was admitted that contracts with the Government were secretly allotted and divided among the dredgers. This evidence shows that these contracts were fraudulently, unlawfully, and secretly divided among them.

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress contributed, it is claimed, to the defeat of the $25,000,000 Kenyon substitute bill in 1917, March session, because it wanted $50,000,000. In December, 1916, Chief of Engineers Black and ex-Chief Bixby appeared and made speeches. They did not seem to appreciate the impropriety in their appearing before the organization referred to and defending the policies and supporting the plans of such an organization. Gen. Bixby, formerly Chief of Engineers, United States Army, in his address, dated December 7, 1916, said:

I had come here expecting to hear a little bit more discussion on this question of "pork," but it does not seem to have been discussed particularly. * * * We ought to see that such accusations are refuted every time that they are made, every time the statement to that effect appears in any newspaper, and every time that they are made in a public address. [Applause by the lobby.] The noisiest men always attract the most attention; the dogs whose fight is least to be feared usually bark the loudest and will often shut up quickly when given the kick that they deserve. In the same way those men who bark loudest against river and harbor appropriations will usually stop barking instantly as soon as you go after them with a few unanswerable facts. * * * I want definitely to say that there has not been anything which is unworthy in the way of river and harbor appropriations for the last six years.

Mr. President, I refer to Engineer Bixby's statement for two reasons: First, to show how close the relation was between one of the engineers of the Government and this organization which was seeking to get millions out of the Treasury for the engineer to spend; and second, because of the statements repeatedly made, and not successfully denied, by such distinguished men as former Senator Burton, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and others who have given consideration to this matter, that millions and hundreds of millions of dollars of appropriations secured from Congress for rivers and harbors have been wasted.

It will not be forgotten that Senator Burton in 1914 led a successful fight against the river and harbor bill recommended by Gen. Bixby. In 1915 Senator Burton again led a successful fight against the river and harbor bill. Notwithstanding that these two Government officials knew of the attitude of Senator

Burton and of the valid and just criticisms of these bills, the former Chief of Engineers, Gen. Bixby, made the speech above referred to, and Gen. Black in his speech at the same meeting used these words:

On the Mississippi River we have an improved waterway of ample depth and sufficient width and open the year round from St. Louis to New Orleans, but it is only within the last year or two that that waterway has begun again to be used. * * * In passing down the Mississippi from St. Louis to New Orleans two weeks ago we left St. Louis one morning early. The same day a large load of freight left St. Louis. All the way down the Mississippi River we saw the barge of freight at intervals. Finally we reached New Orleans, and the barge load of freight got there at exactly the same time. * * * Later I saw the manager of the barge line, and he told me that although this enterprise of theirs is but a new one and as yet is little known, it is to-day making money. [Applause from the lobby.] * * * There is no use recommending too small an improvement. Very often the small improvement, costing little money and resulting in restricted channel dimensions, will be a nonpaying investment, whereas a channel of greater width and depth, with greater expenditure of money, would make ample returns to the United States.

Mr. President, we did not need the statement of Gen. Black to prove that the commerce upon the Mississippi River, upon the Missouri River, and upon other great inland waterways has been steadily diminishing year by year as the appropriations for them have increased. It would seem that Congress has been a deliberate party to the destruction of commerce upon the creeks and rivers of our country. With the knowledge that increased expenditures resulted in diminishing the commerce, Congress kept on making the appropriations.

It will not be forgotten that Gen. Black recommended $6,000,000 as an appropriation for the lower Mississippi for 1917.

As heretofore stated, it is possible that I may have the wrong point of view, but I am unable to justify the existence of this organization and countenance its activities. It seems to me that it is an organization whose efforts must necessarily lead to intrigue and corruption. No matter how patriotic its members may be, of necessity it will become an engine of oppression, of coercion, or intimidation. I would regard it as just as reprehensible for a corporation to be formed and a lobby maintained in Washington to secure annual appropriations of $50,000,000 to build ships, railways, or to make appropriations for the reclamation of swamp lands or arid lands of the West, or to secure tariff legislation, or to obtain money from the Treasury of the United States for private or semiprivate purposes. It is obvious that such an organization must, to be effective, exert power and influence by persuasion, by cajolery, by a propaganda more or less extensive, and finally by coercion and intimidation, if such be necessary, in order to accomplish its ends. It ought to be condemned and it ought to be destroyed.

It is unfortunate that private interests manifest themselves in the activities of Congress. As an example, before the war we had a large number of Army posts in the United States—as I recall, 49. Everyone knows that the maintaining of such a large number was unnecessary and led to extravagance and indefensible waste. Former Secretary of War Stimson said that this large number of Army posts was caused by local and political influences. It was claimed that improper influences were exerted by Senators and Congressmen to have a post established in their town or State. The charge was that the needs of the Army, the best interests of the Nation, the question of economies—these important matters were forgotten or flouted by the Representatives of the people. It was felt that to have an Army post in a city would cause the expenditure of millions of dollars annually, and that would help business, and so the Army was used as a means of furnishing a market for the cities and local communities. In naval matters the charge is that the same reprehensible plan has been pursued.

Mr. President, may I say—and I say this with a great deal of trepidation—that I fear that friendships and other considerations, not venal or such as might be denominated immoral, sometimes influence, in a slight degree, at least, the actions of public men, and particularly with respect to appropriations. As a result there is not that close scrutiny of appropriations which is so imperatively demanded. Friendships too often influence us; benefits received unquestionably affect us. If my State is to receive a large appropriation in a given bill it would probably lead me to regard with less distrust and with greater favor legislation favorable to some other section.

The policy of carrying in one bill provisions affecting many sections of the country can not be otherwise than pernicious. It unites all parties in support of the measure as an entirety, and so the proper and fair provisions are used to carry through the vicious and improper ones. Under this plan of legislation military posts have been established where none was needed. Naval stations and naval works have been placed at unsuitable points. The distinguished Senators from Georgia stated upon the floor of the Senate yesterday that Brunswick Harbor was one of the finest upon this continent, if not in the world. As I recall, the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] stated that it would hold within its magnificent embrace all the shipping of the world; and yet that great harbor, built by nature, was passed by, according to the statements made upon the floor of the Senate yesterday, and in another State at a point where there was no natural harbor it was determined that one should be made; and so millions of dollars have been expended to dredge and construct a harbor. Even now this bill reveals that millions more will be required and that extensive dredging operations are still necessary, and excavations through hundreds of feet of solid earth must follow. We are not satisfied with the gifts of nature and a great harbor that Providence provided, but we must search for some unsuitable place and then pour out the treasure of the people. It is unnecessary to indicate the causes leading to such abuses as the one just referred to and others of which it is a type.

So we find in the records of the river and harbor hearings that there have been many appropriations for creeks that were unknown, and it is shown that where there was no water in some of these creeks upon which money had been wasted the engineers suggested the sinking of artesian wells. What a splendid scheme to encourage and develop water transportation!

Mr. President, much of my criticism as now expressed is general, but I do know from an examination of some of the hearings for a number of years—and I have gone through them with more or less care—that there are hundreds of items in river and harbor bills calling for millions and tens of millions of dollars that can not be defended in morals or justified upon the ground of public necessity or public advantage.

The questions of strategy, the needs of the country, what would be the best for the Navy and for our country's defense—all these important questions have often been trampled under foot by the selfish, provincial, and, I was about to say, ignoble methods employed in dealing with rivers and harbors. A broad, comprehensive naval system, the establishment of naval bases with reference to the defense of the Nation—these could not be accomplished because of the selfish demands of sections of our country and Representatives therefrom. So, as a result, in the year 1913, we had 11 first and second class navy yards in the United States. England, with her great navy, had only six. We required fewer. But this method of legislating has characterized the National Congress as it does the legislation of the States. It is a matter of public history that there has been the most shameful logrolling, trading, dickering by local legislators in order to secure advantages for their particular districts. Members would combine and agree to erect a university in one part of the State if the penitentiary or reform school or asylum were erected in some other part of the State. The best interests of the people were not consulted. What would conduce best to the public good was forgotten in the wild scramble for local advantage.

So it would seem that the National Congress has chaffered and traded in Army posts, navy yards, old soldiers' homes, and other Federal enterprises and structures.

As an illustration of the way river and harbor bills are drawn, the bill for 1910 contained items calling for expenditures and appropriations in 296 congressional districts out of 391. This bill was a marvel, as one Senator subsequently said in an article which he contributed to a newspaper, of "geographical logrolling."

There seeems to be some similarity between the methods employed in preparing river and harbor bills and the tariff acts which have been passed. Senator Vest, speaking of the Wilson-Gorman bill, said: "I look back now upon what occurred during the Wilson-Gorman bill as a nightmare, from the effects of which I have never recovered. Before the conferences ended three of the conferees had broken down under the constant strain under which we were subjected."

Congressman Hill, of Connecticut, said:

I hope never to see another downward revision of the tariff, with its consequent upheaval of our whole industrial organization and with the abominable trading and dickering which inevitably result therefrom.

Speaking of tariff acts, Senator GORE used this language:

Burke said that statesmanship is the science of circumstances.

Few there are who will deny the potency of circumstances. But few there are who will deny that facts are the best touchstone upon which to try the virtue of theory; few who will assert that taxable articles can best be determined by intuition, and the rates of duties best determined by inspiration. * * * It is not necessary to convict the old system as being the worst possible system; it is only necessary to find that the new system would be the better system. Whom has the old system satisfied? Has it satisfied the advocates of high tariff? Has it satisfied the advocates of low tariff? Has it satisfied the country? Has it insured industrial peace and commercial progress and prosperity? * * * The most elaborate and most colossal works of fiction ever produced in the United States are the tariff hearings before the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House. As works of fancy, they are unrivaled by the Rape of the Lock. As works of the imagination, they are unapproached by Paradise Lost. They have all the function of ex parte testimony on the part of interested witnesses, alternating between violent hope and violent fear. Every temptation to misstatement is present. Nearly every obligation to truth is absent, save conscience alone, and their consciences are under such perfect control.

I think this striking description of the tariff bills and their preparation will suggest river and harbor bills. These bills satisfy no one. They are predicated upon ex parte testimony and find chief support from local beneficiaries.

During the debates when the last river and harbor bill was under discussion former Senator Burton, of Ohio, was referred to as having been a warm advocate of the river and harbor bills of the past. Probably no one is as familiar with this subject as former Senator Burton, a courageous, high-minded, conscientious, and patriotic statesman. He attempted, but in vain, to reform our river and harbor policy, and to bring economies and honest administration into this important branch of our national activities.

In an article appearing in the World's Work for February, 1913, Senator Burton discussed with great freedom the evils of the existing system and the great waste and criminal extravance which have resulted. He says:

For years we have been struggling under a vicious system of river and harbor improvements. For instance, the river and harbor bill of 1910 contained items favoring 296 out of the 391 congressional districts. This bill was a masterpiece of geographical distribution and a striking tribute to the cohesive power of legislative logrolling. Even the obstacle offered by mountains of considerable size did not prevent certain portions of the country from being represented in this bill.

Now, there are two ways of framing a river and harbor bill. The popular method of drawing a bill is to make such concessions to all the different States and localities that you will have an overwhelming support for the measure. The other method, and the right one, is to select those projects which would benefit the whole country and then finish them with promptness. The first method is irresistible. It will win every time—consult the wishes of the varied localities and projects of the country and they will all join together and pass a bill.

No more truthful, and no more severe, indictment was ever presented against a legislative body. It is a deliberate charge that the interests of the people are betrayed in the river and harbor bills, with selfishness and local interests dominating and controlling in that class of legislation. Senator Burton refers to the scattering of amounts over a large number of districts so that the claimed improvements which ought to be finished within a short time are dragged out indefinitely. He states:

This policy of piecemeal appropriations encourages extravagance and the adoption of injudicious and wasteful projects merely for the purpose of spending money in the greatest possible number of districts. When you give small appropriations to a large number of items it is an invitation to every Congressman who has a harbor, a creek, a well-developed spring, to come in and ask for an appropriation in these bills. It is a very simple matter to come to Congress and secure $100,000 on a project that will cost a million or two millions. One hundred thousand is not regarded as a very large sum. It is considered that one congressional district ought to have that much recognition of the fact that it is on the map and that its Member is active here in Congress. When the $100,000 is appropriated it is very easy to come to Washington and say: "What! Will Congress, after it has committed itself to this great project, although costing a million dollars or more, drop it after $100,000 has been spent and let the money expended be buried in the sea?"

In this way I have seen the most unwarranted and extravagant enterprises undertaken, apparently not so much to improve our waterways as to put the Government's money into circulation in the various congressional districts in order to improve the chances of the different Members of Congress for reelection.

In the same article Senator Burton says:

Communities and individuals, backed by a large share of the public press, whose pages teem with demands for economy and with condemnations of Congress for extravagance, are constantly insisting that large and sometimes utterly unjustifiable appropriations be made in their own locality. A Member of Congress is told, "If you do not get this appropriation for a public building or for this river or harbor, or if you do not join in a movement for this new line of activity, you will no longer be returned to office." Of course no man in public life wishes systematically to adopt a course which will prevent his return to the office he holds, though some theorists and political scientists seem to think the proper course for a Congressman is to go straight ahead to defeat.

Further on in his article he states that—

Public buildings, river improvements, free seeds, departmental publications are being used to reelect Members to Congress. Bluntly the people are furnishing the money by which they are being delivered. The people must be aroused to an indignation against the Members who seek to promote their political fortunes at the expense of the Federal Treasury. Let Members who boast of their prowess in securing millions of dollars from Congress for their home districts realize that the public does not approve their course and will mark them for defeat. Thus the evil will be driven from the Capitol.

The Senator refers to an amusing incident during the Speakership of Mr. Samuel J. Randall, who recognized a Member, and this speech was given:

Mr. Speaker, there are six men in my district after my seat, and I must do something to raise the wind.

Of course the "wind" that he sought to raise was to get an appropriation for his district.

Senator Burton shows in this article the evil effects of the present system and mentions, as an illustration, Red River in Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas. There the Government had expended over three millions of dollars. The Senator says:

For the last year traffic over this stretch of 476 miles below Fulton Harbor, aside from the saw logs which could be floated without any improvements, was 10 tons of grain, 16 tons of provisions, 26 tons of fish, and 10 tons of ice. In all, 62 tons were carried on these 476 miles of river. The river and harbor bill of 1912 carried an appropriation of $50,000 for this stretch of the Red River. That is at the rate of $806 for every ton of merchandise or grain carried on that river the preceding year. The amount expended for the year is practically eight times as much as all the value of the merchandise and freight carried. Two years ago it was 835 tons, and now it has dropped to 62 tons.

There is a note of pessimism in the Senator's article when he says:

The most discouraging aspect of the system is that, instead of improving, it is constantly growing worse. Insistent pressure is being exerted upon Congress to enact legislation for the so-called Federal improvements of roads. Such measures would promptly equal the vicious pork-barrel features of our public building and river and harbor bills.

In an article by Mr. Walter V. Woehlke, found in the Technical World magazine for June, 1913, there is a frank criticism of our river and harbor policy. He refers to Crystal River, and says:

You will have to look long and hard to find Crystal River on the map of Florida. An appropriation in the river and harbor act, though, had little trouble in locating Crystal River. It carried only $30,000, with an annual maintenance charge of $2,000. For these amounts a 9-mile channel was built. Through it in 1911 moved 5,192 tons, four-fifths of the tonnage consisting of cedar logs carried to a pencil mill. Disregarding those logs, it cost the Nation $3 a ton in interest and maintenance to assist navigation on the Crystal River.

He proceeds:

So far it has cost $405 to pull the gritty teeth in the mouth of the Brazos River, Tex., and $25,000 is required annually to keep the mouth open for the flow of commerce. In 1911 commerce flowed to the extent of 3,063 tons. This aid to navigation on the Brazos cost the Nation more than $10 a ton, exclusive of the water freight. For $10 the railroads move a ton of pig iron from Pittsburgh to San Francisco. * * * Doboy Bar obstructs the entrance to one of the channels leading into Darien Harbor, Ga. To remove this obstruction Congress, through the Rivers and Harbors Committee, appropriated $56,000. The money was spent, a channel dredged, but the navigators declined to accept the proffered aid. The channel was never marked. No one used it. And now it's gone, shoaled up again. * * * Contentnia Creek has no existence on the latest large-scale map of North Carolina. It must be there, though, for it absorbed $14,000 for channel improvement some years ago, and has continued to absorb $1,200 annually for maintenance ever since. Sixteen tons constituted the commerce of improved and maintained Contentnia Creek in 1911.

I might say, in passing, that the river and harbor bill of 1917 carried $15,500 for Contentnia Creek and several other small creeks or springs, which are grouped together for maintenance purposes.

Mr. Woehlke proceeds:

In like manner Broadkiln River, Del., absorbed $88,000 for channel improvements on a 12-mile stretch, sweetened by a maintenance charge of $5,000 annually. The commerce of the Broadkiln will run to 10,000 tons a year. National subsidy is 7 cents per ton-mile. The average cost of moving a ton 1 mile by rail is just one-thousandth of this subsidy. * * * On Hingham Harbor, in Massachusetts, the Rivers and Harbors Committee, feeling specially flush in 1907, spent $10,000 without asking the engineers whether or not the money was needed. "Go to it! Improve Hingham Harbor! Get rid of the money! Stimulate commerce!" ordered the statesmen. Twice that amount had been expended previously. Despite the stimulants the commerce of Hingham Harbor continued to suffer from inanition, the Boston passenger boats ceased calling, a decrepit coal barge now and then was the only sign of life on the $30,000 channel.

The writer proceeds in his satirical fashion as follows:

In its virgin state the Essex River, Mass., was a purling bowlder-strewn brook with a maximum depth of full 19 inches during summer. At an expense of $30,000 the brook was made "navigable." No freight is carried on this "improved" river, says the Chief of the United States Army Engineers, but the "improvement" permits the exit of a few fishing schooners built annually on the banks. This fishing-smack home industry is dying out, adds the chief. * * * Nor is there any commerce in Larchmont Harbor, on Long Island Sound, save that a belated fishing boat occasionally spends a night in the port. But Larchmont Harbor boasts of a nice little breakwater built by Congress at an expense of $108,000. For what purpose? Maybe the members of the exclusive Larchmont Yacht Club, owning a fleet worth $2,000,000, can supply the answer. For the convenience and comfort of a wealthy club, national funds are readily available, but for the protection of a hundred thousand flooded homes, expenditures must be stinted, culled, pared, made with averted, frowning faces. * * *

It cost the Nation $190,000 to deepen a 4-mile channel in the Union River, Me. 11,000 tons of low-grade freight passed through this channel in 1911. Interest charges alone represented a subsidy of 75 cents per ton, and the traffic on the "improved" river is declining. There was money to deepen useless Union River, but there was no money to protect the 10,000 homes behind the 586 miles of utterly inadequate levee. * * *

The depth of water in the Bagaduce River, Me., must be increased to 6 feet. "This improvement is of doubtful public value," says the Chief of Engineers—but nothing is done to keep 16 feet of water out of the business streets of great cities.

In an article appearing in World's Work for August, 1910, written by Mr. Hubert Bruce Fuller, the crime of the pork barrel is discussed. He refers to the passage at the "recent" session of a bill carrying $52,000,000, and says:

A large part will be wasted, as the millions which have preceded it have been.

He quotes from Senator TILLMAN, who stated upon the floor of the Senate:

The whole scheme of river improvement is a humbug and a steal.

Senators will recall that in 1901 Senator Carter, of Montana, filibustered one of these bills to its defeat. In April, 1910, Senator Burton, of Ohio, in a strong and vitriolic speech, attacked the present system and the bill under consideration. He analyzed it, speaking two days. No one attempted to answer him or to defend the bill or the system, but the power of coercion was strong, and the bill was promptly passed, notwithstanding the powerful appeal of Senator Burton. Mr. Fuller in his article says:

The Board of Army Engineers is supposed to pass upon the engineering practicability of the "improvements" proposed. But in the river and harbor bill of the current year numerous projects have been incorporated in direct violation of the findings of the Army engineers, involving an aggregate appropriation of more than $1,100,000.

An appropriation of $30,000 is included for the improvement of Great Salt Pond, a so-called harbor of refuge in Rhode Island. The Federal Government to date has expended $190,000 on this project. All this has been done despite an adverse recommendation, not alone by the corps of engineers, but also by the State officials of Rhode Island, who said in their report of 1904: "This committee is convinced that the public interests have not been subserved by the expenditure of money at Great Salt Pond * * * and that further expenditure of money on this enterprise would be wasteful. The committee was unanimously of the opinion that the expenditure of this sum of money, as well as all other money that has been appropriated and expended for the construction of an inner harbor at Great Salt Pond, could not possibly be applied to such purpose with any beneficial result."

Scarcely a mile distant there is another harbor of refuge, upon which the Government has expended more than half a million dollars.

The original item appropriating $200,000 for improving the Sabine-Neches Canal in Texas by increasing the depth to 24 feet and the botton width to 80 feet was changed in conference to an authorization of a resurvey. This in spite of the fact that a survey just completed condemned the project. The purpose of this improvement is to make seaports of the towns of Beaumont and Orange, located, respectively, on the Neches and Sabine Rivers. The entire project contemplates a total expenditure of $753,000. The "improvement" involved is at once so extravagant and so ridiculous as to tax human credulity.

Probably the most indefensible item of the bill is that which contemplates the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the so-called Lakes-to-the-Gulf Waterway. It does not become immediately available, but it is the opening wedge for the long-agitated 14-foot waterway from Chicago by way of St. Louis and the Mississippi River to the Gulf of Mexico. Elaborate and comprehensive surveys have been made of this project, whose cost has been estimated at $150,000,000. The entire proposition was condemned, and yet the bill contains the appropriation. * * *

From a variety of reasons, one of the most interesting rivers for which an appropriation has been authorized is the Youghiogheny in Pennsylvania. This is a branch of the Monongahela River, which is in turn a branch of the Ohio.

Whatever the avowed reason for this project may be, the real purpose is the improvement of 1,125 acres of land which would thus be reclaimed for manufacturing purposes. In 1907 the engineers reported adversely upon the project. Two years later, however, the improvement of a section of the river up to West Newton, a distance of 18 miles from the mouth, was recommended, at an estimated cost of $1,050,000. The improvement contemplates the building of three locks and dams costing $350,000 each. The river and harbor bill of 1910 appropriates $100,000 for this purpose. The project in itself should never be undertaken. It is not justifiable; it is a local interest, an improvement of a branch of a branch. But the Congressman from that district is the Hon. John Dalzell, one of the ruling trio of the House of Representatives. The whole proposition smacks of "logrolling" and the pork barrel in its most iniquitous form. * * *

A good illustration is the condition of traffic on the Tennessee River near Chattanooga, where the Muscle Shoals Canal has been built at a cost of $3,191,726. More than $1,100,000 has been expended for repairs and maintenance since completion. In the year 1908, $53,443 was expended for this purpose. The amount of freight of all classes carried through this canal in 1908 was 12,539 tons. It fluctuates from year to year, but that is a fair average. Thus, based simply upon the amount expended for maintenance and repairs for the year 1908—the last for which figures are available—the cost to the people of the United States was $4.26 for every ton of freight carried. And if we compute interest at 3 per cent on the original cost of the improvement a further sum of $7.65 per ton must be added, making a total of $11.91 for every ton of freight passing through this canal. * * *

It cost $38,218.50 to maintain a lock and dam in the Wabash River at Grand Rapids, Ill. and Ind., in 1908. The total traffic through this lock for the same year was 5,121 tons, of which more than 4,440 tons were timber and lumber. Lumber and timber do not require canalization for their transportation, since they can best be carried by rafts floated or poled downstream. A balance, then, of 680 tons remains, of corn, shells, and miscellaneous freight. The mere cost of maintaining this lock, therefore, was approximately $7.46 per ton for all classes, including lumber in its various forms, and $56 for every ton of freight carried through it, excluding lumber.

The cost to June 30, 1909, of the improvement undertaken by the General Government on the Big Sandy River and its forks—the Tug and the Levisa—including maintenance, has been $1,399,569. The commercial statistics for the calendar year ending December 31, 1909, on these streams are as follows:

	Tons.
Timber and lumber	75,199
Railroad ties	14,500
Live stock and poultry	171
Grain	82
Produce	35
Coal, bituminous	579
General merchandise	1,143
Number of passengers	5,046

Exclusive of timber, such as lumber and crossties, the total traffic amounted to 2,010 tons. Computed on a basis of 3 per cent on the investment, it cost the Government $20 for each ton of this freight transported. It should be added that the lumber in this district will soon be entirely exhausted, and thus no longer an object of transportation.

On the Kentucky River the Government has built 11 locks and dams, at a cost of $3,094,000 for construction and $1,772,000 for maintenance, making a total of about $4,900,000. In spite of the enormous amount expended for improving the river, traffic has decreased. In 1889, with but 5 locks and dams, the total tonnage was 435,595 tons, while in 1909, after the completion of 11 locks and dams, it amounted to but 422,854 tons, of which 288,321 tons were made up of lumber and logs. The expenditure for maintenance alone for this year brings the cost to the Government something in excess of $1 per ton. * * *

The Green River, in Kentucky, affords an excellent example of pitiful traffic conditions. Six locks and dams have been built on this stream and three more are urged by the optimistic citizens of the locality. The statistics of commerce passing Lock No. 6 on this river serve as an index of general conditions on the entire stream.

There were about 2,000 tons, yet in the face of these returns the Government was urged to spend approximately $750,000 for three more locks and dams.

On the upper section of the Coosa River, in Alabama, a project was adopted in 1890 and modified in 1892, providing for the construction of 23 locks and dams, at a total cost of $5,106,422. Up to June 30, 1909, $401,372 had been expended, with only 4 per cent of the project completed. I quote from the report of the Army Engineer Corps for 1909:

"On account of the numerous rapids this part of the river has never been navigable. As yet no benefit has been derived from this improvement, and its value is entirely dependent on the completion of the entire system. Amount (estimated) required for the completion of the existing project is $6,059,913."

The Red River has been a petted child of Congress, and speaking of this stream Mr. Fuller says:

The Government first undertook its improvement in 1828. Since that time $2,548,377 has been expended on this section of the river. In 1908, $78,203 was expended for maintenance and improvement. Yet the traffic on this stretch of 500 miles for 1908 was almost negligible. Exclusive of saw logs, the commerce was made up of 6 tons of cotton; 300 tons of cotton seed; hides and skins, 0.05 of a ton; provisions, 6 tons; grain, 18 tons; miscellaneous, 511 tons; a grand total of 841 tons. Thus it seems that the Government expended $93 for each ton of freight carried on this section of the river, exclusive of logs and timber. * * *

The Arkansas River, passing through Oklahoma and Arkansas, and approximately 1,000 miles in length, has received the bounty of Congress to the extent of $2,476,880. Yet in the last year its total commerce was 92,455 tons. * * *

The Mississippi River, famed in history and tradition, is a notable object lesson for the student of American waterways. On the entire river between St Paul and New Orleans the Government has expended more than $90,000,000. On the stretch between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio, approximately 205 miles—on which is located the city of St. Louis—$12,000,000 has been spent. And yet the traffic on this section of the river has been constantly decreasing. In 1880 fourteen times as much river freight was received and shipped at St. Louis as in 1909. In 1909 it amounted to but 374,093 tons. * * *

The United States has spent more on this stretch of 205 miles of the Mississippi than the central Government of Germany has expended for improving the Rhine from Strasburg to the frontier of Holland, a distance of 355 miles. Yet on this section of the Rhine the total tonnage in 1908 was approximately 40,000,000 tons, as against less than 375,000 tons on the Mississippi. * * *

The United States has spent $339,000,000 in the last 15 years upon its rivers and harbors, and during this time the traffic on the rivers has steadily declined. * * *

Mr. President, I find that I shall have to pretermit any further discussion of this measure, as I am compelled to leave the city in half an hour to visit an adjoining State to speak in behalf of the Red Cross organization. I have considerable material here that I desired to place before the Senate, but time prevents me from doing so. I hope the time is not far distant when we can work out some reforms in the plan of dealing with rivers and harbors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in the Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are so few Senators present that I think it wise to have a quorum before any further consideration is given to amendments. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will not the Senator withhold that suggestion until the bill is reported to the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. There may be some Senator who desires to offer an amendment while the bill is in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Henderson	New	Smoot
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Nugent	Sterling
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Tillman
Fletcher	Kenyon	Page	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Phelan	Underwood
Gronna	Lodge	Poindexter	Vardaman
Guion	McCumber	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Hardwick	McNary	Sheppard	Willfley

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. KIRBY, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. SWANSON answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names, not a quorum.

Mr. SIMMONS entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. CULBERSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, when this bill was introduced in the House of Representatives, I think on behalf of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, it contained section 5, a different section from the section 5 which is now in the bill. It authorized the Secretary of War, within such limitations as he might prescribe, to take proceedings to stop the pollution of navigable streams. I want to call attention to it and hope the chairman of the committee will not object to having it reinserted in the bill. It was stricken out on the motion of some Members representing the committee of the House after the bill was taken up on the floor. That section provides:

> That, within limits to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, it shall not be lawful to throw, discharge, or deposit, or cause, suffer, or procure to be thrown, discharged, or deposited from any source whatever any free acid or acid waste in any form, either directly or indirectly, into any navigable water of the United States or into any tributary of any navigable water; and every person and every corporation that shall violate, or that shall knowingly aid, abet, authorize, or instigate a violation of the foregoing provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,500 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) for not less than 30 days nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That this section may be enforced as provided in section 17 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, the provisions whereof are hereby made applicable thereto.

I call attention to the fact that, as written into the bill when it was introduced, the extent and condition upon which the Secretary of War should prohibit the pollution of navigable waters by the discharge of acids into them was left to some extent in the discretion of the Secretary of War, so that he would have authority under this provision to consider the circumstances and conditions of the manufacturing plants and prescribe the limits within which the discharge of acids into the waters could be prohibited so as not to work an unreasonable injury upon an industry. That provision was based upon a letter from the office of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is getting late, and it is Saturday afternoon. If it is agreeable to the Senator to have this matter go over, I would be glad to move a recess until 12 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was in hopes that there would be no difficulty about this provision. I was going to call attention to the letter of the Chief of Engineers, in which he points out the enormous destruction of property.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to the Senator proceeding.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It will take only a moment. Perhaps the Senator from Florida will be willing to have the matter reinserted in the bill as it was before and be given opportunity to consider it in conference, after further conference with the War Department.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am disposed rather to look into it somewhat before I would feel prepared to accept it. My information is that it was recommended by the Chief of Engineers, and the bill was reported to the House with that section 5 in it, and a great storm was raised throughout the country, and coal mines and paper mills and other manufacturing plants on the rivers and waterways became so disturbed about it that the committee concluded to withdraw that provision. So it went out by reason of their finding that it would create great disturbance and opposition and that it was really not in the public interest just at this time.

As a general thing I think undoubtedly the provision is a sound one, but in this emergency now, when we are putting up plants where we never had them before, and using material we were never accustomed to use, it was thought it would be a mistake to include that section in the bill.

That is my information, and I would rather look into it a little before acting upon it, if it is agreeable to the Senator. At any rate, if the Senator presses it, I am not in a position to accept it. As far as I am concerned, I would have to leave it to a vote, and I feel like I would have to vote against it. Still I think that is the situation which developed after the bill came into the House.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in view of that attitude on the part of the Senator, I feel compelled to present the matter a little more fully. I will yield in just a moment, if the Senator desires to make the motion he referred to, and take it up again when the consideration of the bill is resumed, with this statement, that in so far as the emergency industries to which the Senator refers are now in process of establishment so long as the regulation is in the hands of the War Department there is every guaranty that no war industry will be interfered with in any way at all. So far as my own vote and position in the matter are concerned, the very fact the Senator cites, that when a proposition that is, as he says, generally recognized as a sound one, for reasons that are so well pointed out in this letter from the Chief of Engineers—in which he not only speaks of the destruction of beauty and of the fisheries in the streams, but points out that in the one locality of Pittsburgh alone the acids that are dumped into the water there, by the effect upon the boilers of engines which use the water, lessening the life of a boiler one-half of its normal life, eating away the ironwork of the locks in the canals and other improvements that have been placed in the rivers for the purpose of making them navigable, costs the Government $75,000 a year—it seems to me when you say you will not prohibit this because some interest comes into Congress and overwhelms the committee, after the committee has introduced the measure upon a deliberate recommendation of the War Department, and they give way to these interests and withdraw a sound proposition—that is the very reason why I want to insist upon Congress freeing itself of such an influence and acting upon the merits of the question.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will allow me, I do not like to be put in that position, and it was not the one I sought to refer to. It is not justified. What I mean to say is that the manufacturing plants are largely engaged in Government work. I understand it is not a question of private interests; it is a question of interfering with the manufacture of products that are used really as war material. It is only that sort of interest that we ought to take cognizance of in connection with it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to say, before concluding, that in order to limit the effect of this provision I see no reason for not confining it to those waters that are above tidewater, because engines there get their waters for their boilers, and that is where the locks and dams are in the rivers, and the discharge of waste into tidal waters is not apt to do any harm. At the same time there are a number of factories on tidewaters, and the objection of one such industry, located on tidal water, asking that tidal waters be excepted from the provisions of the bill, has just been called to my attention. I see no reason for refusing to except tidal waters from the provision.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then the amendment would be somewhat different from the language contained in the original bill. Has the Senator prepared an amendment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have prepared it; I have it here. It is the same as the provision contained in the original bill, with the insertion of the words "above tidewater."

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would be very glad to do that. I ask that the amendment I now propose be printed in the RECORD. Then I will yield to the Senator from Florida to make the motion he has referred to, but I should like to ask the Senator if he will not consider this proposition and, if necessary, consult with the War Department about it?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will be very glad to do that, and it is possible I shall make no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington desire to offer it as an amendment and have it printed and lie on the table, in addition to being printed in the RECORD?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will do that. I should like to have it printed in the RECORD as well as separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER's amendment is as follows:

Insert as an additional section:

"SEC. 5. That, within limits to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, it shall not be lawful to throw, discharge, or deposit, or cause, suffer, or procure to be thrown, discharged, or deposited from any source whatever any free acid or acid waste in any form, either directly or indirectly, into any navigable water of the United States or into any tributary of any navigable water above tide water; and every person and every corporation that shall violate or that shall knowingly aid, abet, authorize, or instigate a violation of the foregoing provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,500 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) for not less than 30 days nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That this section may be enforced as provided in section 17 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, the provisions whereof are hereby made applicable thereto."

RECESS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., Saturday, May 18, 1918) the Senate took a recess until Monday, May 20, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 18, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, from whom cometh all wisdom, strength, and courage, imbue us plenteously with these gifts; that in the present crisis we may be able to adjust ourselves as individuals and as a Nation to the new conditions thrust upon us and meet with becoming grace and patriotic zeal every sacrifice necessary to meet the circumstances.

The task is great, but Thou hast made us strong and powerful and laid upon us great responsibilities.

Hear us and thus bless us with the Spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS, TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3935 for consideration, and move its passage. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is identical with one before the House Committee on the Territories, which has been considered and reported favorably to this House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit there?

Mr. HOUSTON. Furthermore, I want to state that the Committee on the Territories has instructed the chairman of that committee to call up this bill for its consideration.

OIL AND GAS LEASING BILL.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Tennessee will yield to me a moment to make a unanimous-consent request, I had arranged with the majority leader [Mr. KITCHIN] to ask unanimous consent for a matter which will not take up any time at all.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following consideration of the bill now being considered in the House from the Commitee on Agriculture that the bill S. 2812, or rather the substitute for it, be taken up for consideration, and in so far as it does not interfere with the military appropriation bill, conference reports——

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the oil and gas leasing bill?

Mr. FERRIS. It is the oil and gas leasing bill, which has twice passed the House.

The SPEAKER. What was the gentleman's request in reference to the military appropriation bill and conference reports?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Let the bill not interfere with appropriation bills, conference reports, and matters on the Speaker's table.

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly; that is all right.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is what is known as the gas leasing bill?

Mr. FERRIS. That has twice passed the House during the last Congress and was killed in the Senate, but the Senate finally passed a bill, and there is a very great demand for it in the West.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that after the disposition of the bill which was considered yesterday afternoon that the bill S. 2812 shall be in order, not to interfere with conference reports, appropriation bills, or ordinary business on the Speaker's desk. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand the gentleman's request also to preclude business on Monday, unanimous-consent day, and on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think we ought to do that; no.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's request is broad enough to include that.

Mr. FERRIS. I would make that exception. This is an urgent matter.

The SPEAKER. That the business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, suspension of the rules, and so forth, and Calendar Wednesday business, shall not be interfered with.

Mr. WINGO. That would not prevent a motion to suspend the rules on Monday?

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair was stating, that it will not interfere with business on Monday's calendar or Wednesday.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I notice the committee has reported a substitute for the Senate bill. I suppose the gentleman's request is to consider the House substitute in lieu of the Senate bill and that the substitute be considered as an original House bill, section by section?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; section by section as an original bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. And not as an entire substitute?

Mr. FERRIS. No; section by section as if it were an original bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to know of the gentleman from Oklahoma if he means by this request he has made that when this bill is made in order, if it is, that it is going to be a continuing order?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; I would like that, as this is a great emergency bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not want any quibbling about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have it distinctly understood also that the substitute be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union as if it were an original House bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly; I asked that that be done, and think it should be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the House the bill S. 3935.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 7634. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes,' approved September 1, 1916," so as to change the time of holding courts in the western district of South Carolina; and

S. 3469. An act to amend the act of September 1, 1916, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1915, so as to provide for terms of the district court to be held at Anderson, S. C.," so as to change the time of holding courts in the western district of South Carolina.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 11628. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia," approved September 25, 1914.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS, TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3935) to prohibit the sale, manufacture, and importation of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii during the period of the war, except as hereinafter provided.

Be it enacted, etc., That 90 days after the passage of this act, during the period of the war and thereafter, except as herein provided, it shall be unlawful in the Territory of Hawaii to sell, give away, manufacture, transport, import, or export intoxicating liquors, except for mechanical, scientific, sacramental, or medicinal purposes, for which purposes the sale, gift, transport, import, and export of the same shall be under such rules and regulations as the Governor of the Terrritory may prescribe, and any person violating the provisions hereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $500 or imprisoned for a period of not longer than one year, or both: Provided, That at any general election of the Territory of Hawaii, held within two years after the conclusion of peace, the repeal of this act may, upon petition of not less than 20 per cent of the qualified electors of said Territory at the last preceding general election, be submitted to a vote of the qualified electors of said Territory, and if a majority of all the qualified electors thereof voting upon such question shall vote to repeal this act, it shall thereafter not be in force and effect; otherwise it shall be in full force and effect.

SEC. 2. That the said petition shall be addressed to and filed with the Secretary of the Territory at least two months before the election at which the question is to be voted upon, and the person obtaining any signature to such petition shall make affidavit that he witnessed the signing of the same and believes the address of each petitioner affixed to his name is the true address of such petitioner. Such election shall be conducted under the laws of the Territory provided for general elections.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; I will yield the gentleman some time for debate.

Mr. STAFFORD. I desire it; not to exceed 10 minutes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will agree to yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee yields the gentleman from Wisconsin five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman ought to be a little more liberal than that. This bill has never been considered by the House, and now he is asking this extraordinary procedure to have it adopted with hardly any debate at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. No; I am not asking anything of the kind.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe——

Mr. HOUSTON. Before the gentleman makes a statement, let me answer the statement and request of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. DYER. I am going to make this statement, Mr. Speaker, that as the membership generally does not know that this matter is coming up this morning, and I think they should know and be here, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. There is no quorum present. The gentleman from Tennessee moves a call of the House.

The call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. How much time does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]?

Mr. HOUSTON. I have stated that I would yield to him five minutes. I might be able to yield more. I do not know how much yet.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee whether he intends to yield more liberal time than that to those who are opposed to this bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. I should be willing to yield some time to the opponents of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much time is the gentleman willing to yield to those opposed to this bill? It has never been considered by this House. Let us see if we can not get some understanding.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am very anxious to get through with this measure and get it out of the way of the Agricultural bill. I have promised them to be as speedy as I can as to action on this bill. I do not want to take up more time than necessary, but I am willing to divide the time between those who are for the bill and those who are against it. I hope to get through with it in less than an hour.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much time is the gentleman willing to yield to those in opposition to the bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. I am trying to make a fair disposition of the time. I can not tell how much time we are going to spend in debate. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin 5 minutes, and perhaps yield to him 10.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman willing to yield 20 minutes to those opposed to this bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. If the discussion can be confined to 40 minutes, I will do that. I am willing to yield 20 minutes to those opposed to the bill. I am going to make a statement in my time, and I desire to retain control of the time, and will yield to the different Members of the House for the purposes of debate only, and before my time is out I will move the previous question.

Mr. GILLETT. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] if he intends to allow any amendments to be offered?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not, if I can help it.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the liberal dry policy of those who are in favor of prohibition.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is similar to the tactics followed by some Members who wanted to take advantage of a technicality to prevent the passage of this meritorious measure yesterday. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. All this talk on both sides is out of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a measure introduced by the Delegate from Hawaii in response to an almost universal demand of the people of that Territory. There are petitions that have been presented to the House Committee on the Territories and to the Senate Committee on Territories from most of the societies, commercial clubs, and different organizations throughout the island. The banks have signed petitions and sent them here. I believe that 190 business organizations have submitted petitions requesting the passage of this bill. In fact Mr. Speaker, after considerable consideration of this measure in the islands where they have been agitating the question of prohibition for some time in different forms, they have harmonized their views, and this measure has received no opposition, so far as I am informed. There is no opposition from the Territory of Hawaii that has been voiced against this measure. The President of the United States, exercising the authority given him by law passed by Congress, by Executive order has prohibited the sale of whisky within the island of Oahu. The license commissioners of the counties of Maui and Kauai have refused to license the sale of liquor in those counties. This leaves only the one county of Hawaii, a large county, in which liquor can be sold under license. Now, the people of that island are complaining, and complaining seriously, at the condition this leaves them in. It is the only island in which liquor legally is sold. They say they have become the dumping ground for liquor transported there. It makes a traffic that is most demoralizing and ruinous to the morals and welfare of the people of that island, as well as to all of the other islands. Now, this bill is presented to relieve an evil that is so strong and so pressing that all of the organizations of the Territory have asked for its passage, and the mayor of the town of Honolulu and many others have asked the President of the United States that he by Executive order prevent the sale of liquor. That he has done in that island. Before that there was a demoralization there that was absolutely ruinous to the morale and the spirit of the American soldiers stationed on that island.

Ten thousand and more were stationed there. They were taking advantage of a bootlegging, wildcatting practice that was in vogue there. They could not buy it themselves, being in uniform, but by appealing to this method of evading the law there was an immense amount of drunkenness, so much so that the officer in command of the post there notified the mayor of Honolulu that if he did not stop the sale of liquor to be conveyed to these soldiers no soldier would be allowed to enter the confines of that city. All these conditions that I have described induced that order.

Now, the question is, Shall we let these other counties go on and sell liquor? Shall we let the one county that is now manufacturing liquor continue it? I want to emphasize that point. In the county of Hawaii, the largest island of the group, they are now manufacturing whisky for sale.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a war measure. One object of this bill is to conserve foodstuffs and prevent their being manufactured into liquor and demoralize not only the soldiers in the Army but people of that Territory.

Right on that point I want to say that there is no people on earth that need prohibition more than the people of the Territory of Hawaii, and when I say that I do not mean to reflect upon those people. They are a generous, a social, an amiable, and a patriotic people. They have such a temperament that they are easily led into conviviality, easily led into dissipation; their morals are easily ruined on account of the amiable, childlike disposition, in some ways, of those people there. Now, no country needs prohibition so much as these people. And bear in mind, gentlemen of this House, that when Hawaii had control of her own affairs, when they had their government, their kingdom, their monarchy, they did all in their power to prevent the sale and manufacture of whisky. It was put under ban. It was made unlawful to have it in any form or to manufacture it there. But after they had become attached to the United States, with our civilization and the protection of the American flag, we carried with it the right to sell whisky, and that right has done more to demoralize those people than any other influence in the world. A brave, a happy, a generous, and amiable people, they have been almost ruined. It is claimed by those people there that they have almost destroyed the native race by furnishing and putting in their reach the liquor that they can get.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. I am very much interested in the references the gentleman is making as to those people. If those conditions are true—and I have no doubt they are and not exaggerated by the gentleman—I would like to ask him what is the idea of giving these people an opportunity of repealing this legislation within two years? Why experiment with this problem in that Territory? Why not make it permanent law, as we have in the District?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, in answer to that question, that there have been measures introduced to establish absolute prohibition in Hawaii. I would vote for a measure of that kind. I believe it would be a good thing for those people. But this is a bill introduced by the Delegate from that Territory, representing a compromise vote as between all of the parties, and that is the reason why it has taken preference over the bill for absolute prohibition. The feature that the gentleman alluded to, to give them a chance to repeal it, was put in out of consideration of this claim that so many men make in favor of local option. It puts that feature into the bill, and by having that feature in it it harmonizes all opposing elements there. They all agree to it, and it was thought it would make it more easy to pass the measure.

Now, bear in mind, it gives two years in which to experiment with prohibition. I am such a believer in prohibition, such a believer in the good results that come from it, judging from what I have seen in my own State and elsewhere, that I believe with two years' education, two years' experience in prohibition, those people will never go back from it or go to the licensing of liquor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Assuming, as may be very likely, that the constitutional amendment will be ratified in two years, would that be operative in the Territory of Hawaii—the prohibition amendment that is now being acted upon by the legislatures of the various States? If that should be ratified by the requisite number of States, would it not be effective in the Territory of Hawaii?

Mr. HOUSTON. I would not undertake offhand to give a legal opinion on that proposition. As I remember the terms of the resolution, it was confined to the United States; but I take it that it might cover all the Territories, although I am not sure that it will go beyond continental United States.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. The Hawaiian Islands are a regularly organized Territory of the United States, are they not?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; they are a regularly organized Territory of the United States.

Mr. PLATT. I have no doubt but that they would be included.

Mr. HOUSTON. That may be; but that is not relevant to this discussion. We may revert to that feature after the war is over.

This is a war measure, for the purpose of conserving foodstuffs for making bread and supplying food for the support of our armies that are to win this war. We ought to save in every instance. We ought to save in every way. Those people are patriotic. They want to serve this country and to help win this war, and they will help to win this war, and we do not want any practice or system left in operation that will destroy and take away valuable material for the supplying of food to our soldiers.

After the war is over, within two years, if one-fifth of the qualified voters should so petition, they can have a vote to determine whether or not this law will be in force and effect.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], for debate only.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, for the first time in the history of the United States Congress is attempting to impose its will upon an integral Territory, the Territory of Hawaii, far removed, on a local question without the people having any determination as to its going into effect.

This is unlike the bill relating to prohibition in Alaska, which had my support, because there the legislature had submitted the question of prohibition to the vote of the people, and they had indorsed it by a large majority. It is my fundamental belief in legislation affecting local questions, that when a community—as Alaska did, when its voters reflected the will of its people that they wished to have prohibition—it is the duty of Congress to carry out their will.

But not so here. You are in effect applying a principle that in any State, in any Territory, Congress should impose prohibition upon a county, or on a State or Territory, regardless of the wishes of that county or State or Territory. But the gentleman from Tennessee tries to excuse this outrageous policy against local self-government by saying that after it has been enforced during the war period, within two years following, that there may be a referendum.

If the gentleman were sincere in his position he would permit an amendment, so that any time after the enactment of this bill into law the people of the Territory of Hawaii could at any general election move its repeal. It is the purpose of those who are in opposition to this bill to ask the privilege of moving to strike out in lines 3 and 4, on page 2, the words "within two years after the conclusion of peace," so that the people of Hawaii, who are just as well qualified to pass upon this question as were the people of Alaska or the people of any other Territory, may have the privilege at any time after this law takes effect, under the provisions of this section, to say whether they wish to have the law continued or not. Are you in favor of imposing upon these people, far distant from this city—5,000 miles away—a law that they may not wish? There are no troops on the island of Hawaii. That is the largest island of the group.

I am surprised indeed that the gentleman advocating this bill says that the manufacture of strong liquors is continuing there, in spite of the law of this country which forbids the manufacture of liquors at the present time in any part of continental United States or any of its possessions.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to state that I get information from the islands that they are manufacturing liquor in the county of Hawaii at the present time. Whether they have a license to do it or not I can not say, but they are manufacturing it there, and we want to stop it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then they are manufacturing it against the mandate of Congress, passed August 10 last, which forbids the use of any grain for the manufacture of distilled liquors after that date. But in these parlous times, when we hear so much of self-determination, we have a bill sponsored by the Democrats, whose faith was once in local self-government, who come here and try to impose their will upon a people far away, when those people may be opposed to it. I would be the last one in this House, and my record justifies the statement, because of my vote on the Alaska liquor bill and other local-option questions, to oppose granting them prohibition if the people had so expressed themselves in their Territorial legislature or by popular vote. But we have no such action on their part.

The gentleman tries to magnify, as all dry orators do, the conditions prevailing in the Hawaiian Islands. Three years ago it was my privilege to visit those islands in company with a congressional party. I could not see there any wild outlawry or any excess in the use of liquor as far as the natives or the Americans or the people of other nationalities there were concerned. We have had no petition from the legislature of the Territory. True, I have received petitions, as you all have, from the advocates of prohibition, asking to have the mandate of Congress imposed against perhaps the local will of the people of Hawaii, but there is nothing in the conditions prevailing there that justifies that action. Now in these days when the country is responding to the idea of the self-determination of the people in their government, you are enacting a law which does not permit them to express themselves, but saying, "We will force this down your throats because perchance the dry vote at home is stronger than the wet vote."

There is a change going on in this country on the question of prohibition. There is a strong sentiment throughout the country against the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors. There is just as strong a sentiment in favor of the continued use of maltous liquors and light wines. What is the condition here in the District of Columbia, where you have imposed prohibition? Go to the laboring classes and inquire. They say, "It is wrong, almost a crime, to force them to have brought into this District strong liquor, and not be able to get the maltous beverages." True, you can get the substitutes; you can get the near beer. As was expressed by a vaudeville artist at Keith's Theater this week, "It looks the same and tastes the same, but it has not got the authority." What the laboring men of this country want is these mild beverages in place of the strong liquors that eat away the vitals. In Michigan, for instance, they are going to submit that question to a vote of the people.

Mr. CRAMTON. And they are going to beat it, too.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman is dry and always dry. The question whether they are going to allow the sale of the milder beverages is to be submitted to the people of the State of Michigan, which went dry on May 1 of this year.

But I bottom my opposition to this bill fundamentally on governmental principles. How can you justify the imposing of our will, without any request from any territorial representatives, on the people of that far-off country? Are we to do the same thing with the Philippines? Are we to legislate always on local questions here, without knowledge of conditions, upon the request of some people here and not upon the request of the people who are affected?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman has spoken about the District of Columbia. I want to ask the gentleman whether he would favor making the Sheppard law applicable to the District and shut out all liquor from the District, and make it really bone dry, and have really efficient prohibition? Does the gentleman favor that?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I do not wish to be a hypocrite, like some of these dry advocates here, who take a position in some places in strong advocacy of prohibition and then use liquor in their homes and otherwheres.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman advocate the application of the Sheppard law to the District?

Mr. STAFFORD. I would prefer to have a liberal law that would not drive men over to Baltimore, where they are obliged to get the strong, devitalizing liquors; but would have it so that they could take their mild drinks here which are not injurious to man unless drunk to excess, but really advance his health when used moderately.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I always have to yield to the gentleman from California when the question of prohibition is up.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman said something about the possibility of the State of Michigan submitting a proposition to permit the sale of light drinks.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not the possibility. They have actually passed a law submitting the question to the people.

Mr. RANDALL. Never mind that; but is the gentleman aware that the States of Oregon and Washington, which adopted prohibition, afterwards submitted proposals to permit the sale of lighter drinks, and that proposition was defeated in each State by a majority three times as great as that by which the original amendment was adopted?

Mr. STAFFORD. I was not aware of that fact. Perhaps there may be a change of sentiment going on in those States, too.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to another dry advocate, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if it is not a fact that the representative of the people of this island, speaking for them, has come and asked Congress to pass this law?

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no petition from the Territory of Hawaii, or the people of Hawaii, which reflects the views of that island as warrant for the passage of this measure. The Delegate from Hawaii has no more superior claims to impose his will on the people of Hawaii than the gentleman from Ohio has the right to impose his will as to prohibition in the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not think I can yield any further.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman said he would yield 20 minutes in opposition, and I do not believe the other 10 minutes are going to be used in opposition.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I will yield more time to the gentleman from Wisconsin, but not now. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] five minutes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by the Delegate from Hawaii, he, presumably, knowing what the people of the Territory desire. The bill provides for prohibition during the war and a period of two years thereafter, during which time, after the close of the war, if the Territory desires it and a certain per cent of the legal voters petition for it, they may submit to the legal voters of that Territory the question as to whether the law shall continue and be permanent or whether it shall be ipso facto repealed. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects to that provision of the bill, and I think inadvertently makes a confession which men representing the views that he holds upon the question of prohibition do not intentionally, very often at least, make. Antiprohibitionists usually say that prohibition will prove to be such a miserable failure that the people will be disgusted with it. The gentleman from Wisconsin undoubtedly does not believe that and is therefore afraid to give it a trial. If prohibition is given a trial in the Territory and that experience proves unsatisfactory, undoubtedly the people of the Territory would vote to repeal it as they would have a right to do under the terms of this bill. If on the other hand it proves satisfactory, as we believe that it will, it will remain the permanent law of the islands.

As the chairman of the committee said a while ago, this optional provision was put in out of deference to those who are opposed to prohibition in the Territory of Hawaii. Let prohibition be tried out on its merits.

But, gentlemen, let me call attention to one or two things in connection with this bill. A petition was presented to us in which this statement was made:

The purpose of the organization is—

"To protect our own people from everything that is disastrous to their life and general welfare and to promote the best traditions and principles of our forefathers."

The petitioners declare—

"that experience and facts have shown and proven that alcoholic drinks are an evil and menace to the physical and moral and spiritual welfare of the Hawaiians as well as the other races in the Territory and especially of the fighting men of our country."

And then the grand jury of that Territory submits an observation on this very proposition. Here is what the grand jury said:

Liquor conditions in Honolulu are growing worse. Vice is widespread. The social evil is rampant. Bootleggers and speak-easies flourish. Soldiers and sailors are the principal victims.

That is the statement made by the grand jury, composed of the citizens of Hawaii.

Brig. Gen. Fred S. Strong, formerly in command of the United States Army in Hawaii, said:

The saloon is responsible for 90 per cent of all the pilikia (trouble) we have with our enlisted men, while 5 per cent in addition is indirectly traceable to the same cause.

Here is the character of the nationality of the different people who have petitioned for the passage of this measure:

Hawaiians	1,825
Anglo-Saxons	719
Japanese	394
Chinese	210
Filipinos	226
Portuguese	184
Hawaiian Chinese	166
Koreans	125
Total	4,187

If it is true that it is wrong to sell liquor to the soldiers in the Army, and I believe that it is, then this bill ought to pass because it is known that we have a considerable number of soldiers upon the island in which Honolulu is situated. The other islands are closely situated around this particular island.

The presidential or Executive order which was recently issued prohibited the sale of liquor to soldiers within a certain limit of the camp over there but would not apply to other counties in the Territory.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean to say that the other islands are near Hawaii?

Mr. HAMLIN. Not far away.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman call five hours by steamer very near?

Mr. HAMLIN. It is not long when you can get liquor by making the trip. [Laughter.] Distance and time are eliminated when you can get liquor. As long as it is permitted to be sold in one of these islands it is impossible to prevent it from being sold illicitly to soldiers in the Army. While I am for prohibition always, and on all occasions, I am unalterably in favor of it in time of war. It seems to me that nothing can be conceived of as a reason for selling liquor to soldiers engaged in the business of prosecuting this war, and this bill should pass.

Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER].

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I recognize that anything I may say will have very little influence upon the vote of this House upon this measure, but I shall oppose its passage. This is as big a fake measure as was ever introduced here, backed up as it is by false pretense under the guise of a war measure, together with the power and influence of the prohibition movement and forces in this House. I suppose, of course, it is going to pass, and I have not any doubt about it; but it is an imposition upon the business interests and many of the best people of the islands. There is no war measure connected with it, the war is only a pretense. The only island in the Hawaiian group that has any soldiers upon it is the island of Oahu, where the city of Honolulu is located, and under a presidential proclamation the island of Oahu is dry. There is no chance for the soldier to get a drink in the Hawaiian Islands, and we now have a law that prohibits the sale of liquor to a soldier in uniform, and it applies to the islands; and so under the pretense of this being a war measure they want you to vote the islands dry.

What are the facts? The Territory of Hawaii has a legislature of its own, and it has never taken any action with reference to this matter. In the Territory of Alaska the people demanded a prohibition law. Have the people or the legislature of Hawaii ever asked this House for any such measure? No; they have not. They have an intelligent legislature, and they have a new governor who knows the conditions upon the islands better than anyone in this House, and I want to congratulate the people of Hawaii upon his selection. Before we try to crowd down the throats of an innocent people a measure like this, we ought to have some word from them. This is simply a prohibition measure backed up by the prohibition forces uncalled for by the people of Hawaii.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the new governor of Hawaii favor prohibition?

Mr. GALLAGHER. I do not know whether he does or not, nor does anyone in this House, but before we choke down a law of this kind on the people of Hawaii we ought to find out what the people want. Is not that good reasoning? You know that I am talking sense and for fair play on this measure, and if you have the courage of your convictions you will vote with me against it. I am not a drinking man. I believe in temperance. I believe the saloon and the sale of liquor ought to be regulated, but I do not believe that as a great legislative body we ought to try to make those islands dry without having any advice from the people of Hawaii.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Does the gentleman remember that it is a part of the history of the Hawaiian people that they never wanted to become a part of the United States in any particular, and does he now favor turning them loose?

Mr. GALLAGHER. Oh, that has nothing to do with the passage of this bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The gentleman speaks of doing something without their consent.

Mr. GALLAGHER. And the Hawaiian people know what they want better than we do. They are an intelligent people, and they ought to be given an opportunity through their legislature to pass upon this question before we attempt to give them a law of this kind for which they have never asked.

I have had the pleasure of visiting the islands. I know something of the people, and I know further that the prohibition movement on the island is agitated, fostered, and backed up by the same influence and forces that are at work here to make this country dry. There is a large alien population upon the islands that the planters are compelled to have and to use. They have their native drinks, to which they are accustomed. By this law you will deprive them from procuring the same. How it will affect them I do no know, but I do know the planters of the islands are having a hard time now as it is to procure labor, and the effect of this law upon the labor of the islands may cause hardship and worry to the planter in the matter of procuring help and dissatisfaction and discontent among this element of the population. I think it but fair to have an expression from the great business interest of the islands through the legislature or by some other means upon this important movement before we deprive this great element of the population of their habit and customs. It is evidently the intention of this body to make might instead of right-rule here to-day in passing this bill, and if I stand alone I shall oppose its passage and hope it will be defeated, and if we had an honest expression of opinion on it I am sure it would be defeated, as it ought to be. It is a law, to say the least, that will prove unfair to the people of the islands.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House; if there is any portion of the world over which the United States exercises jurisdiction where it is particularly appropriate and desirable that prohibition should be established, that area is the Sandwich Islands. All of us who have been to those islands and have had an opportunity of observing existing conditions, have been fully impressed with the fact that those conditions demand at our hands the suppression of a traffic which has worked untold mischief in one of the fairest lands in the sunlit Pacific. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] complain that this House intends to force prohibition upon the people of Hawaii. We intend to force prohibition upon that Territory precisely as we have forced it to a measurable degree upon the people of Washington. All of us who live in the city of Washington at the present time, and who lived here under ante-prohibition conditions, and are therefore able to contrast the civic and social life of the two periods, have no reason to be dissatisfied with our action when we voted for prohibition for this city. The only criticism that can be made is that we failed to exclude importations from wet centers. But that omission will be rectified ere long. I take it for granted that there is not a Member upon this floor, not even the most ardent of the wet advocates, who will not admit when he contrasts present conditions on the streets of Washington with those that prevailed 12 months ago, and notes the vast improvement in sobriety and order, that all the argument is in favor of prohibition. The object lesson of a dry Washington is a cogent argument for a dry Hawaii.

But there is an additional reason why in the plentitude of our Federal power, we should establish prohibition in the Sandwich Islands. The people of that Territory are suffering to-day in consequence of the advent in their midst generations ago of the white man with the riot of drink and debauchery that followed. The history of Hawaii informs us that when those islands were discovered by Capt. Cook they were highly populous. It is estimated that at that time the population of the Sandwich Island group was at least three or four hundred thousand. The people were remarkable for their intelligence and physical vigor. Following this discovery by Capt. Cook, and the introduction into Hawaii of ardent spirits, there ensued a period of debauchery and vice during which history informs us the people of that country died like flies. To-day there is but a handful of native Hawaiians compared with the swarming multitudes who peopled those islands 150 years ago. Are the Members of this House aware that when that country was a self-governing country, the native rulers of their own initiative, and in view of the destructive effects upon the native life of the widespread use of ardent spirits, made vigorous efforts to establish prohibition? It is to the shame of civilization, it is to the shame of what are called the great nations of the world, that at times by force, or the threat of force they compelled the people of those islands to abandon a domestic policy of island-wide prohibition which they were earnestly and honestly striving to maintain. History informs us that the efforts of those people struggling to free themselves from the grip of an increasingly destructive habit were rendered abortive by the opposition of the outside world which insisted upon the traffic in spirits as a part of the commerce of the islands. Against these powerful influences the efforts of the native authorities were fruitless, and an honest effort to exclude the importation of ardent spirits was rendered abortive.

It is peculiarly appropriate that this great Nation of ours, which stands in the forefront of all the nations in our activities in behalf of social uplift and moral betterment, should at the request of the people of Hawaii, transmitted to us by their Delegate on this floor, be the chosen benefactor to confer upon that fair Territory the rich blessings that will follow upon the abolition of the traffic in ardent spirits in their midst. Young Hawaii will rise up to bless us, and all that is best and noblest in that country will rejoice that the time at last has arrived when the power of this country became a power for righteousness and struck down by legislative enactment a traffic which has worked untold evil to the native life of Hawaii. I have been in those islands. I have traveled through Hawaii, Oahu, Maui, and Kauai and am able to speak with knowledge of the conditions that prevailed in that Territory two years ago. I know that absolute inhibition of the liquor traffic in the entire Territory will be the greatest boon that we can confer upon the people of those islands.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Just a minute.

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. There is one other thought that I wish to present in this connection, and that is that the anti-prohibitionists are always willing to admit that the absence of spirits will be beneficial to a community, but insist that the enactment of dry legislation will not operate to suppress the traffic in ardent spirits or exclude its use. Make a community really and actually dry, they say, and they will admit that conditions of betterment will follow. Well this is the one place in our jurisdiction, where the experiment of prohibition, if it can be any longer regarded as an experiment, can be made under the most hopeful expectations of absolute success.

By reason of the isolation and remoteness of these islands, the opportunity is afforded to make the effort under the most hopeful conditions, to eliminate ardent spirits from the social and public life of that country, and thereby open a way by which a noble native race may attain its utmost development. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS]. [Applause.]

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I would not occupy the time of the House on this measure were it not for my promise to express to you the sincere desire of the Delegate from the islands that the bill be speedily enacted.

It is unfortunate, and he so regards it, that important business elsewhere deprives him of the privilege of participating in this debate and denies us the benefit of his counsel. There is no one on this floor more industrious, more enthusiastic in caring for the interest, the welfare, of those whom he represents than is the Delegate from Hawaii. His long service here has familiarized him with procedure, and his influence and standing with the membership are of great benefit to his people.

It has been stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] that this measure is not responsive to a demand emanating from the islands. Quite the contrary is true. This bill comes direct from the islands. It was introduced and has been urged by the Delegate who represents Hawaii. It is not a violent presumption to assert that he is quite as familiar with the wishes of his people as is the gentleman from Milwaukee or the gentleman from Chicago. This bill would not be occupying our attention this afternoon were it not for the existence of the demand which some Members deny.

The situation with regard to the liquor traffic in Hawaii is somewhat peculiar. The island of Oahu, upon which the city of Honolulu is situated, was recently made dry by order of the President as a military necessity. The islands of Hawaii, Maui, and Kauai are not affected by this order. The result is, according to my information, that the latter islands are rapidly becoming a storehouse for liquor shipped from the mainland and which is subsequently shipped to Oahu. The order of the President will not become completely effectual until all liquor shipments from the mainland are stopped, and this can not be done until all the islands are bone dry.

The bill provides for bone-dry prohibition during the war period, and grants authority for a referendum vote by the electors of the islands at any time within two years following the war.

Personally, I would gladly support a measure to make the islands perpetually dry. I would be glad if the bill did not contain the right to repeal this law by a direct vote within two years after the war. But unfortunately for those holding my view no amendments will be permitted to the pending measure.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. With pleasure.

Mr. WALSH. What have the people of Hawaii to do with it? Is this not a problem for Congress to settle?

Mr. REAVIS. Undoubtedly; and I have just made the statement that I would be glad to see Congress settle it.

Mr. WALSH. I know the gentleman's views——

Mr. REAVIS. But this is not my bill; it does not come from my committee. Personally, it would please me to vote for absolute prohibition for the islands. I am not given that opportunity, and I support this measure as an improvement over present conditions.

Mr. Speaker, when the missionaries first went to the islands, which I think was about the year 1832, there were something like 140,000 natives residing there. To-day I am informed there are less than one-fourth that number on the islands. To anyone who knows the Hawaiian people these figures are productive of great sadness. Within the past few months it has been my privilege to come into more or less intimate association with them. I have visited with them in their homes, talked with them, and observed them with some attention. I remember on the night before the good queen's funeral, I was aboard ship, returning to Honolulu from the island of Hawaii. The boat was crowded with old-time Hawaiians on their way to attend the funeral of the last of the royal house, to pay this last sad tribute to her who in the old days had been their queen. Far into that wonderful night we sat listening to their pathetic songs, their conversations, the stories of other days now gone forever. Yet no regret was expressed that royalty was no more—only the most sincere gratitude and loyalty to our common country.

Way out in that lonely waste of waters the flag flies over dusky hued citizens of the United States whose hearts are as loyal and whose impulses are as patriotic as are yours and mine. There are no more gentle, hospitable, affectionate people on this troubled old earth than are the natives of Hawaii. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, the vices of an occidental civilization are a tragedy when transplanted in a tropical or semitropical climate. The white race took the Christian religion to Hawaii, took all that we had that was good, but we took much that was evil as well. Largely because of these vices the Hawaiian race is fast dying out.

It was a wonderful thing we did for them when the flag was raised over their land; it was a wonderful thing for America, a wonderful thing for the world's civilization, and it will likewise be wonderful when the Congress, by legislation such as this, shall say to those people, "We have come here solely for your good, not for your evil. We will give to you all of our civilization that is beneficial; we will withhold from you those of our customs that destroy." [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I agreed to yield 20 minutes to the opponents of the bill. If there is any other gentleman opposed to the bill, I will yield time to him. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I shall support this measure, because I am a believer in prohibition, and I shall fight the liquor traffic as long as I live and as long as I have got a drop of blood flowing through my veins, but it seems to me that every time we have a prohibition measure coming before this House we hear a loud noise from the city of Milwaukee in the shape of Mr. STAFFORD. [Laughter.] He stands upon this floor and ridicules and in a sneering way condemns those who honestly believe in prohibition. I am a prohibitionist, but I have no hard feelings against the men who do not agree with me. I have too much respect for them to stand on this floor and sneer and ridicule them.

It is the traffic that I am after, not the men who do not agree with me.

Now, as near as I can understand, by what I have heard from Dr. John Wadman, who has spent many years in the Hawaiian Islands, no greater blessing could come to the native people of those islands than to pass a prohibition law. He has talked to me for hours at a time regarding the conditions in those islands. He told me how our Government introduced strong intoxicating liquor among those people and how it has lowered their morality and almost ruined them as a race.

Why, I believe if this bill is passed that the benefit that will come to the people of those islands will be wonderful. And then again, we have been told that our soldier boys, while they were over there in the islands, got hold of the strong liquor which was made there, and it ruined them physically and morally, a great many of them; and to-day, if we go over here to the hospital for the insane, located in the District of Columbia, we will find many of the American soldier boys that became in this condition on account of the moral conditions and the strong liquor that they received while they were on duty in those islands.

I believe the bill ought to pass, and I shall cast my vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time has been used up to now by the respective sides?

The SPEAKER. The opponents of this bill have used 13 minutes, leaving them 7.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the proponents?

The SPEAKER. Sixteen minutes, leaving them 9.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much time have the proponents used?

The SPEAKER. They have used all except nine minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of all the hour?

The SPEAKER. Yes. Seven minutes are left on one side and nine on the other. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is recognized.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the question of prohibition of the liquor traffic has left the realm of theory and is now in the field of experience. The State of Michigan contains the city of Detroit, and that city is to-day the largest bone-dry city in the world, with a population of 900,000, where they are not even permitted under the law to sell any beverage containing any per cent of alcohol. How prohibition will work in such a city and such a State is bound to be of widespread interest. Fortunately, an excellent law has been enacted, and at the head of the State staff for its enforcement is Hon. Fred L. Woodworth, a fearless and able official.

Now, we did away with saloons in Michigan on the last day of April. Since the 1st of May the State has been dry. We are already getting the reports, and it is our experience that leads me to believe that any place where bone-dry, real prohibition is put into effect will never do away with it.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not yield.

The Detroit News, the greatest newspaper, I think, in Michigan and one of the greatest in the country, on May 13 had this article on the front page, in which they point out the fact that the business of money lenders has fallen off 50 per cent since the bars closed in Detroit. They say:

The three gold balls, ancient symbols of the pawnbroking business, must seek a new significance in Detroit if police statistics mean anything.

Prohibition has not caused a total eclipse of the loan business, but the man who piles up the records at central police station has figures to prove that since May 1, when Michigan saloons sank into oblivion, money lending has fallen off just 50 per cent.

* * * * * * *

The situation has relieved for other duty one of three persons employed on this particular phase of police record keeping. Miss Nell Connelly and Miss Clara Langnickel, who formerly kept records of pawned rings and watches only, now are able to handle all the pawnshop reports.

"The names of habitual visitors to the pawnshops have disappeared, too," explained Miss Connelly. "It used to be we would get reports every week of the same person borrowing money on the same article. But during the last two weeks these habitual offenders, as we call them, have been keeping away from their loan-shop friends."

"We thought at first that the war was entirely responsible for the big cut in pawn business," said Capt. Girardin, in charge of the record bureau. "No doubt the war, taking so many spending young men, is partly responsible; but we can not overlook the fact that the immense decrease has been shown since May 1. With that fact facing you, there is another thing to blame, and that is prohibition."

The next county to Wayne, in which Detroit is located, is the county of Macomb, where the greatest health center of this country is located, Mount Clemens, the great bath city, and a dispatch from Mount Clemens to the Detroit Free Press, under the date of May 14, says:

MACOMB ARID; JAIL IS EMPTY.

[Special to the Free Press.]

MOUNT CLEMENS, MICH., May 14.

For the first time in many years in Macomb County the jail is empty. The emptiness is ascribed entirely to the passing of liquor. In two weeks under dry conditions the sheriff has had but one arrest.

A year ago when the construction works at Selfridge Field was in progress, with all the saloons running, there were from 8 to 10 arrests daily.

St. Clair County is the next county north, containing the city of Port Huron, with a population of 25,000. The Times-Herald, its only daily newspaper, has this editorial statement:

WITHOUT THE BOOZE.

For 15 days Port Huron has been without saloons. If the experience of the past two weeks counts for anything, we may be able soon to dispense almost entirely with the police force and to do away with the county jail. The number of arrests has dwindled down to almost nothing, and we were informed on Tuesday that there were only three prisoners held as guests of Sheriff Windsor. This is the lowest number recorded in a quarter of a century.

As for the horrible things which we were warned were bound to follow the closing of the saloons, we can only say that up to the present time they have failed to materialize. We haven't seen any young boys being lured into blind pigs. Neither, as far as we can learn, is the city filled with speakeasies and bootleggers.

We don't want to be misunderstood. We don't mean to say that there is no whisky being consumed in Port Huron. No such miracle has been worked. We do know, however, that those who are accustomed to frequent visits to the saloon find it mighty hard to get a drink, and many of them refuse to take the trouble, and are attending to their work or business instead.

As time goes on, we will wonder more and more how it was that we ever tolerated the saloon in this community. We will look back with the relieved feeling that a cancerous growth has been removed from our civic body and that the operation was so successful that it will never return.

We have done away with the saloons in Michigan, and I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], in answer to his reference to the vote to come next fall, that, notwithstanding the beer and wine amendment that is offered us now to bring back the saloons, the people of Michigan will not in November bring them back. The wine and beer amendment proposed comes as the deathbed repentance of the saloon keepers of the State; nay, it comes with its hair singed by the fires of the hereafter; it comes back from the grave of the saloon. There is to be no resurrection of the saloon, and that is what adoption of the wine and beer amendment would mean. Elimination of the saloons from Michigan is already proving a blessing to thousands of homes, and police records, court records, and jail records already are proving it. In the face of such fruits of experience I am satisfied the passage of this measure for Hawaii will likewise bring greater happiness and prosperity for those island, which are peculiarly in our care, and I am pleased to support the measure. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to use some of his time?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not at this time. I desired time when I was speaking in which to reply to the gentleman from Ohio. I stated to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] that all the time would not be used. A gentleman declined to yield to me, and I do not care to take any time now.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, I did not propose to give all the time to one Member. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL].

SECRETARY OF NAVY MAKES GUAM DRY.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read a cablegram which appeared in the morning papers.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PARIS, May 17.

"There was only one case of torpedoing in waters where American warships are operating during February, compared with 34 in October, and in April there were none," Admiral Wilson declared to-day in an interview published in the Matin.

Mr. RANDALL. And I may add, Mr. Speaker, that it is well known that the recent successful exploits of the British Navy at Ostend and Zeebrugge were undertaken after repeated urging upon the part of the American naval authorities.

Some four or five years ago the Secretary of the Navy issued an order putting the Naval Establishment under prohibition of intoxicating liquors. There was immediately organized by the brewers and distillers of this country a stupendous and almost terrifying propaganda to drive Secretary Daniels from his post and from public life. The vessels of the Navy were described in thousands of newspapers as rotting hulks, unsafe to float on a mill pond.

The vindication has come quickly and is overwhelming. Who speaks now of the Navy and its head except with bursting pride? Who would have the temerity to suggest that booze again be admitted to our fighting ships?

Mr. Speaker, we are talking about making some of the islands of the Pacific dry. Congress has fooled along with the prohibition measure for Hawaii over two years, ever since I introduced the first bill in 1915, but the Secretary of the Navy has broken our record by a sweeping order which will make that other naval station of ours in the Pacific, the island of Guam, bone dry on the 1st day of next July.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Clerk to read the letter and the order of the Secretary of the Navy in connection with Guam.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 1, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES H. RANDALL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

MY DEAR MR. RANDALL: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letters, one of March 11 and one of April 11, each inclosing a letter from the Rev. Arthur U. Logan, missionary in the island of Guam, in which he calls attention to the undesirable conditions in the island due to the use of intoxicating liquors and urges that steps be taken to abolish the traffic there.

You state that you understand that Guam is entirely under jurisdiction of the Navy Department, and you express the hope that the department will take action to remedy the conditions complained of by Mr. Logan.

Guam is under the control of the Navy Department, and I am now able to advise you that after careful consideration of all the questions involved the department has reached the decision to issue the necessary order abolishing the beverage-liquor traffic in the entire island, a copy of which order is herewith inclosed for your information.

Yours, very truly,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the order be also published in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the order be published in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the order referred to:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 30, 1918.

From: Department.
To: Governor of Guam.
Subject: Prohibition of the liquor traffic in the island of Guam.

The department directs that an order be issued, within 10 days after the receipt of this letter, prohibiting the sale and use of alcoholic liquors in the island of Guam, this order to read in substance as follows:

"That on and after the 1st day of July, 1918, the manufacture, importation, exportation, sale, keeping for sale, the receipt or possession of, or the giving away of any distilled, malt, fermented, or other alcoholic liquors in any part or district of the island of Guam is strictly prohibited; excepting, however, that the importation and sale of wine for sacramental purposes, wine and other alcoholic liquors for medicinal purposes, and methyl alcohol for mechanical purposes will be permitted under regulations later to be adopted and promulgated. All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this order are hereby repealed."

You will make all rules and regulations necessary to insure the effective enforcement of the provisions of this order.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention when this bill came before the House to say a word. I am opposed to the bill not because I do not believe in temperance but for one thing, and that is the constant practice of Members standing upon this floor when they advocate prohibition to urge it on the ground of protecting the young men of our Army and Navy.

How long has it been since the men composing our Army and Navy have made up the drunkards of this country? How long has it been since the Navy of the United States has not been able to take care of itself, no matter where you put it? [Applause.] Still we Members of this House, day after day, must have those who are near and dear to us, those who are clothed with the uniform of Uncle Sam, held up here as the cause for legislation and the expansion of prohibition. It is the hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker, exhibited on this question that makes me vote against it, and I do not believe that half of the men who are going to vote for this bill to-day believe in or practice prohibition. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, there are members of my family in the Army of the United States and in the Navy of the United States, and, as one Member of this Congress, I will not permit their occupation to be slurred by the idle prattle of those who will not stand upon their own bottom to defend a bill, but instead, to accomplish their purpose, hold up the young men of the service to ridicule and scorn. You do not dare submit this bill to the people of the Hawaiian Islands. You do not dare to tell them that those who have the right to vote upon a question of this kind in the States will concede such a right to them. You are fearful that these people will resent it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in a very limited way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for the purpose of offering an amendment?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will not yield for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is a Senate bill. At what time will it be in order to commit?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order to commit under the rules of the House just before the third reading, after the Chair puts the question as to the third reading.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to give notice that I will then move to commit.

The SPEAKER. All right. The Chair will recognize the gentleman. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to commit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to commit. The Clerk will report his motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: I move to commit the bill to the Committee on the Territories with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: Strike out, in lines 3 and 4, page 2, the following words: "held within two years after the conclusion of peace."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to commit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the motion to commit will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 40, nays 239, answered "present" 1, not voting 150, as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY (for) with Mr. COLLIER (against).

Mr. COADY (for) with Mr. DUNN (against).

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Idaho, Mr. SMITH, is unavoidably absent on account of illness in his family. If he were present, he would vote "nay" on this motion to commit.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The motion to commit is lost, and the question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. TAGUE. That the point of no quorum is dilatory. The roll call has just revealed that there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the point of no quorum present is a constitutional point, and he has always been very tenderfooted about holding it to be dilatory. [Applause.] The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum present. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-one Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the passage of the bill will, as their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 238, nays 30, answered "present" 2, not voting 160, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. BLACKMON with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. KREIDER.

Mr. CLEARY with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. ROWE.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma with Mr. SIEGEL.

Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee with Mr. LONGWORTH.

Mr. SIMS with Mr. LUNDEEN.

Mr. PHELAN with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH with Mr. LEHLBACH.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia with Mr. SANDERS of New York.

On this vote:

Mr. COLLIER (for) with Mr. O'SHAUNESSY (against).

Mr. DUNN (for) with Mr. COADY (against).

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Missouri, Judge RUCKER, is unavoidably absent. He authorizes me to say that if present he would vote for this bill.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, Mr. PURNELL and Mr. ELLIOTT, are both absent, but if present would vote for the bill.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

On motion of Mr. HAMLIN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The bill (H. R. 9960) to prohibit the sale, manufacture, and importation of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii during the period of the war was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8696. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919; and

H. R. 11628. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia," approved September 25, 1914.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 4409. An act to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes"; and

S. 2123. An act to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7237, the Post Office appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take the bill H. R. 7237, the Post Office appropriation bill, from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. DALLINGER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how many conferees he expects to have appointed?

Mr. MOON. That will rest with the Speaker.

Mr. DALLINGER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the Speaker if the Senate has appointed three conferees is it the custom of the House to appoint three conferees?

The SPEAKER. The House pays no attention to the number of conferees the Senate puts on the committee.

Mr. COX. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the bill has been printed with Senate amendments?

Mr. MOON. It has.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the conferees are appointed I desire to make a motion to instruct the conferees. In the matter of compensation for the postal employees the Senate amended the bill H. R. 9414 by striking out the language which I intend to read with respect to the increase of compensation for the clerks in first and second class offices and the carriers in the City Delivery Service, and also the language of the bill passed by the House which increases the compensation and changes the classification of railway mail clerks and clerks and carriers.

I offer a motion to instruct the conferees to strike out of the bill, as amended by the Senate, on page 30, section 2, after the word "nineteen," in the second line, the following language:

On page 30, section 2, after the word "nineteen," in the second line, strike out the words "the annual salaries fixed by law for clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service, railway postal clerks of grade 1 to grade 10, inclusive, shall be increased $200 per annum," and insert in lieu thereof "That clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $1,000; second grade, salary $1,100; third grade, salary $1,200; fourth grade, salary $1,300; fifth grade, salary $1,400; sixth grade, salary $1,500. Clerks and carriers shall be promoted successively to the sixth grade: Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service who are in grades 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, under the act of March 2, 1907, as amended, shall pass automatically from such grades and the salaries they receive thereunder to the new grades 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, with the salaries provided for such grades in this act.

That the salaries of railway postal clerks shall be graded as follows: Grade 1, at $1,100; grade 2, at $1,200; grade 3, at $1,300; grade 4, at $1,400; grade 5, at $1,500; grade 6, at $1,600; grade 7, at $1,700; grade 8, at $1,800; grade 9, at $1,900; grade 10, at $2,000.

The Postmaster General shall classify and fix the salaries of railway postal clerks, under such regulations as he may prescribe, in the grades provided by law; and for the purpose of organization and of establishing maximum grades to which promotions may be made successively, as hereinafter provided, he shall classify railway post offices, terminal railway post offices, and transfer offices, with reference to their character and importance, in three classes, with salary grades as follows:

Class A, $1,100 to $1,400; class B, $1,100 to $1,500; and class C, $1,100 to $1,700. He may assign to the offices of division superintendents and chief clerks such railway postal clerks as may be necessary and fix their salaries within the grades provided by law, without regard to the classification of railway post offices: Provided, That railway postal clerks shall pass automatically from the grades they are in and the salaries they receive under the act of August 24, 1912, to the corresponding grade, with salaries provided for in this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois in making his motion I think was in error in moving to instruct the conferees to strike out. It seems to me the proper thing is to move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the right to make a motion to instruct the conferees. What he may put in his instructions is another matter. What point does the gentleman from Massachusetts make?

Mr. WALSH. My suggestion was that the gentleman from Illinois moves to instruct the conferees to strike out of the bill certain language and insert other language. Of course the bill is in conference. This is a House provision and there is a Senate amendment. It seems to me that the motion for instructions should be to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is one way of getting at it.

Mr. MOON. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken in this, that there is no House provision.

Mr. WALSH. Is there not a House provision to which was an amendment?

Mr. MOON. No; the gentleman is speaking of the provision that was in House bill 9414.

Mr. MADDEN. I think this is the way to do it, and if the Speaker will permit I would like to make an explanation of the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the Clerk should first read the motion, so that the Members can be instructed as to what is in it.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, section 2, after the word "nineteen," strike out the words "the annual salaries fixed by law for clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service, railway postal clerks of grade 1 to grade 10, inclusive, shall be increased $200 per annum"; and insert in lieu thereof:

"That clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $1,000; second grade, salary $1,100; third grade, salary $1,200; fourth grade, salary $1,300; fifth grade, salary $1,400; sixth grade, salary $1,500. Clerks and carriers shall be promoted successively to the sixth grade: Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service who are in grades 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, under the act of March 2, 1907, as amended, shall pass automatically from such grades and the salaries they receive thereunder to the new grades 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, with the salaries provided for such grades in this act.

"That the salaries of railway postal clerks shall be graded as follows: Grade 1 at $1,100; grade 2 at $1,200; grade 3 at $1,300; grade 4 at $1,400; grade 5 at $1,500; grade 6 at $1,600; grade 7 at $1,700; grade 8 at $1,800; grade 9 at $1,900; grade 10 at $2,000.

"The Postmaster General shall classify and fix the salaries of railway postal clerks, under such regulations as he may prescribe, in the grades provided by law; and for the purpose of organization and of establishing maximum grades to which promotions may be made successively, as hereinafter provided, he shall classify railway post offices, terminal railway post offices, and transfer offices with reference to their character and importance in three classes, with salary grades as follows:

"Class A, $1,100 to $1,400; class B, $1,100 to $1,500; and Class C, $1,100 to $1,700. He may assign to the offices of division superintendents and chief clerks such railway postal clerks as may be necessary, and fix their salaries within the grades provided by law without regard to the classification of railway post offices: Provided, That railway postal clerks shall pass automatically from the grades they are in and the salaries they receive under the act of August 24, 1912, to the corresponding grade, with salaries provided for in this act."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the motion to instruct.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain what it does.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that the reservation of a point of order is pending.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Is not this in accordance with the former action of the House in regard to this?

Mr. BLACK. Not on this appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLAGHER. No; but on the same matter.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. The appropriation bill as it passed the House contained nothing of this at all.

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the gentleman seeks by this motion to insert a part of a bill that was passed by the House some weeks ago on this subject.

Mr. MADDEN. Surely, that is it exactly.

Mr. STEENERSON. Which the Senate ignored.

Mr. MADDEN. The point I wish to state for the information of the House is that the House some time ago passed a bill, H. R. 9414, enacting permanent law for the increased compensation for the men and women engaged in the Postal Service. The bill went to the Senate. The Senate in taking that bill up for consideration inserted parts of the bill in the Post Office appropriation bill. With respect to all other parts of the bill except that which has reference to the clerks in the first and second class post offices, and carriers in the City Delivery Service, and the railway clerks, the Senate inserted substantially in the appropriation bill the exact language of H. R. 9414; but with respect to the employees engaged as clerks and carriers and railway mail clerks the Senate simply included this language in the bill:

The annual salaries fixed by law for clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service, railway postal clerks of grade 1 to grade 10, inclusive, shall be increased $200 per annum.

The instructions which I send to the Clerk's desk and which are pending is the language of the bill passed by the House with respect to these two classes of employees.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. If I understood the reading of the gentleman's motion correctly, as he now offers it, it is to instruct the conferees to agree to legislation that would be permanent legislation?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I did not offer that. I simply offered the classification, not the permanent feature of it, because I recognize the fact that under the rules of the House it would not be in order to offer the permanent feature.

Mr. BLACK. Then the amendment the gentleman has offered just applies to the fiscal year 1919?

Mr. MADDEN. That is it. The Senate, of course, in inserting the language of the bill H. R. 9414, passed by the House, in the appropriation bill, provided that it shall be for the fiscal year 1919, while the bill H. R. 9414, passed by the House, provided that the increased compensation should be paid hereafter. While they have reduced the period to the fiscal year 1919 and have increased the compensation to the same extent that the House bill increased it, yet they have eliminated the classification provisions contained in H. R. 9414, and it seems to me that the least we can do is to have the language of that bill inserted in the appropriation bill, since the Senate has in its wisdom thought it proper to deal with the question of salary increases in the appropriation bill rather than in the bill passed by the House for that purpose by practically a unanimous vote.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me see if I understand the gentleman's motion. Is it to instruct the conferees to insist upon the language provided in the so-called Madden bill (H. R. 9414) as it passed the House?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Making it applicable only to the fiscal year 1919?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; instead of permanently, and it is only as to those two classes of employees, because the Senate itself has adopted the language of the House bill H. R. 9414 with respect to fourth-class postmasters, with respect to the supervisory employees, with respect to laborers, with respect to messengers, with respect to everything in the bill except to those two classes of employees. I maintain that inasmuch as the Senate has gone that far, they ought not to ignore these two very important classes of employees, and I simply ask that the conferees of the House be advised of the difference between the attitude of the Senate and the attitude of the House upon this question, to put them upon notice by instructing them to insist upon the attitude of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the bill provide for an increase of compensation for rural carriers?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that also is covered in this bill, and the language of the House bill is employed in the bill as reported by the Senate with respect to rural carriers. Why should it not be employed with respect to all men in the service?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman refers to the Senate amendment No. 52?

Mr. MADDEN. That is it.

Mr. WALSH. There is part of that amendment which he desires retained, is there not?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I want all retained except what I have just asked should be stricken out.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the gentleman desires to agree to the Senate amendment No. 52 with an amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to be certain of the retention of the classification feature of the bill H. R. 9414 as passed by the House.

Mr. WALSH. That should be the instruction.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to do whatever will accomplish the purpose.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman does not want to strike out amendment No. 52 and insert his language because——

Mr. MADDEN. I have made no such motion. I simply moved to strike out and insert the language which has been read.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman did at the beginning.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I specifically provide that only certain language shall be stricken out, and stated it in what I said. There are four lines.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to get this clear in my mind. I presume the rest of the gentlemen on this floor have it clearly in their minds. I sent for and have procured a copy of the bill H. R. 9414, to which the gentleman from Illinois refers, which passed the House upon the 6th of March last.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that is right.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, what are the two classes of postal employees for which that bill provided which this bill does not?

Mr. MADDEN. This bill does provide for them, but it does not provide for them in the adequate way in which the bill we passed provided for them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just explain that.

Mr. MADDEN. In the one case the Senate provides——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. House bill 9414, what did that provide?

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will permit, that provided just what I read; just exactly what I read.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I mean as to these two particular classes.

Mr. MADDEN. Just exactly what I read, and I will read it again. The bill H. R. 9414, that passed the House, provides on page 2, beginning with line 6 and running down to the bottom of page 3, that the clerks in first and second class post offices and carriers in the City Delivery Service and railway postal clerks shall be reclassified.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Now the Senate provides for that, this language:

> The annual salaries fixed by law for clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service, railway postal clerks of grade 1 to grade 10, inclusive, shall be increased $200 per annum.

Instead of the language in these pages which I have called to the gentleman's attention. Now, what I want to do is——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What were the two classes omitted?

Mr. MADDEN. There are three classes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What did the Senate omit?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, it omitted all of the language which reclassifies clerks and carriers and railway postal clerks.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know it, but do I understand the gentleman bases his objection on the fact that the House in the bill which it passed March 28, 1914, provided for all those that are mentioned in the Senate amendment and two more?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; the Senate has provided for every class in the Postal Service just as it was provided for in the bill H. R. 9414, except those classes—clerks, carriers, and railway mail clerks.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How much less did the Senate provide for them?

Mr. MADDEN. The Senate provides the same salary but takes away their classification, and the classification of those men is more important than the salary, and that is what I wanted the attention of the House called to, in the hope that the House would see the justice, the necessity, and importance of instructing its conferees to insist upon the acceptance of the Senate amendment with the amendment which I have handed up.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman from Illinois tell the House of any reason which he thinks would be adequate to justify that change by the Senate as to those classes?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, of course I have no knowledge of why the Senate did what it did, and I do not want to characterize what they did, because I have not any reason for doing so.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman think of anything that would justify it?

Mr. MADDEN. There is no justification for it at all; certainly it ought not to be done.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. BLACK. Is it the contention of the gentleman that this Senate amendment changes in any way the present classification of postal clerks, letter carriers, and railway mail clerks?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I do not think it changes the present classification, but it does change the classification as it passed this House under the provisions of House bill 9414.

Mr. BLACK. As I understand this Senate amendment, it leaves the present classification as now provided by existing law and raises the salary of each of the classes $200 per annum?

Mr. MADDEN. That is exactly right, but that is not what the House did. What I am contending for is to carry out the order of the House passed by an overwhelming vote, with only eight dissenting votes.

I want the conferees of the House to realize that when this House by an overwhelming vote, consisting of all the Members who were present except eight, passed H. R. 9414 it intended to amend and did amend the classification act of 1907, while the Senate amendment ignores the House action by simply providing for an increase in compensation under the act of 1907.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Evidently the gentleman from Illinois thinks that would be unjust.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the Senate was perfectly justified in ignoring that, because it was not part of this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. That is true; I am not complaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen can not discuss the Senate.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not criticizing the Senate. The point I wish to make, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STAFFORD rose.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will allow me for a moment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Surely.

Mr. MADDEN. The point I wish to emphasize, if I have not already stated it in sufficiently emphatic language, is that since the Senate thought it wise to include the language of the House bill in so far as it referred to the rural carriers and the messengers and the chauffeurs and the watchmen and the laborers and the fourth-class postmasters and all other employees in the Postal Service, the same spirit of generosity and justice ought to apply to the men who are engaged as clerks, letter carriers, and railway mail clerks.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The Senate amendment does not change the classification of any other of these postal employees but does give them all an increase of salary?

Mr. MADDEN. There is no classification with respect to the other employees.

Mr. BLACK. It gives them all a percentage increase of salary?

Mr. MADDEN. It gives them exactly what the House gave. What I am asking is that the House conferees shall insist, when this bill goes to conference, on the adoption of the language of the bill passed by the House and not go back to a bill that existed in 1907, the terms of which are totally inadequate under the present situation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What reason has the gentleman for assuming that in the present condition of affairs the conferees of the House have not in good faith endeavored to carry out the provisions of the House bill?

Mr. MADDEN. My dear friend, if I have said a word that would indicate that I had any doubt of the good faith of the conferees, I want to apologize to the House. My only purpose in rising was that the House conferees might realize that the House itself expected them to insist on the language of the House bill with respect to these compensations. That was all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman going to debate the point of order? Has the gentleman stated it?

Mr. STAFFORD. I just reserved it. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is not in order; first, because it is not germane to the Senate amendment, and, next, because it involves permanent legislation on an appropriation bill, contrary to the rules of the House, and, next, the House, having already disagreed to the Senate amendment by a unanimous vote, the gentleman from Illinois can not now make a motion to agree with an amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want to agree.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will argue the first objection first, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield? I want to correct the gentleman's statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to proceed, and then I will yield.

Permit me, Mr. Speaker, to present clearly to the mind of the Speaker and the House the exact situation that is now confronting the Speaker for a decision.

In the Post Office appropriation bill, which we are now considering, as it passed the House, there was no provision made for changing the classification of salaries of any of the postal employees, nor was any provision made for granting them an annual increase of compensation during the next fiscal year. That subject matter was left entirely out of the bill as it passed the House. The bill went over to the Senate. During the interim the House passed a separate bill, known as the Moon-Madden bill, which changed existing law as to the classification of salaries of post-office clerks, letter carriers, railway mail clerks, and rural carriers. The gentleman now endeavors to engraft on this amendment the bill as it passed the House as a separate measure. And the question before the Chair for decision is whether with an amendment to a Post Office appropriation bill, which merely provides for granting an increase of $200 to all the employees of the Postal Service, you can engraft upon that temporary amendment a feature of permanent law, changing the classification under existing law of the pay of all these postal employees respectively, letter carriers, post-office clerks, railway mail clerks, and rural carriers.

Mr. Speaker, when the legislative bill was brought into the House for consideration, with the amendment granting $120 increase of salary to all the employees of the service other than postal employees, certainly neither the Speaker nor any chairman of the Committee of the Whole would have held that just because the appropriation had sought to grant for one year a horizontal increase of $120 to all the employees of the Government that was a warrant and could be used as a handle to change the permanent salaries of every employee of the Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is what the gentleman from Illinois is attempting to do in his amendment. He is seeking to change the classification of the postal employees, for, Mr. Speaker, he admits that it changes the existing classification, and that existing classification is the act of 1907 as amended by the act of 1912, whereby, as to letter carriers and post-office clerks the grades were from $800 to $1,200, under this law the grades are from $1,000 to $1,500, and providing a different method of promotion than in the present classification law. And the same way as to railway mail clerks. The maximum salary for railway mail clerks under existing law is $1,800. Under this amendment as proposed it seeks to raise them to $2,000. As far as the rural carriers' pay is concerned, the maximum pay under existing law to-day is $1,200, with a provision that they shall receive $24 per mile in excess of 30 miles and more carried.

This provision does not seek to apply to the salary of rural mail carriers, but the proposed amendment seeks to extend permanent law during the fiscal year. It seeks to change the classification law during the fiscal year 1919 of the grades of salary of city letter carriers, post-office clerks, and railway mail clerks.

Mr. Speaker, this Senate amendment—and I have a copy, if the Speaker wishes to review it—provides merely a $200 increase of salary to all post-office employees. The Senate had the right to proceed on the idea that they should increase the salary of every employee $200. Certainly when that amendment is brought into the House, as it is brought in here now, as a separate and substantive proposition, it would not be in order for the gentleman from Illinois to offer an amendment that would change the law as to the gradation of salaries of the respective postal employees, as he admits it does. And, therefore, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully contend it is not germane.

Now, furthermore, we are considering an appropriation bill. The gentleman admits you have no right to change existing law on an appropriation bill. And for that reason it should be sustained. As far as the third point I made is concerned, that the House has already disagreed to the Senate amendment, he now seeks to agree with an amendment. I understand his motion is to instruct. I shall not argue at this time the question of the merits of this proposition where the postal employees are given $200 increase, whereas under the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois they will receive but $100.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was arguing merely the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. In one minute. I bottom my opposition strongly on the ground that it is not germane. You can not hold it as germane, I respectfully contend, to a provision that just seeks to grant a temporary horizontal increase of $200 to all postal employees, a change in the permanent salary even for a year, when it changes existing law.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman concluded?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I wanted to correct the gentleman's statement, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman stated that the proposition that the House had before it under the bill that I have been advocating for some time only proposed an increase of $100 per annum. The truth is, it proposed the same increase that the Senate makes. That is what the House bill provides—$200.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is bad policy to instruct the conferees to adhere to a certain position at the beginning of a conference. It prevents it from being a free conference. Notwithstanding the last statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the author of the Moon-Madden bill, I respectfully contend that under that bill as it passed the House the post-office clerks and letter carriers and railway mail clerks who are now receiving $1,000 and $1,100 and $1,200 during the fiscal year would receive but $100 increase. Wherein can the gentleman show that the post-office clerk receiving but $1,200 will, under his amendment, receive during the present fiscal year more than $1,300?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. The bill so provides itself. This is what the bill provides: That, after the passage of the act, in first and second class post offices the clerks and carriers and City Delivery Service shall be divided into six classes, as follows: The first grade shall receive $1,000, the second $1,100, the third $1,200, the fourth $1,300, and the fifth $1,400, and the sixth grade $1,500.

Now, it also provides that they shall pass automatically from such grades and salaries that they have received thereunder to the new grades. For example, the man in grade 2 now goes to grade 1 at $1,000. He is now getting $800. The man in grade 3 under the act of 1907, getting $900 now, would go into grade 2 at $1,100. The man in grade 4 would go into grade 3 under the present act and get $1,200. He goes into a lower grade, but takes on the $200 increase of salary. That is provided in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the bill provides that those who are now in grade 2——

Mr. MADDEN. To go into grade——

Mr. STAFFORD. That those who are in grades 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 under the act of March 2, 1907, as amended, shall pass automatically from such grades and salaries they receive thereunder to the new grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, respectively.

Mr. MADDEN. That is, the man who is in grade 2 shall go into grade 1. The present grade 2 pays a salary of $800.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am in hearty sympathy with the idea embodied in the Moon-Madden bill of making the initial salary $1,000 instead of $800, and my reading of it, so far as the post-office clerks and letter carriers and railway mail clerks are concerned, inclines me to believe that it will merely provide for a $100 increase.

I am in sympathy with the idea of giving these postal employees $200 increase this year, as provided in the Senate amendment. They failed to receive any increase at all last year, which was accorded to all other employees of the Government, because the representatives of some of these postal organizations thought they could secure more by denying them the increase then voted to all the employees of the Government and await an opportunity to have a permanent law adopted whereby they could get further increases.

I say that this House should not juggle with the proposition, as these postal employees need and want an immediate increase, and that increase, in view of living increases, should be $200, especially in view of the fact that they were deprived of any increase last year by reason of the position taken by the officers of some of these post-office organizations. The proposition is different from that which confronted the committee preparing the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill when they passed upon the increase to be granted these employees during this year because of increased cost of living, because they realized that many of the clerks to whom they were voting the $120 increase were not married but were single. But generally, almost without exception, the postal employees are married, and they are entitled to this $200 increase. Now, if this motion prevails——

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at present. If this motion prevails, then the House, at the beginning of a conference, votes that the conferees shall adhere to a certain position, and the Senate conferees may refuse to confer because of the motion of instructions, in which event I hope the House will recede from the instructions, so that these postal employees will this year get an increase, a deserved increase of salary, which they were deprived of last year.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to instruct the conferees.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. May I ask what the motion is?

The SPEAKER. A motion to instruct the conferees about this postal-salary business.

Mr. MAPES. The motion read by the Clerk simply moves to strike out and insert.

The SPEAKER. No. It moves to instruct the conferees.

Mr. MAPES. I do not think the written motion does that. My parliamentary inquiry is this: Will this motion instruct the conferees to agree to the balance of amendment 52 except this language which is stricken out and with the insertion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that I am not particularly concerned in as chairman of the committee, but I want to make this suggestion: When this bill went to the Senate last December it had no legislation whatever upon it. That was largely due to the complaint of the Senate conferees heretofore that the appropriation bills had been loaded down in the House with legislation.

They sent this bill back to us with 65 amendments. The bulk of those amendments or many, it is true, are but copies made from the bill No. 9414 that was passed by the House. Those were tacked onto this appropriation bill by the Senate, together with some other original amendments by the Senate. These amendments are in reference to salaries and other matters and did not originate in the Senate but were copied by the Senate from the House bill 9414, as stated, and were tacked on as riders to this appropriation bill. Among them was the section that the gentleman from Illinois has referred to. That was one amendment among them all that they copied from our bill, modified by leaving out the classification provisions of the House mentioned.

It has been said that it is unusual for conferees to be instructed in the first place on questions of this sort; that there ought to be a free conference between the conferees of the two Houses. But it must be remembered by the House that while it has passed upon these provisions heretofore in bill 9414, which the Senate has not acted on as a separate bill, the Senate took them on as riders on 7237. Therefore, in this particular bill, the House has never taken any action on this particular section. It comes to us different from what it was in H. R. 9414, amended in some very material respects, without reference to that original bill, but apparently as an original rider by the Senate, although copied from H. R. 9414 in part. Now, the House, in my judgment, may well express an opinion to its conferees as to the wisdom of this legislation. Upon this bill, where this legislation is to be passed or not passed, the House has never taken any action whatever, either as to the original proposition or as to its modified status. While, as I say, it may be unusual to instruct in the first place, I would not consider it improper at all for the House to give such instructions as it sees fit, because it has not acted on these Senate amendments in this bill. It is not for me to discuss the reason for the status of this legislation as imposed by the Senate. We hope to be able to take care of the House end of this legislation, but we will have no objection as conferees to an instruction on any of these questions, in order that the Senate may know the judgment of this House and not merely the judgment of its conferees.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I should like two or three minutes.

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, this amendment of the Senate, which changes existing law, makes its first appearance in the House upon this bill now.

Mr. MOON. As a Senate amendment; yes.

Mr. CANNON. Ordinarily the House, if that should be its purpose, would disagree to the Senate amendment and ask a conference.

Mr. MOON. The Senate has asked a conference.

Mr. CANNON. The House would accede to the request of the Senate and agree to the conference. That would be the ordinary course of procedure. Of course, the House might at any time instruct its conferees. What was the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]?

Mr. MOON. As I understand the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], it was to amend the Senate amendment by inserting the provisions on this question that was passed in H. R. 9414, the legislative bill on that proposition, which is a change of the existing law on the subject of classification.

Mr. CANNON. That would be perfectly proper, the Senate having proposed the legislation, to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Is that the motion?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Then, it does not involve any instructions at all. Of course, you could instruct, but ordinarily it is not done. Later on, if the House was willing——

Mr. MOON. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that simply to agree to a Senate amendment with an amendment, without stating what that amendment was, would give no information to the conferees.

Mr. CANNON. You propose to put in that amendment?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. When that goes in, that is all the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks for.

Mr. CANNON. It is the difference between agreeing with an amendment and instructing the conferees. I think the House has very rarely instructed its conferees in the first instance. I suppose it has the power to do it, but it is out of the ordinary course, and would not amount to anything more than to pursue the ordinary course, in my judgment, in the event that the Senate would not agree.

Mr. MOON. I think the idea probably was that it carries with it a suggestion from the House as to what the legislation ought to be on a subject on which the House has not legislated in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. But you can do that by concurring in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. MOON. I understand.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, the House has already disagreed to the Senate amendments.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. MOON. This is a motion, after a disagreement to the Senate amendments, to instruct the conferees as to what action they shall take as to this particular amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think it changes it at all from what it would be if you pursued the ordinary course.

Mr. MOON. It is a matter about which I am indifferent for myself, because I feel that the House would stand for the position that was taken by the House in House bill 9414, which is the matter now proposed.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and it may be that between the Senate amendment and the disagreement, and the amendment of the House, you may come to an agreement in the premises. You would have jurisdiction to do so. You might look further ahead if you choose, and move that the House adhere. I suppose that would be in order.

Mr. MOON. We can not move that now, because the House has no provision on that subject.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman is right about that, but ordinarily when you adhere that is a notice to the other body that the bill fails.

Mr. MOON. In the shape in which this bill now is we can never move to adhere. We must move to amend the Senate amendment in conference and let them recede from their position and accept our amendment if they will.

Mr. MADDEN. Question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] desires to be heard for five minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the motion of the gentleman from Illinois ought to be agreed to, for reasons which I will state briefly. In the first place, it is unusual to instruct the conferees before a bill goes to conference, and I do not think that it should be done in this case. In the second place, when we passed the postal salary increase bill we provided for a permanent reclassification of postal clerks, letter carriers, and railway mail clerks, and the Senate provision in the Post Office appropriation bill, which we are now about to send to conference, provides not for permanent increases, but for increases in salaries to postal employees for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919. The Senate has not provided that these particular employees shall be reclassified, but that their classification shall remain the same, and they shall receive an increase in salary of $200 per annum. It is true that our House bill increased their salaries $200 per annum, but it was by means of the reclassification plan.

Mr. MADDEN. So that the clerks in that bill would have the same increase as the Senate has provided.

Mr. BLACK. Exactly, and that is what I am trying to make clear, with this difference: The Senate has not undertaken to make these salary increases permanent law, but limits the increases to the fiscal year 1919, and gave the postal clerks and letter carriers and railway mail clerks an increase of $200 per annum. I have no criticism of that amount for the next fiscal year and would be willing to vote to concur in this Senate amendment as it is now written in the bill, but I am not willing to add to it the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Now, what does his amendment propose to do? It proposes to reclassify the postal employees, notwithstanding the Senate provision only provides these salary increases for one year. It is not the contention of the gentleman from Illinois that the amendment that he now offers would permanently reclassify them, for he knows that an amendment of that kind would be in violation of the rules of the House if offered at this time. He admits that the salary increase will be the same, both under his amendment and the Senate bill as now written. Then why put the department to the trouble of reclassifying all these employees when the salary increase will be the same? I suppose the gentleman from Illinois expects that if his amendment is adopted that it will serve as a precedent for permanent law later on. That might be wise or it might be unwise. I prefer to wait and cross those bridges when we get to them.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman will observe that the Senate proposition gives the increase not only to clerks of over $1,500, but runs through the whole list of supervisory clerks, whereas the Madden amendment limits it, and the Senate amendment will cost for the next fiscal year many thousand more dollars than the Madden amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I beg to differ with the chairman of the committee. I think he has not read the Madden amendment carefully or he would not make that statement. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois has no other effect on the Senate amendment except as to these three classes—postal clerks, letter carriers, and railway mail clerks.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman understand that the Madden amendment covers the supervisory clerks?

Mr. BLACK. It does not.

Mr. MOON. The Senate amendment does.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; that is true, but the Madden amendment has no bearing on that part of the Senate amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois simply does this: It changes the six classes we now have of postal clerks and letter carriers—we really only have five, on account of abolishing grade 1 in 1912—it changes them into a new classification and raises the pay $200. Why go to the trouble of causing the Post Office to reclassify them, when the Senate bill proposes to leave them in the same classes they now are and give them $200 increase? If this was to be permanent law, then I could see the force and application of the amendment which has been proposed, but it seems to me to be out of place at this particular time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the Senate amendment the special clerks receiving $1,400 would receive an increase of $200.

Mr. BLACK. They would.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois the special clerks would only receive $1,500 and thereby be deprived of $100 increase.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Texas has just said that the only purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois was, in effect, to increase and make trouble for the Post Office Department.

Mr. BLACK. That would be the effect of it, it seems to me, inasmuch as the salary increases are limited to the fiscal year 1919 and in each instance would be $200 per annum.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How much trouble would it be for the Post Office Department? There would be no great amount of labor in it.

Mr. BLACK. I take it that there would be a good deal of changes to make in classifications, and to no advantage, if such changes were to expire at the end of one year.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. Has not the House passed the bill making the classification?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; the House passed it as permanent law, but we could not at this time concur with an amendment making it permanent law, for such an amendment would be out of order.

Mr. DENISON. It would fit in with the bill that the House passed.

Mr. BLACK. No; I take this position, that it would be inappropriate for the House to reclassify the postal employees on a temporary basis. What would be the sense of reclassifying them for one year? If any reclassification is done, it should be done as permanent law. If that is not to be done, then I think the Senate provision increasing the salaries $200 per annum is the wiser.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas another question. The amount of trouble this causes the Post Office Department the gentleman thinks would be considerable, whereas the chairman of the Post Office Committee, who ought to be very familiar with the subject, says it would take about 30 minutes.

Mr. BLACK. I do not agree with the statement of the chairman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That all they would have to do would be to change the numbers.

Mr. BLACK. I do not pretend to say how long it would take, except I do not know that there are many thousands of these employees, and under the Madden amendment they would all have to be reclassified, though it be for but one year, and I would like for the gentleman from Illinois or the chairman of the committee to give the House any good reason why these postal employees should be reclassified for simply one year.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman understand, reverting to the suggestion of the chairman of the Post Office Committee, that this language is stricken out by the instruction offered by the gentleman from Illinois—and also supervisory and other employees of the Postal Service whose compensation is in excess of $1,500 per annum.

Mr. BLACK. I do not so understand.

Mr. WALSH. That is retained in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; it is retained. He only refers to the postal clerks, letter carriers, and railway mail clerks. For the reason I have said I do not think the House ought to adopt an amendment of this kind, though I do not object at all to the increase of $200 per annum, which the Senate amendment provides for the next fiscal year. I am perfectly willing to vote for that.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman has asked me a question. I do not know whether it is well to be too candid or not. I do not know what other gentlemen think, but I think the classification contained in House bill 9414 is correct, and I am willing to see it put into this bill for one year, knowing that when we have put it in there and acted upon it for one year we will make it a permanent law. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to instruct the conferees.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MOON, Mr. BELL, Mr. ROUSE, Mr. STEENERSON, and Mr. MADDEN.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the table the bill H. R. 7634, an omnibus pension bill, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7634, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. SHERWOOD, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. LANGLEY.

BRIDGE ACROSS LITTLE PEEDEE RIVER, S. C.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 11552, granting the consent of Congress to Marion and Horry Counties to construct a bridge across the Little Peedee River.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for present consideration of the bill H. R. 11552, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not this bill in order on Monday, under unanimous consent.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I suppose it is.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there any necessity for getting it through at this time?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I could not say that there is a necessity for it.

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman wants to get it through?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I would not have asked unanimous consent otherwise.

Mr. DOWELL. I shall make no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Before consent is given, let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the counties of Marion and Horry and the State highway commission of South Carolina and their successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Little Peedee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the site of the present bridge at Gallvants Ferry, in the counties of Marion and Horry, in the State of South Carolina, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, is this bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that it is not.

Mr. RAGSDALE. No; it is not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there anything urgent connected with it?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, the proposition is this: Down there there is a river running between these two counties, and a large part of the produce grown in one county is sold in the other. This bridge is in very bad condition. The State highway commission has asked me to get this legislation through, as have the people of the two counties. The bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and that committee reported unanimously upon it. The bill was referred to the War Department, and the War Department reported unanimously upon it. It does not interest anyone other than the people of the particular section affected by the bridge. I have stayed around here to-day a good big part of my time because I want to get it through.

Mr. DOWELL. Should not the gentleman stay here a part of his time anyway?

Mr. RAGSDALE. No; I think I could spend my time to much better advantage almost anywhere else than to stay here and listen to a large part of the hot air that is turned loose on this floor a large part of the time. I have some work to do. I am supposed to take care of my district and represent it down in the departments, because most Members of Congress are little better than messenger boys now.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FOOD PRODUCTION.

The SPEAKER. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11945, the food-production bill, with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. SAUNDERS, in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11945, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair inform me how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has 37 minutes and the gentleman who controls time on the other side 67 minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, wheat and wool, two staple products of the northern farmers, have been seized on by the Government, the markets determined, and the price fixed. This was done under legislation authorizing the Government to take such action. That legislation was deemed necessary by the Members of the House. I voted for those bills. They were urged as a necessity. However, no man who spoke on the fixing of the price of wheat at $2 had in mind any intention that that price should be the maximum price. Everyone voted for the bill with the idea that it should be the minimum price. Many men upon the floor of this House anxiously expressed a fear that $2 would become the maximum price.

Those of us who live in territory where the farms are small understand something of the limitations that gather around the raising of wheat. Wheat has many enemies—rust, smut, the fly, winter killing. In my own State it is a gamble. There is much of hazard connected with it. I fear that many of the men upon the floor of this House in studying it can see only great machinery, great mechanical forces, used in the great Northwest for the production of wheat, and perhaps they base their judgment in voting upon the idea that this is an especially lucrative business. Too frequently men come to the conclusion that the amount of wheat that is raised in States like Indiana or Iowa or Michigan or Illinois is of little consequence, compared with the vast output of these United States.

Yet the amount of wheat raised last year in the State of Indiana was 31,000,000 bushels. I think a like amount no doubt was raised in Ohio, in Michigan, and in Illinois, so that with a crop of something like 650,000,000 bushels or 700,000,000 bushels those four States will raise from one-fifth to one-fourth of the total crop under conditions that are trying in the extreme, with small farms, ranging from 80 to 160 acres. With the intention of making the price of wheat $2 as a minimum, I was pleased last fall to state to the farmers in my own district that we had no idea when urging them to plant wheat that we should make the maximum $2 per bushel.

As Members of Congress and as members of the Government, we believed that the farmer needed no protection. Because the Government asked them, because the Government by its asking endeavored to stimulate production, if peradventure there should be an overproduction, we felt as though they should have guaranteed a certain price, that they might not lose if that overproduction should reduce the price. So we went up and down the State, talking to the farmers through county agencies, through the newspapers, through special agents, to put in more wheat, saying to them, "This is the minimum price, and not the maximum price." On a recent trip in the State of Indiana many farmers asked me how it happened that the two staple productions of northern farmers, wool and wheat, were seized upon by the Government, and the cotton crop of the South had gone unscathed.

I can not answer that question myself. It was pressing for an answer, and while I shall continue to vote for every necessary measure to carry this war to a successful conclusion yet I must ever be mindful of the fact that not only legislation but Executive action should be fair to every part of this country. It was urged that our allies needed wheat. It was urged when the price was fixed that in the great cities the poor and needy would be protected, but the operation of the law is such that to-day flour costs more per barrel than it did when wheat was selling for $2.75 or $3 per bushel. The execution of the law has not only taken from the farmer his right to an enhanced price under the law of supply and demand, but it has greatly inconvenienced him. Small mills within 3 or 4 miles of the farmer's residence, not prepared to manufacture Government flour, have, in many cases been shut up, thus throwing the business to the larger centers of population where the milling interests are able to meet the demands of the Government.

The result of it all is that the poor in the cities pay more, the farmer gets less, the miller and the intermediate man are enabled to prey upon the farmer and the poor man alike. And these men say to me, "Does cotton enter very largely into this question?" And then I am reminded that cotton is a necessary product for ammunition. I am reminded——

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. The only cotton that is used for ammunition purposes is cotton linters, which can not be used for manufacturing cloth. The Government long since has fixed the price of cotton linters at the instance of the powder manufacturers of the country, and fixed it at a less price than it brought prior to the war.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. That is a limited amount of cotton that is used.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Every pound of cotton linters.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. But only a limited amount of it is used by the Government, while in the case of these northern products all of it is fixed as to price.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. That is a vastly different proposition. Could I have three or four minutes more?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will yield the gentleman two minutes additional.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Cotton does enter, however, into the overalls of the farmer. It does enter into the calico that his children and his wife wear. It does enter into nearly every kind of clothing except that which is made out of wool, and wool has been seized upon by the Government, its market determined, its price fixed, and men are asking why. I do not want to be hypercritical; I do not want to array one section against another.

I have friends who live in the Southland who differ from me politically whom I love and respect. I can not think in terms of sectionalism, but this is a fair proposition when your own men and your own communities put the question to you——

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I will.

Mr. WINGO. What was the price of wheat in October, 1913?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The price of wheat in October, 1913, was around $1.25.

Mr. WINGO. What is the price now?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Recently, $1.75 to $2.

Mr. WINGO. Two dollars and twenty cents is the price.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Yes; but I am talking about what the farmer actually gets for it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The maximum.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The maximum at the primary market.

Mr. WINGO. That is true in reference to cotton. When you speak of 30-cent cotton you do not mean the farmer gets it.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. No.

Mr. WINGO. When you speak of $2.20 wheat you do not mean the farmer gets $2.20 a bushel for it.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. It means the same, but the Government has seized upon those two northern products, that is unquestioned. Now, why not upon cotton——

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I will.

Mr. WINGO. I will be frank, I do not believe in price fixing, but I voted——

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I agree with the gentleman——

Mr. WINGO. But I voted for fixing the price on wheat because I thought you wheat gentlemen wanted it in order to aid your farmers, so I overcome my theories in this case because I thought that we were calling upon you to furnish additional food; and the reason I voted for it, if you should ask me, was because I thought you wheat growers wanted it and the Government made a price that was twice what was considered a high price in peace times, in order to get the production and aid the wheat farmer.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Is it not a fact that they appropriated $1,700,000 for spring wheat, and they excluded the South and gave it to everybody in the West and North? Was not that sectionalism?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. That was loaned.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute in which to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield one minute to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. If the Government commandeers the wool of the country and leaves cotton free, what will be the effect upon the price of cotton in the near future?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. It will go into the sky, in my judgment, from the natural law of supply and demand.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman know what the market has been doing lately?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I know it has been fluctuating very little.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Does not the gentleman know that cotton has been artificially depressed $50 a bale in the last few days?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I am perfectly willing for you to explain why the Government seizes wool and wheat and does not seize cotton.

Mr. CRAMTON. The market first commenced to fluctuate immediately upon the introduction of the Emerson bill, which proposed to fix the price of cotton.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. These questions and answers at least suggest that men are sensitive on the cotton question. The price of wheat in 1916 had gone up in common with other commodities. The price of cotton had also risen. The price of wheat was fixed by Executive action at a much less figure than it was then commanding in the market. No effort was made to fix the price of cotton until an effort was on foot to secure $2.50 wheat. At that time Mr. EMERSON, of Ohio, introduced a bill to fix the price of cotton. Both bills were referred to the committee for action at the same time. The cotton growers became alarmed. The following telegram was sent to Secretary McAdoo:

The introduction of the Emerson bill, fixing the price of cotton at 20 cents, has had a most demoralizing effect which, if not promptly counteracted, will materially decrease the liberty-loan subscriptions in the South. A summary reduction to 20 cents of stock now held in the South will mean serious financial embarrassment and will to a great extent affect the ability of our citizens to take bonds. We do not believe it possible that such an ill-considered and ruinous bill can be adopted by Congress, but the fear caused by the pendency of such legislation may, and probably will, if not immediately withdrawn, accomplish disastrous results. The critical nature of the situation warrants us in bringing the matter to your attention, and urging you to issue promptly some encouraging statement, and to take such steps as may be best calculated to prevent such a calamity to this section, and a serious setback to the liberty loan in the South. Signed, James F. Butler, chairman of the liberty loan executive committee; John F. Clark, president New Orleans Cotton Exchange.

The same paper that published this telegram made the following statement, "Government takes over all raw wool."

On April 19 the following appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

PRICE OF COTTON.

Mr. OVERMAN. I send to the desk a telegram which I have received from the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], who is attending the funeral of the late Senator Broussard. I ask that the Secretary may read the telegram.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 18, 1918.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Reported from Washington that EMERSON, of Ohio, introduced House bill to fix price of cotton 20 cents; causing demoralization in all branches in the cotton market. After conference with our cotton friends and bankers here, I urge you to make public statement immediately that no bill fixing price of cotton could pass unless it fixed prices on all articles made from cotton, including textiles; also on all products of the farm; also on manufactured articles of all kinds, upon the same basis.

JOSEPH E. RANSDELL.

One gentleman has suggested that cotton dropped. It did when there was talk of the Government fixing the price. If you will note in the telegram put in the RECORD by Senator OVERMAN the cotton raisers insist that if the price of cotton be fixed, then the price on all articles made from cotton, all textiles, all products of the farm, all manufactured articles of all kinds that have in any way to do with cotton shall also be fixed. If that is fair for the cotton growers, why is it not fair for the growers of wool and wheat?

The northern farmer feels that the Government is discriminating against him. In view of all the facts no man can doubt it. It may be unintentional but the facts remain.

I close as I began. Wheat and wool, two products of the northern farmer, have been seized upon by the Government, the market determined, and price fixed. No price fixed on the products manufactured from wheat and wool. Cotton is king; why? Is it not pertinent to ask, "Can the king do no wrong?"

But some one asks, Were there no farmers that determined the price of wheat? There were. They were in the minority. They asked for $2.50 wheat; were voted down. They asked for $2.35 wheat; were voted down again. They scaled all the way down; outvoted every time. Not even $2.21 would be allowed, but $2.20 at primary markets. Two dollars and twenty cents was the heaven-born price. The northern farmers' two staple crops, wheat and wool, were seized upon. No staple southern crop has thus far been seized upon. Why? It is still true, the poor pay more for their bread, the farmer gets less for his wheat, cotton is untouched. Why?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON].

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of no quorum, and evidently there is none. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 11945, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, and that he presented therewith the names of the absentees for insertion in the Journal and the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its sitting.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] five minutes.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to this bill as a whole, but at the way it has come before Congress, and I do not propose to support it. The Committee on Agriculture spent about two weeks holding hearings and considering this bill by items. This bill comes before us in bulk. In the first section the Book of Estimates gave us an estimate of $1,269,655 for certain items, and the committee reduced it by $210,680, appropriating $1,058,975. That amount includes 10 separate items, but in the bill it is in bulk; and I claim that under the provision all the money can be expended on any one item. It does not seem fair that this Congress should vote for a bill that takes $11,712,283 in bulk without knowing what the money is to be used for.

There are a number of items in here. For instance, there is the item for "making cottage cheese on the farm, $80,000." I know that most of the women on the farm know how to make cottage cheese, providing they have surplus milk to make it with. In the next section there are 25 different items, for which it was proposed to appropriate $876,300, and the appropriation provided in the bill is $811,300, or a reduction of the estimates of $65,000. I defy anyone on the floor of the House here to tell what they are voting for when they vote for this bill. The next section appropriates $6,135,000, with a reduction in the committee of $35,000. That includes 11 items. The next section is the Bureau of Markets, which appropriates $2,136,028, and a reduction by the committee of $232,930. This includes 10 items. It is this way throughout the entire bill. Under the present arrangement I think this bill ought to be recommitted and brought in with the provisions set forth in detail as it was considered by the committee. I shall oppose the measure in its present form, especially when it comes to be debated under the five-minute rule. It is unfair to the Members of this House. It is unbusinesslike. There is not a particle of business judgment shown in it. It is unfair to bring in a bill of this kind carrying $11,712,283, and ask for a vote on it in bulk, without our knowing what is intended to be done. I hope the House will recommit this bill at the proper time and order the committee to bring in a bill properly framed, so that the House will know what it is asked to vote on.

Here are some further items in the Bureau of Plant Industry: Cereal-smut eradication, $110,000. Anyone who knows anything about the smut business knows that it is produced largely by fog or climatic conditions and all the money you could spend would not prevent smut.

Then there is an item for peanut conservation and utilization, $15,000. Then there is an item for farm storage of sweet potatoes, $30,000, and an item for control of cotton, truck, and forage crop disease, $137,550. Then there is an item for location of Irish-potato seed stock, $30,000, and an item for a plant-disease survey of $23,000. Then there is an item for sugar-beet nematode work, $10,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Why are not those items included in the original appropriation bill rather than in a supplemental bill?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. This is an increase. This provides for an increase all along the line. It is for extension work and provides for about 6,000 additional men.

Mr. FESS. Why were not the increases placed in the original appropriation bill?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. That is a question that I can not answer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the time is already allotted.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print these papers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. To give you an idea of the purposes for which the money was asked and the different objects for which it was to be spent, I submit the following estimates made by the different bureaus for separate work and the bulk amounts provided for in this bill:

Bureau of Animal Industry.
Eradication of cattle ticks	$191,190

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman withhold that motion? I want to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will withhold my motion.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, the passage of this bill is demanded as a necessary war measure. Its object is to increase our food supply—a thing that is very necessary. The question is whether the means provided are effective. I believe there is a much better method.

The chief means relied on is aid to farmers in combating pests and diseases that lessen his production and instructions as to methods of producing and marketing his output. This is the old method that we have been trying for years. At best it is slow in accomplishing results and is more suited to years of peace than war. The way to get quick action is to pay for what you want. Increase the price of agricultural products, and every possible effort will be made to swell the output. Turn to the agricultural reports and you will find that years of high prices for any particular grain have been followed by an increase in the acreage for its production, and low prices by a decrease. But prices do not only affect acreage. The farmer in anticipation of a crop that pays well selects for that his best land and cultivates and fertilizes it more liberally than he can afford to do for his less profitable crop.

This is illustrated in another way. While the world's prices remained low the European countries did not raise any more to the acre than we do, but since prices have been maintained at a higher level the production per acre has greatly increased. This same tendency has lately been noticeable in this country, and if prices could be maintained here at the European figures we would no doubt produce as much per acre as they do. It is not a question of skill; it is a question of economics. Nature restores the fertility of the soil slowly. If you want to hasten restoration you can do it by fertilizers, but fertilizers cost money and must be paid for in an increased price for the product.

Instead of passing this bill, which I am afraid is too much in the interest of those who are to get the jobs, the House had better accept the Senate amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill fixing the price of wheat at $2.50 per bushel instead of $2.20. With this added incentive to increased production of wheat much better results could be anticipated than from the passage of this bill. It is not too late to do that now. Only a few months will pass before the winter wheat must be sown; besides, it will insure extra care in gathering and conserving the growing crop. Apparently the Government has done everything possible to discourage the growing of wheat. It has fixed prices so wheat has for months been the cheapest and least profitable of all crops. As it is the most essential, it should have been the highest. It has been a financial sacrifice to sow it.

One thing that has made many farmers of the Northwest feel that they have not had a square deal is the fact that last fall, just before their crop came on the market, the price was fixed by the Government at $2.20, though the going price was then more than $3, a figure that the more southern wheat raisers had received for most of their year's winter wheat. On top of this came a system of grading wheat under grades established by the Agricultural Department that proved to be very unjust. Every effort was made by the Representatives and Senators in Congress from that section to secure a correction of those grades but without result. I had some personal experience under those grades, as I raised on a farm that I own near my home quite a little wheat. The grade I received was way below the milling value of the wheat and way below what it would have graded under the old Minnesota grades. I have had a good deal of experience under the old Minnesota grades, as I have sold wheat every year for many years, and for that reason know how they compare with the Federal grades.

The farmers in asking for $2.50 per bushel for wheat are not asking a favor; they are asking that a less sacrifice be demanded from them. Fixing the price has not helped them. If prices were not fixed, wheat would no doubt be twice $2.50. Mr. Hoover says it would be much more than that, and he certainly ought to know. The farmer would not complain if the prices of things he must buy were fixed at fair figures; but it is a bit tough to have the Government limit the price of his wheat to less than half of what it would naturally bring in the market and at the same time permit him to be exploited by war profiteers.

If $2.20 was a fair price when the President fixed that figure last fall, it ought to be raised now. Since then everything the farmer must buy has gone sky-high. Farm machinery, for instance, has about doubled and so has nearly everything else, including labor. In the meantime the farmer has lost much of his help, as his boys have either volunteered or been conscripted, a loss that adds greatly to his expenses.

It is insisted that laboring men in the large cities are against the increase. But labor ought to be fair. Everything is on an inflated basis. But is this opposition justified? The wages of unskilled labor, the ones most in need of cheap food, are, as a rule, more than double what they were before the war. The average person ordinarily uses less than a barrel of flour a year, and he now uses less than half a barrel. The raise asked by the farmers could not increase the cost per individual more than a dollar per year. A person whose wage has been increased more than that for each day is hardly in a position to object. The reason why labor may justly complain is due, not to what the farmer gets but the excessive profits demanded by the middlemen, especially in this part of the country. Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota has just called our attention to the fact that the retail prices of all kinds of meats in this city are more than double the retail prices in St. Paul in my State. The Government has the power to correct this injustice, which affects both the farmers and the consumers, and this should be done.

It has been urged in opposition to this increase that the farmers are opposed to it. I need not deny that. The petitions, letters, and telegrams I have received demonstrate the contrary. Despite the somewhat stepmotherly treatment that the farmers of the Northwest have received, they are thoroughly loyal and deserve better treatment. Like the great body of our citizenship they were anxious to keep our country out of this war, but when war was finally forced on us they entered the struggle with as much alacrity as any other class and have demonstrated by their acts their absolute devotion to the cause. They and their sons have volunteered for military duties and submitted cheerfully to the draft. They have subscribed liberally for Government bonds and have given generously of their time and money to the Red Cross and other war work. In making this statement I do not exclude the people of German ancestry. A Member of this House said to me recently that in several counties of his district the boys volunteered so freely that the draft became unnecessary, and that a roll call of these volunteers sounded like a roll call of the Kaiser's Army. Our citizens of German origin are justly proud of the record they made in the Civil War, and every loyal citizen of the race will be equally proud of the record they will make in this war. Their boys are in the trenches shoulder to shoulder with our boys and are doing splendid work. One of the very first to fall in France from my State was Lieut. J. P. Rosenwald, the son of an old friend of mine, Hon. J. F. Rosenwald, of Lac qui Parle County. While I sincerely mourn his loss, Minnesota is proud of the record he made. Before he fell he was twice decorated for bravery in the field. Loyalty to home and country is a German trait. Rosenwald sprang from that race and exemplified that virtue.

In the last liberty-loan drive the Minneapolis district heads the list in the liberality of its subscriptions. It almost doubled its quota. A very large share of those subscriptions came from the farmers. What we expect of every man is enthusiastic devotion to our country's cause. We can do a great deal to create such devotion by removing every reason for just complaint and by encouraging those who do well. The farmers have done splendidly. Why not treat them more fairly? Their request for $2.50 per bushel for wheat will make it possible for many of them to aid the country still more by increasing the production of this important crop. It is the practical, the fair, the effective way to secure this necessary increase.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the war and what is coming out of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR ON MONDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense on next Monday with the business which is then in order under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with the business on next Monday that is in order under the rules. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, does not seem to be on the floor at the moment, and——

Mr. GLASS. Yes; here he is.

Mr. WINGO. I am glad he has come. I would be glad if he would take the responsibility on himself.

Mr. GLASS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I desire to move on next Monday a suspension of the rules to take from the Speaker's desk the Senate bill authorizing the national banks to make contributions to the Red Cross. If that is not done immediately, it will be unnecessary later, because the Red Cross inaugurates its campaign, I believe, to-day for this fund. I very much wanted to get consideration for that bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Could the gentleman say that at 5 o'clock he would make that motion, if it would be agreeable to the House? He would have the right to do that anyway. Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request for unanimous consent so that it will not interfere at 5 o'clock with making the motion desired by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the gentleman that I will be here all day Monday, and one hour would suit me as well as any other hour.

Mr. KITCHIN. I modify the request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's modification?

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] shakes his head at the proposed modification.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I can not give consent to giving the bill mentioned by the gentleman from Virginia any privileged status.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Speaker would recognize the gentleman from Virginia if we did not dispense with the business on Monday by unanimous consent. The Speaker could recognize the gentleman at any time and he would have the right to move to suspend the rules. Dispensing with the business on Monday does not give him the right to do that; it does not change the status; it does not commit the House to vote on it; any Member could move to adjourn or make the point of no quorum. It would be in order to make a motion to suspend the rules at 3 or 5 o'clock just as if we did not dispense with the business by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Would there not be this difference, that the Speaker might not recognize the gentleman if we do not dispense with the business next Monday?

Mr. KITCHIN. Then we could make the modification that if he can get the Speaker to recognize him.

Mr. GLASS. I think the Speaker and I will take care of that.

Mr. FESS. If unanimous consent is granted, there would not be over 40 minutes' debate on the bill mentioned by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. KITCHIN. It would be 40 minutes, 20 minutes on a side. If we dispensed with the business in order on Monday and the gentleman is recognized by the Speaker, it could not take over 20 minutes on a side anyway.

Mr. FESS. And we would save the balance of the day.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. And there would be this added advantage, that notice would be given that the bill of the gentleman from Virginia would be taken up at a certain hour.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What would be the order of business on Monday?

Mr. KITCHIN. Going on with the Agricultural bill. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request, with the modification that at 5 o'clock it may be in order for the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], if he gets recognition from the Chair, to move to suspend the rules on the bill he has mentioned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that business in order next Monday be dispensed with, except that at 5 o'clock the gentleman from Virginia may move to suspend the rules on the bill in regard to the contribution by national banks to the Red Cross.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that is predicated on the committee rising.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that in making these recognitions for suspension of the rules he feels under obligations to Congress and the country to recognize first gentlemen who have bills that pertain to the carrying on of the war. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in the event unanimous consent is granted, with the provision for the consideration of the bill mentioned by the gentleman from Virginia at 5 o'clock, how much time would there be under the motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes on a side.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. It could easily be concluded on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair figures it out that on a motion to suspend the rules, if any Members are in any way pugnacious, they might string it out to 1 hour and 25 minutes, but not longer than that.

Mr. CRAMTON. May I inquire if the request contemplates that there will be any other motions to suspend the rules on Monday?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Sunday, May 19, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CROSSER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10887) to amend the act entitled "An act for the appointment of a sealer and assistant sealer of weights and measures in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1895, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 578), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MILLER of Washington: A bill (H. R. 12177) to conserve and increase the industrial man power of the United States; to increase the efficiency of the military and naval forces thereof; enlarging the powers of the Public Health Service by creating and establishing a Division of Venereal Diseases therein; providing for the punishment of immoral persons afflicted with venereal disease who go or attempt to go from one political division into another, and persons who assist or connive at the same; establishing internment hospitals; authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish all needful rules and regulations relating to the subject matter of this act; and authorizing an appropriation therefor; to the committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SEARS: A bill (H. R. 12178) to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. NEELY: A bill (H. R. 12179) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near the city of Fairmont, W. Va.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MOON: Resolution (H. Res. 349) to pay Mrs. Kittie Ivins, widow of Eugene E. Ivins, late an employee of the House, a sum equal to six months' compensation; to the Committee on Accounts.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 350) to pay Mrs. Joseph I. Howe, daughter of Benjamin F. Craycroft, late an employee of the House, the sum not exceeding $250; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. EMERSON: Resolution (H. Res. 351) requesting the Department of Justice to investigate rent profiteering and recommend legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARNHART: A bill (H. R. 12180) granting an increase of pension to John W. Wareham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12186) granting an increase of pension to Ezeriah Fiske; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 12187) to cancel allotments made to four members of the Wintu Tribe of Indians on the public domain in California; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SCULLY: A bill (H. R. 12188) granting a pension to Annie F. Baurer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WINGO: A bill (H. R. 12189) granting a pension to Daisy East; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Resolution of the select and common councils of the city of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring legislation prohibiting the use of the German language in all public gatherings; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DALE of Vermont: Petition of the Automobile Club of Vermont, indorsing a resolution adopted by the meeting of the highway transportation committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America for the creation of a centralized Federal authority to determine the Government's highway policy; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. EMERSON: Memorial of the City Council of Cleveland, Ohio, asking action in rent-profiteering situation; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HAMILTON of New York: Petition of the Philetus Bible Class of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Gowanda, N. Y., and of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Dewittville, N. Y., favoring the prohibition of the beverage liquor traffic during the period of the war as a war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Jamestown and Westfield, N. Y., favoring the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH: Memorial of the Cadiz Band and John Howard and A. C. Long, of Cadiz, Ohio, protesting against any change in original melody of "The Star-Spangled Banner" if adopted as national anthem and favoring such adoption; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OSBORNE: Resolution of the members of the Grand Army of the Republic, departments of California and Nevada, in annual encampment assembled at Oakland, Cal., May 8, 1918, approving of the declaration of war by the United States against Germany and pledging to the President and to the Congress of the United States their loyal support; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolution of the Los Angeles County (Cal.) Medical Association, May 10, 1918, recommending to Congress that it appropriate the amount of money necessary for the erection of a new Army museum and the maintenance thereof in accordance with the recommendations of the Surgeon General of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolution of the Commercial Board of Los Angeles, Cal., adopted at its meeting of May 8, 1918, against sympathetic disloyalty; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of 134 citizens of Oklahoma City, Okla., for the enactment of war prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TEMPLE: Petitions of the general committee of Home Missions of the United Presbyterian Church of North America and Geneva congregation of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Beaver Falls, Pa., protesting against the legalizing of Sunday baseball in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. TIMBERLAKE: Resolution of the Congregational Church of Longmont, Colo., favoring prohibition applied to all intoxicating beverages; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, May 19, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. BROWNING].

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our God and our Father, whose name is sacred to the heart of every true man, and who is the inspiration of every noble deed which reflects itself on the pages of history, sacred and profane, in song and story, in monuments of bronze and granite, we thank Thee for that quality of soul in man which recognizes in his fellows willing and faithful service to his fellow men.

We are here to-day to record on the pages of history the life, character, and public service of such a man. May those who knew him best speak in terms of eloquence of his deeds. A man of great parts, successful in his business ventures, true to his convictions, he served his State and Nation with fidelity and patriotic zeal and leaves behind him a record worthy of emulation—a trusted friend, a devoted husband, a loving father.

We mourn his going and our sympathies go out to his colleagues, friends, and those to whom he was nearest and dearest by the ties of kinship. Comfort them, we beseech Thee, in the blessed thought that he lives to a nobler life and has gone to prepare a place for those whom he loved, and that in Thine own good time he shall receive them in a realm where sorrows never come and love lives on forever.

Hear us and strengthen us to do Thy will and prepare us for the change, which in the dispensation of Thy providence waits upon us all, in the name of Him whose spirit lives in the hearts of men, to inspire, uphold, and sustain, now and evermore. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the special order.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE JOHN H. CAPSTICK.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. BROWNING, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That Sunday, May 19, 1918, be set aside for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. JOHN H. CAPSTICK, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, several Members of the House who expected to speak to-day are unavoidably absent. I ask unanimous consent that any Members, those who speak or those who do not, who desire so to do, may extend by printing in the RECORD their remarks on the life, character, and public services of our late friend.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 352.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tribute to the memory of Hon. JOHN H. CAPSTICK, late a member of this House from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The question was taken and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, JOHN H. CAPSTICK was born September 2, 1856, at Lawrence, Mass. It seems to me that that town and its history were an inspiration to the boy. It was one of the mill towns on the Merrimac River. I knew it well only a few years afterwards when I went to school at Andover, Mass. It was created by those merchant princes and public benefactors, the brothers Amos and Abbott Lawrence, who put their mills there and had ended their long, useful, and patriotic lives only a year or two before our friend was born. Their memory is still green in New England and throughout the United States for business ability, activity, and energy in production and in fostering public improvement, for their public benefactions, for their beneficence, and their devotion to duty and faithful service in public office; and that memory must have been an inspiration to that little boy in the town of Lawrence.

Mills have always been the support of that town. The cotton factories of the brothers Lawrence were followed shortly by other factories, such as woolen and paper mills and the manufacture of steam engines. The water power had been developed and was the foundation for the mills.

Our friend's father, John Capstick, an Englishman by birth, was one of those who gave prosperity to the town. He was a practical chemist in dyes and colors for textile fabrics, a most useful and complicated profession whose need we are only now learning with reference to dyestuffs and the fact that they have been made recently abroad rather than here. The boy was brought up and spent his life in this skilled profession. While he was still a schoolboy only 12 years old, the family moved to Providence, R. I., where he found himself in a broader atmosphere, not only one of mills but of the university and the State government and where he attended the Morey and Goff College, a technical higher school of that day. He was even then an ardent American and became a member of Rhode Island's crack First Light Infantry. In 1883, when he was 27 years old, the father and sons moved to Montville, N. J., a few miles east of Boonton, where they established their own dye works under the name of John Capstick & Sons. The works were successful, the town is their town, and the ground around was almost altogether owned by the firm. Our friend built his home, where he lived and died, on the hill above the dye works. Those works a few years ago were burned and torn down.

But his life occupation had already grown out of the works. He had become vice president of the Morristown Trust Co. In 1905 he was made a member of the State sewage commission, a most important work in our thickly settled State. In 1908 he became a member of the State board of health, and his associates immediately chose him as their president. He remained in these duties until he was elected to Congress as a Republican in 1914. He was again elected in 1916. We expected a long service of him, but his health failed. He never thoroughly recovered, and he died on March 17, 1918, at the early age of 62.

His work here shows that he loved what he had to do as a Member. He was full of patriotic energy.

In May, 1916, when we enlarged the Regular Army after the service on the border, he printed a speech saying that the bill should have been stronger; that an Army is an essential factor of safety and protection in emergency; that sparks from the flames of Europe have been carried in our direction; "several times critical conditions have arisen; to-morrow may demand that we face others; history shows that the powers that have lived the longest have been the strongest in security and protection; armament is provocative of war only when it has been procured for aggression, and the fact that we have unlimited resources is only an invitation to attack, a greater invitation to attack unless we utilize wealth and opportunities as means of security and protection, but in order to increase and not diminish our influence in promoting peace; and the cost of preparedness now would be nothing compared with the cost of repelling a foreign invasion."

I would have liked to read all this speech, but I have selected his own words from parts of it.

He offered in that Congress a resolution that soldiers' mail should be carried free. In the speech he printed on the subject he urged that such a measure would be an incentive to soldiers to write oftener, as well as encouragement to the folks at home to write to their boys, to whom letters from home mean so much.

He printed a speech on the merchant marine, another on the proper and kindly transportation of cattle, and another with his resolution—I doubt whether it was introduced except by that speech—to provide every soldier who went to the border with a service honor flag that he might leave at home as a memento. All his speeches show his great heart.

In the Sixty-fourth Congress he was a member of the Committee on Claims. It was a very hard-working committee, and he did, at least, his share. I have gone over 35 careful reports which he wrote and filed himself during his short service. They are, of course, on business matters and not generally interesting to us all, but it is the kind of work that makes Congress a useful body.

He was most regular in attendance, devoted to his work, and showed sound judgment and care in the preparation of these reports.

In the Sixty-fifth Congress he was assigned to the Committee on Banking and Currency, but he was too ill to take the active part which he certainly would if health had remained.

We all know how devoted he was to home and to its duties and to its privileges. His wife was Ella F. Blake, of Boston. He was altogether a good citizen and neighbor. He was respected and loved by all who knew him. His geniality and generosity were always marked. Among other things, he loved music. He played the violin and the piano. Even on his deathbed his violin was by his side. He even remodeled his house and added a large music room and a beautiful organ, at the time that his wife and himself were left alone after the death of their only daughter and when he wished to take his dear wife's thoughts away from constant grief.

His funeral was attended by men from all over our State of New Jersey, as well as from New York and Massachusetts. We were all sincere mourners at his grave.

His memory will live with those who knew him as an honorable, true, and brave man who loved his country. Perhaps we could use the words:

Write me as one who loves his fellow men.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] is recognized.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, after hearing the story of Mr. CAPSTICK's life told by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], I regret that I did not know him more intimately.

I did not have the honor and privilege to meet him often. My acquaintance with him was not of an intimate nature. During this Congress we were assigned to the Committee on Banking and Currency, but illness prevented that attendance which I am sure it would have pleased him to give. I am certain that with his wide business experience, could he have been able to attend the committee meetings, his advice would have been very valuable.

In reading the life story of the Congressman I read the same story that the average American boy and man must go through to secure the confidence of the community in which he resides. He must have the confidence of his business associates that he meets with in daily life to secure the eminence that Mr. CAPSTICK attained. The high esteem and regard in which he was held by those who knew him best could not have been attained except by his careful attention to the business he was engaged in and his ideas of commercial honesty. I read that he was successful in his business; that in whatever he did he was most painstaking and industrious and gave the occupation he was engaged in his most careful attention. I do not wonder that he was successful in commercial life.

He was highly honored by the governor of his State, and by his fidelity to the trust placed in him was further appreciated, and greater honors were bestowed on him; and his associates on the State board of health for the State of New Jersey elected him to the presidency of the board, showing their appreciation of his services.

No wonder his neighbors and his home people decided to send him to broader fields of action. They elected him to represent them in Congress. They knew and trusted him and had faith in his fidelity to his people, to his State, and to the flag of our country.

No doubt Mr. CAPSTICK put the same energy in his work in Congress that made him so successful in business. Probably he overdid—there is so much to do at the Capitol—for a Member of Congress can be busy every moment, especially if interested in the work that comes to him.

We shall miss Mr. CAPSTICK. No man of his character and business abilities would pass unnoticed in the House of Representatives. Ability is recognized and asserts its way among the membership. It is a great honor to be a Member of the Congress of the United States, to possess the confidence of the home people, and I am sure he had that confidence.

We know not why men are called away from life when it seems they have just arrived at the period of great usefulness and helpfulness to mankind. Humanity can but demonstrate the fact of what has happened; only Infinity can explain it.

In our associations with Members from every portion of our country we make personal friendships never to be forgotten. Since my coming to Congress many Members have passed away and are no more; but their hearty welcome, their friendly greetings, and their friendship will never be forgotten as long as memory lasts. Loving hands have laid away Mr. CAPSTICK. Those that knew him best, that were his intimate associates, remember him as a good friend and neighbor, and they will miss him in their daily life, they will be better for having known him; for, as I read the story of his achievements, I am sure his "life was worth the living."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BACHARACH] is recognized.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, once again the inevitable hand of death has been laid upon a Member of this House; and, in accordance with its beautiful and time-honored custom, we are assembled here this afternoon to pay public tribute to the life, character, and public service of a departed colleague who has answered the summons of his Master and has rendered an account of his stewardship.

On this occasion we are gathered here to pay tribute to the memory of one of New Jersey's adopted sons and distinguished citizens, JOHN H. CAPSTICK, late Representative of the fifth congressional district, who died at his home in Montville, Morris County, on Sunday, March 17, 1918.

Mr. CAPSTICK was born in Lawrence, Mass., where he dwelt with his parents until the age of 12, when his family moved to Rhode Island. It was there that he received his early education in the public and private schools of Providence.

His father, John Capstick, was a chemist of considerable ability and a practical business man, who specialized in the coloring and printing of textile fabrics.

With his family he migrated to the State of New Jersey in 1883, where he erected a factory at Montville and established the business of printing and dyeing, under the firm name of John Capstick & Sons, consisting of himself and his two sons, John H. and Thomas.

By hard work and the application of good sound business principles success followed their undertaking, and in a few years the name and reputation of Capstick & Sons was well and favorably known throughout the field of textile commercialism.

Following the death of his father, JOHN H. CAPSTICK succeeded to the head of the business, which was continued without change in name. The high order of business ability which he had inherited from his father and which he had developed by close attention to the minutest details of the work well equipped him for the duties which devolved upon him.

Possessed of a strong and vigorous make-up, both mentally and physically, he put into his new responsibilities those energies which characterize the virile man of business. Under the impetus which his leadership gave to the business, increased success attended the enterprise with great rapidity, and not only did it bring wealth to the owners, but it soon became the leading industry of the little village, bringing much happiness and contentment to the community.

It was more than a business to him; it was a living institution, with possibilities of growth and usefulness which awakened his enthusiasm and inspired in him almost filial regard. No labors were too exacting that would contribute to its growth and prestige, for he knew that its expansion and prosperity meant more to the hundreds of men and women in its employ than it did to him.

His tremendous power for work and his ability to do big things was an inspiration to those associated with him to do their best for the mutual success and prosperity of all. By the application of methods of efficiency and the loyalty of those associated with him he developed a very excellent organization, and in the latter years of his life he was able to intrust the operation of the factory to subordinates and to give some of his time and ability to the welfare of his community, his State, and the Nation.

He took an active part in all local civic affairs. In 1906 he was elected as a member of the board of directors of the Morristown Trust Co., one of the largest and strongest financial institutions in north Jersey; in 1911 he was elected as one of its vice presidents, which office he held at the time of his death. I append herewith a copy of the resolution adopted by the board of directors of that institution upon the death of their colleague:

Whereas the board of directors of the Morristown Trust Co., of Morristown, N. J., has learned with profound regret of the death on March 17, 1918, of their associate, Hon. JOHN H. CAPSTICK, of Montville, N. J.; and

Whereas Mr. CAPSTICK has served continuously as a member of the board from April 14, 1906, and as vice president since January 14, 1911: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the board of directors of the Morristown Trust Co. hereby expresses deep sorrow at the loss of their associate, whose interest in the work of the company has been unremitting, whose character has been so admirable, and whose personality so congenial to the fellow members of this board; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the family of Mr. CAPSTICK.

WILLARD W. CUTLER,
Committee.

It was not my good fortune to know Mr. CAPSTICK intimately prior to our coming to Washington. We both entered as Members of the same Congress. In the days that followed a close intimacy developed between us which cemented a friendship that I shall ever cherish.

To my mind, JOHN H. CAPSTICK was a man of remarkably well-balanced judgment. Although conservative in his views, he was receptive to new ideas. I can readily appreciate him as a man who all through life was possessed of unusual powers of concentration and resolution, those attributes which go to make up a strong, unswerving character.

His was a personality which literally grew on one. Large in stature and possessing a countenance clear cut and well proportioned, his mannerisms at first suggested the austere; but upon becoming better acquainted with him one would find that, while reserved in manner, he was a warm, devoted, and faithful friend and an earnest, public-spirited American citizen. He was a man who had great depth of sentiment for the persons and things nearest his heart, and preferred the quiet surroundings of a beautiful home life to the gayer life of society.

Ill health prevented Mr. CAPSTICK from taking his seat in the Hall of this House when the Sixty-fifth Congress was called into extraordinary session by the President for the purpose of declaring that a state of war existed between the United States and the Imperial German Government; nor was he permitted to take up his duties at any time during the regular session.

This was a matter which caused him very great concern and much mental anguish, for he knew how important it was for him to be at his post of duty during the trying times through which our country was passing. Had he been able to be present he would have cast his vote in favor of a declaration of war, and by his every act he would have supported the Government of the United States for the prosecution of the war until a just and lasting peace should be consummated.

No one can ever question the loyalty and patriotism of JOHN H. CAPSTICK, for he was an American of the highest type in all that the name "American" implies.

His rugged constitution and his indomitable will power gave him many recurrent hopes that he would one day be able to again take his place in Congress. He put up a fight for health and life characteristic of the man, but the body was not able to longer withstand the onslaughts of disease, and early in the month of March he was compelled to again take to his bed, from which he did not arise.

There, in the constant association of a loving wife and amid the surroundings of the home which he so dearly cherished, his soul took flight from the body. The esteem and regard in which he was held by his friends, both rich and poor, was most feelingly and eloquently expressed by their attendance at his funeral and by the many beautiful floral tributes which surrounded him in death. The services were held in the home, and the simple but solemn ritual of the Episcopal Church was in harmony with the modesty of the man for whom it was recited.

He was laid to rest not far distant from his home. There, amid the scenes of his greatest activities in life, on a beautiful day in early spring, as the sun slowly but radiantly sank from view behind the hills of Morris, which he so dearly loved, the mortal body of JOHN H. CAPSTICK was laid away in its final sleep. He has gone, but his memory shall ever linger, for in the death of Mr. CAPSTICK the Nation has lost a valuable servant, the State of New Jersey a distinguished citizen, and I a lovable and true friend.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN].

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, as I arise to add a few simple words of tribute to the memory of our late colleague, JOHN H. CAPSTICK, I am reminded of our first meeting. We became acquainted almost immediately after he had taken his oath of office as a Member of the Sixty-fourth Congress. We had conversed but a few moments when he informed me that he was born and had spent his early school days in the city of Lawrence, which is located in the congressional district which I represent.

It was not until in subsequent conversations he had made frequent references to that city and those early days that I fully realized that he had especially sought me out because I did represent the city of his birth. The fond regard with which he so often referred to that city, and the tender allusions he made to his father and to his mother in speaking of those early days, manifested to me two of his most prominent characteristics, his intense loyalty and his deeply affectionate nature.

The peculiar tie which had drawn us together served to unite us in a constantly warmer and fuller friendship. I was moved, therefore, by a sentiment of distinct personal grief when death removed him from our midst.

As our friendship had developed, I had become more and more attracted by his genial good-fellowship, his whole-heartedness, and his humanly sympathetic spirit; I had come to be more and more impressed with his sound judgment, his persevering industry, his solidity, and his stability. I could understand why these virtues had gained him distinctive success in the fields of commerce. I could perceive why these same qualities could not fail, once he had entered upon a public career, to enable him to be of genuine service in public life.

That this service within his own State was of a high order is evidenced by his election to the Congress of the United States. Upon the worth of his service here I shall presume to make only brief comment.

It is difficult for us to measure the value of any one of our Members in the highly important and responsible work in which we are engrossed. At times, indeed, we become discouraged at what appears to be the lack of opportunity for an individual to be an influential factor in the legislation which we are enacting.

The individual seems to be overwhelmed by the mere force of numbers, if nothing more. As we contemplate and reflect, however, we can better perceive the full opportunity offered the individual Member through diligent application to make worthy and effective contribution to the great legislative structure which we are building. He can exercise a distinctive influence on the floor, where bills and resolutions are introduced, discussed, and passed, or in the committee room, where measures are framed.

Indeed, entirely outside these two places he can exercise a forceful influence wherever he has intercourse with his colleagues. In our views, in our attitudes on public questions, we are in some degree constantly changing, developing, and maturing. We are constantly affected by the views of our colleagues. We look to them for advice, suggestion, information, and support outside as well as inside this Chamber or the committee room. As the individual Member is affected, so the entire membership is affected, and thereby the course of legislation in some measure influenced by the intellectual power and integrity of each individual Member of this body.

A man of the constructive ability and plain honesty of purpose of JOHN H. CAPSTICK was, therefore, bound to be an effective force in the legislative accomplishment of this body. He had demonstrated his constructive capacity in the upbuilding of a highly successful business enterprise.

With his broad and extensive business training, with his capacity for accomplishment, he came to this House prepared by special qualifications to engage in constructive work. In the comparatively brief period of his service he had already given ample demonstration of his powers. We who know the essential need of men of his type in the great constructive work upon us and ahead of us can best appreciate the loss which his death has entailed.

Of JOHN H. CAPSTICK we shall ever cherish the fondest recollections. The charm of his personality will always linger in our memories. His resolute devotion to public duty will stimulate us in the vast task ahead of us.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN] is recognized.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the heavy hand of death has been laid upon the New Jersey membership in Congress four times since I became a Member of this great body five years ago—

Representative Lewis J. Martin died in 1913, Representative Robert Gunn Bremner in 1914, Senator William Hughes and Representative JOHN H. CAPSTICK in 1918.

By a strange coincidence Senator Hughes and Representatives Martin, Bremner, and CAPSTICK lived within a short distance of one another in New Jersey, and represented adjoining congressional districts. Following the time-honored and beautiful custom of Congress, we have gathered here to-day to pay our tribute of love and respect to the memory of our departed colleague and friend, JOHN H. CAPSTICK.

It was not my good fortune to know Mr. CAPSTICK intimately. I was not acquainted with him before his election to membership in this House, though, of course, I had known of his distinguished service on the State Sewage Commission and on the State Board of Health, and the commercial and banking activities in which he was engaged.

In the very short time in which it was my privilege to know him I learned to love JOHN N. CAPSTICK for his unassuming manner, his genial good nature, to respect him for his unfailing good sense, for his application to his work in this House, and for his thorough Americanism. I am sure that had he been spared for long service in Congress he would have achieved a position of distinction on the committees and on the floor of this House.

Born and educated in New England, he removed in 1883 to Montville, N. J., where, with his father and brothers, he established the print works of John Capstick & Sons, of which he ultimately became the head.

In February, 1913, the entire plant of the Capstick Company was destroyed by fire. Summoned from his bed in the early hours of the morning, Mr. CAPSTICK rushed to the scene of the conflagration without taking precautions to safeguard his health. Throughout the night he labored in the cold and wet with those gallant citizens of the community who had responded to the alarm, but their efforts were without avail.

Years of hard work and effort were reduced to ashes in a few hours. The destruction of the plant brought to a close the long and honored business career of his firm. While he felt the loss of the plant keenly on personal and sentimental grounds, he regretted much more keenly the loss to the little community in which he lived by the destruction of its chief industry.

The fire was a severe shock to his nervous system, and doubtless his death, five years later, is directly traceable to the exposure which he suffered in his efforts to check it.

Early in life Mr. CAPSTICK, believing that the interests of his country were best safeguarded under the principles expounded by Alexander Hamilton, joined the Republican party. He was always a stanch supporter of its principles and a strong believer in party organization.

Before coming to Congress Mr. CAPSTICK twice held appointive office under the government of the State of New Jersey. In 1905 he was appointed by Governor Stokes as a member of the State Sewage Commission, and three years later Governor Fort appointed him as a member of the State Board of Health. Upon the organization of the board he was chosen as its president, which position he held until 1914.

During his régime he insisted upon the rigorous enforçement of the health laws, and much new legislation was enacted which placed New Jersey among the foremost States of the Union in the matter of public health. In 1914 he resigned from the State Board of Health to accept the nomination for Congress. He was elected to the Sixty-fourth Congress, and in 1916 was reelected to the Sixty-fifth Congress.

A devoted husband and father, his untimely death has removed from our midst an able, hardworking, conscientious colleague and friend.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I had never met JOHN H. CAPSTICK personally until after his election to the Sixty-fourth Congress, but in the first clasp of his hand I realized that I was greeting a man whose friendship I would value as long as I shall live. There was a light in his eyes, a kindliness in his manner, and a tone in his voice which drew me to him as to a lifelong and intimate friend. In our service here I sought him often, and we had talks on many subjects. His opinions were always expressed in unmistakable language and with a directness calling for few words.

JOHN H. CAPSTICK was an American business man. He laid no claim to statesmanship. Yet, if his health had not failed and he could have been spared for longer service in this House, the qualities which made him a successful business man would have left their impress upon legislation. Appropriately he was assigned to membership on the great Banking and Currency Committee. This was his natural field of action, for he had been schooled by experience in the complexities of banking, having been a banker in New Jersey, where his judgment and good sense earned him the respect of his associates in business enterprises of wide scope. When this can be said of a man it is predicated upon a character molded by honest and upright dealings.

After the war cloud had come upon us, Mr. CAPSTICK wrote me a number of times from his sick chamber, deploring the fact that he was unable to be in his place here; and while to each of his letters I replied that he must be patient and defer his return until the complete recovery of his health, I, too, wished that it might be otherwise ordered, for I felt that we had need of men of his keenness of vision, breadth of mind, and practical business methods, to sit at committee tables in the preparation of legislation, and in the House to consider and vote upon the great measures necessary to strengthen the arm of the Nation for the performance of the task that had fallen upon us.

Mr. Speaker, New Jersey, like the rest of our sisterhood of States, has profited by the incoming from time to time of men descended from that dependable and sturdy people who settled on the bleak New England coast. There Mr. CAPSTICK was born and spent the early years of his life.

At the age of 27 years he came to Montville, N. J., where he, with his father and brother, established a business which prospered. Later he succeeded to its entire ownership and accumulated sufficient to justify his retirement while still in the prime of life. His keen insight, his just appraisement of men, and his own innate sense of square and fair dealing—a rare combination of attributes, but prerequisites in any legitimate field of industrial enterprise—resulted in what may be described in one word, "success." His years of patient toil, and of foresight, and directness, measured by a high standard of personal rectitude, brought him to the due reward of material success. But the laying up of treasure upon earth was not alone the aim of this man. He so lived amid the changes and chances of this mortal life that he might not lose the things eternal. He did not barter away his "inheritance incorruptible" for the temporal and evanescent things of this life.

He served the State of New Jersey for six years as president of the board of health. He engaged actively in all civic matters, to the advantage of his community. He was identified with every local charitable movement. In countless ways he rendered himself not only a foremost citizen but a public benefactor as well. In the hearts of his people the memory of this generous, kindly, and considerate man will long be cherished.

Mr. Speaker, the life of JOHN H. CAPSTICK typifies the life of many splendid American business men. Our success as an American Nation rests upon the foundation built upon the lives of such men. But it has become a sort of fashion in this country in late years to decry and denounce what is sneeringly called "big business." Little if any differentiation has been made by critics between the successful business man of good character and the comparatively few who use their wits in commercial life that they may defraud their fellows. In what may be termed a crusade against business and business men, the honest have been made to pay the penalty along with the guilty.

The life of JOHN H. CAPSTICK gives the lie completely to the accusation often heard that success and honesty can not go hand in hand. This great war in which we are engaged will, I believe, help to correct many false impressions regarding American business life. Business men upon whom in a crisis of this kind the Republic must depend largely for its source of material strength have demonstrated patriotism not by lip service but by substantial contributions to their country's need, and a self-sacrificing spirit that might well be emulated by their less sagacious and less successful compatriots.

The passing of my colleague is keenly felt as a personal loss to me and to those who knew him best. But he has left a good name and has inherited the reward of the just.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. Speaker, I did not have the privilege of intimate acquaintanceship with Mr. CAPSTICK, but I have heard the splendid eulogies pronounced upon his character and abilities by those who did know him, and I esteem it a privilege as a Member of this House to bear my own testimony to the worthiness of his character and the value of his work.

It is upon times such as these, when we are brought face to face with the inevitable fate of all mankind, that we are caused to pause, and countless questions arise in our minds. Men in all ages and in all times have been seeking what they call the highest good, each one asking himself the riddle of life and seeking to find the answer. Some have looked upon man as but a high order of brute creation, to live his brief span of years, to eat, to sleep, to work, and finally to die like the ox, to be assimilated only to the material elements that go to make up the world.

Others believe that life is but a process of training; that death is but the door which will eventually swing open to permit the soul to pass into larger realms of life and activity and usefulness. One's idea of death and the feelings of those who are near and dear to the man who is dead must necessarily be largely influenced by the conception which we have of what death means. If it be the blotting out of all that exists of humanity, if it be the period to the sentence of human life, if it be that when death comes obliteration overtakes the man, then death is, indeed, a source of sorrow; indeed, a great calamity. If, on the other hand, death be but a great adventure, a step forward in the progression of the soul; if it be, as we believe, but the passageway through which the soul must pass to enter into a realm of greater life and light, of greater love and work, then, indeed, according to our belief, while we may feel the natural longings for one who has gone, still we must at the same time rejoice that this soul has taken this advancing step in human progress.

From the testimonies which have been borne by the gentlemen who knew Mr. CAPSTICK intimately and well, we have every assurance to believe that, having lived worthily here, having developed the powers with which he was endowed, having spent his life usefully, having put his talents out at interest, as he passed through the gates ajar he heard the blessed voices say, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Mr. BROWNING resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] is recognized.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I have been called upon to-day to speak as one of Mr. CAPSTICK's committee colleagues. My recollection of him, however, is mostly as a Member of the Sixty-fourth Congress, in attendance at sessions of the House. He was not then a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, but of the Committee on Claims and the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce. Of his excellent work as a member of the Committee on Claims, you have already heard from his colleague, Hon. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER. New Jersey, although one of the great financial and industrial States, had no member of the Banking and Currency Committee in that Congress from either party, and when the present Congress was organized, Mr. CAPSTICK, who had given much of his time as a resident of New Jersey to banking and financial matters, was selected to represent his State on that great committee. I may say here that I think it somewhat unfortunate that he was not placed upon that committee in the previous Congress, so that we could have had the benefit, when the Federal farm loan act was under consideration, of his business and financial experience and sound judgment. Time has shown, I think, that some mistakes were made in that act which his experience and counsel might perhaps have helped to avoid.

I may say also that there was a special reason for assigning Mr. CAPSTICK to the Committee on Banking and Currency. His district was the district formerly represented for a long time by Hon. Charles N. Fowler, who in Republican days was the chairman of that committee, and author of much of the financial legislation of the day, as well as of bills for the reform of the banking system of the country, which were widely known but were never enacted into law. Probably in the fifth New Jersey district the Committee on Banking and Currency was better known, through Mr. Fowler's activities, than any other committee of the House of Representatives, and it was natural that Mr. CAPSTICK, whose training amply fitted him for the position, should have desired to become a member of that committee, and should have been assigned to it.

In the present Congress Mr. CAPSTICK scarcely had a chance to serve. He was taken ill before the special war session. The committee of which he was then a member reported and was successful in passing some of the most important legislation of its history, legislation without which the financing of the gigantic struggle in which our country is engaged, could not have been successfully accomplished. As to some of this legislation we, his colleagues, knew that we had his support and approval. Doubtless all of it would have had his approval if he had not been too ill to consult. We missed him, for there were times when the argument was close and when the counsel of a practical business man of his large experience would have made the path of sound finance easier. We frequently inquired of his New Jersey colleagues as to his condition and what the prospects were of his speedy return to duty, and were disheartened when we seldom received encouraging reports, though the malady, so baffling to his physicians, seemed at times on the point of being mastered.

Mr. CAPSTICK was a man whom we all respected and admired, a man not only of good, sound business judgment but a man of refinement, fond of such of the finer things of life as good music. We was not an old man; and the fact that he was called away from his service here during this critical year of war at the age of 62, just when his service would have been most useful to his country and to the people of his State and district, just when he himself would have felt that his service could have been of the highest usefulness, is a matter of the greatest regret to us all.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, by the death of JOHN H. CAPSTICK this House has lost a valuable Member, New Jersey a loyal citizen, and the Republican Party a stanch supporter.

People of a democracy seldom make a mistake in choosing men for public office, and in the selection of JOHN H. CAPSTICK the fifth district of New Jersey used exceptional foresight and judgment.

He was a man of strong convictions and well educated, possessing qualifications characteristic of his ancestry, which could be traced back to that band of Pilgrims that settled on the New England coast and laid the foundation for the Nation which it was afterwards his privilege to serve.

During his entire life he displayed habits of industry and frugality, and won for himself the confidence of all who knew him. His keen insight in the commercial and financial field, as well as his ever-increasing interest in matters pertaining to the civic and national welfare, marked him as a man of affairs, and his judgment was frequently sought and always freely given, for JOHN H. CAPSTICK was the type of man that never tired of doing good.

He was born in the city of Lawrence, Mass., September 2, 1856, moving to Providence, R. I., at the age of 12 years, where he completed his education and gained the business experience that shaped his future career.

He followed the business of his father, who by profession was a chemist and colorist, and after moving to Montville, N. J., in 1883, he established the firm of John Capstick & Sons, textile manufacturers, where by hard work, honest and straightforward business methods he became successful both commercially and financially, and always regarded his success as an increased responsibility for greater usefulness to mankind.

He retired from the textile business but remained active in the banking institution with which he was connected, and was largely instrumental in making the Morristown Trust Co. one of the leading banking houses in the East.

A man of culture and refinement, a lover of music and the things that make life beautiful, he preferred to leave the allurement of public office to others and spend his time in the companionship of his devoted wife and together enjoy the fruit of their labor. But his ability having been recognized the call was insistent and he was pressed into the service of his State and he served New Jersey faithfully and well as president of the State board of health for six years and as a member of the State sewerage commission for two years.

It was only natural when the time came for the people of the fifth congressional district to choose their Representative that they should select such a man, and the confidence reposed in JOHN H. CAPSTICK was never betrayed.

He came to the Sixty-fourth Congress with a rich experience acquired by years of diligent study in the business world, fully conversant with the needs of the Nation, and by untiring devotion to his duty demonstrated such ability as to mark him one of the most dependable, energetic, and useful of the newer Members.

His constituency appreciated the value of his service and renewed the honor by a threefold confidence, but the hand of disease was laid heavily on their favorite son and he was forbidden the opportunity of having a part in solving the great problems of war.

During the long period of his suffering he followed the trend of national affairs with an eagerness found only in real men, and his last appearance in this House, made against the wishes of those who loved him best, was the supreme sacrifice he made in the service of his country.

JOHN H. CAPSTICK was a man among men, true to his trust, a faithful husband and stanch friend, ready and waiting for the call that summoned him to his reward.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any higher tribute that could be paid to anyone when he comes to the end of life than to have so lived that he has gained the confidence and respect of all men with whom he has associated, regardless of political views. No man could have achieved the success that our departed colleague achieved, no one could have been so universally respected by his associates and those who knew him intimately, without being a man of unquestioned integrity and high character. As you read the story of his life and the success that he achieved in a business way you are impressed with the fact that the greatest factor of success is the personal element, the confidence and respect which one earns from those who depend more upon the character of men than any obligation or security they can give.

It was not my good fortune to know our departed colleague as intimately as some of those who have spoken here to-day. Dealing, as our Committee on Banking and Currency does, with great questions, it is a matter of genuine regret that during this Congress his ill health prevented him from giving us the benefit of his experience and the wisdom that comes from that experience in the consideration of our legislative program. The life and character of JOHN CAPSTICK and the high esteem in which he was held by his colleagues in this House and the fact that, regardless of any sectional relationship or party affiliation, he had the respect of Members on both sides of the aisle is but typical of the spirit and illustrative of the character of the House of Representatives. This House is truly a representative body, representative of the greatest, the freest, the most practical yet the most liberal democracy in the world. Character and ability, industry and devotion to duty, honesty of purpose and love of country are the things that determine one's standing in this body—these are the only coins that pass current here.

Mr. Speaker, it is true in this House, as it is in every other walk of life, that frequently men are stricken down right at the point when they have reached the maturity of their powers and high tide of their efficiency. We do not quarrel with the Divine purpose—our finite minds can not question the wisdom of the infinite—but in spite of our dutiful acceptance and submission to the Divine will, we regret that men like CAPSTICK should at the hour when they have reached the fullest capacity and right at the time when, by reason of the standing they have earned and the respect which their character, their integrity, their ability, and their experience have won, they can be of greatest service to the community and the Nation, they are stricken by ill health and pass away. It may be, Mr. Speaker, as I grow older I notice these things more and more, but I have been more impressed with this fact during the last two sessions of Congress than ever before. We have lost men of simple yet forceful character, like CAPSTICK, that the Nation could ill afford to lose in this trying time, because if there ever was a time in the history of this Nation that we needed men of experience in this body it is now. His experience as a Member of this body had just reached that point where he could be of real practical service to the Nation. His ability and character would have given him an influence in shaping legislation that we are now enacting and which we must enact of even greater importance in the future. We all know as a practical proposition that, however distinguished a man's ability and however great his experience and character may be in other walks of life, it takes that experience and knowledge that comes from active service in this House to equip a man for real service in this body. I have not undertaken to speak at length of the life and character of Mr. CAPSTICK. These have been fully covered by those who knew him intimately and were qualified to speak as they have done to-day. I simply content myself with saying that, from what I knew of the man, from the genuine expressions of regret that have fallen from the lips of his colleagues to-day, the obviously sincere tribute which they have paid to him lead us all to the conclusion that it is a matter of genuine regret not simply to those of you who come from the Commonwealth of New Jersey, not simply to those of you who belong to the same political party to which he belonged, not simply to his business associates, but it is a matter of regret to the entire Nation that men like CAPSTICK fall right at the time when he could have been of greatest service to his country and to his fellow men.

Mr. GRAY of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, what is the greatest thing a man can do? There can be as many different answers to this question as there are different human desires, philosophies, and creeds.

As the world goes to-day, we might expect that a majority of men would answer that the greatest thing a man can do is to get wealth. They know that the degree of a man's success is popularly measured by the amount of money he possesses.

A much smaller number would answer that fame is more desirable than wealth and is a worthier acquisition. Perhaps the two are not unrelated. How many seek money for its own sake and how many because with it they can purchase prominence? However, real fame has a more intellectual basis than this, such as unusual accomplishment in art, science, morals, or religion.

Wealth and fame are probably the two objects most commonly sought by men, yet a man may attain both to an extraordinary degree and not be a great man. In fact, a man may be great in many respects and not be a great man. He may be a great banker or a great philanthropist or a great statesman or a great general or a great preacher and not be a great man. A great man is a broad man. He is to be measured not alone by what he has accomplished, but by what he is; and what he is is what his mind is, what his soul is.

It is truth that makes men free, and a man is great according to his soul capacity for truth. He is a great man when, stripped of prejudice and bias and superstition and fear, he looks all things squarely in the face and seeks in all things to know and do the truth.

I did not know JOHN H. CAPSTICK very well, but what I knew of him I knew well. He had acquired wealth and fame to a degree that lifted him above the mass of his fellowmen; yet I do not know that he consciously strived for either wealth or fame. He was of the type of men who find joy in mere achievement. He was a successful man, but it would be incorrect to say that he was a great man. At the same time, he approached greatness, as the meaning of the word has here been suggested, by possessing an innate love of truth and a detestation of sham and pretense and hypocrisy. All of us who were associated with him in the House knew that nothing marred his serenity so much as listening to a speech he was satisfied was not sincere. Also was his heart always set on voting right, according to what he considered to be his duty; and when he found his feelings divided on a question or his judgment uncertain it caused him grave worry and concern. No Member of the House of Representatives felt more keenly the responsibility of his membership in the "War Congress" than did Mr. CAPSTICK.

Thus do I pay him my brief tribute. Simple though it be, it is not insignificant. Through his own effort and industry he acquired wealth, position, and influence, which he tried conscientiously to use for the betterment of his country and his fellow beings. While the soul finds enfranchisement in truth, to few, indeed, is the freedman's full title given. Hence, that man has well achieved of whom it can rightfully be said, as it can of JOHN H. CAPSTICK, that his sincere desire was to give back to the world in full measure for that which he had received and that all the ends he aimed at were his country's, his God's, and truth's.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker—

> Friend after friend departs:
> Who hath not lost a friend?
> There is no union here of hearts
> That finds not here an end.

We come here from all parts of the country unknown to each other. We come here, many of us, perhaps all of us, with limitations of a very different life from that we find here. In many instances we have our provincialisms, we have our neighborhood surroundings, associations, and habits of life and thought. We come here to a larger and broader sphere of action, and the horizon of our vision broadens very much. Perhaps before we come here we may have very limited conceptions and narrow feelings. Perhaps we may be influenced by very partisan conceptions, but in our associations here the vision of life broadens and we gather a higher and a better and a broader conception of men and of life and of purpose. As we mix here one with the other in our associations we are elevating ourselves into a higher conception and better understanding of human character and human life and human purposes. We broaden ourselves by our associations and our minglings with each other. We may do that by our associations in likeness of thought and also in the very contest of opposed thoughts. After we have been here we form our personal attachments. There is one thing of which we are all proud and that is in our personal attachments, in our affection, one for the other, in our esteem and in our admiration there is no middle aisle of division or separation.

There is no line of demarcation that separates or that limits our admiration and our esteem for that which is honorable, noble, generous, manlike. Here it is that we find, as our vision broadens and the horizon extends further and further out, that within the boundaries of our own country everywhere are produced men of the highest order—noble, pure, generous men, patriotic men, men in whose hearts the love of country and of honor and of truth and right and justice is just as strong and as devoted as in every other section of the country. And that, I think, is one of the great secrets of the success of the House of Representatives. We bring together men from all portions of the country, and it becomes a great melting pot. The dross gets out, and the pure elements of high character, of devotion to principle, of uplift to a higher standard of manhood as here developed, permeate the whole country, in the influences that go out from the congressional life of this Chamber.

But with all our attachments, our admirations, our friendships, there comes a time of separation. Some leave us voluntarily, retiring to private life for various reasons; some in the changes in the wheel of fortune at home are defeated for reelection, and every now and then there comes, as it has on this occasion, the hand of death, and the friend is taken away. But, Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that is to us a supreme comfort and consolation. The separation, in whatever form it comes, whether by voluntary retirement of a Member or defeat, in the changing of the wheel of fortune or by the pallid hand of death, is not a severance of our friendship, and death is not the end of our love, our esteem, and our admiration. Although death may come and take away from our midst our colleague and our fellow laborer, blessed is the thought that still in our hearts there survive in memory, in cherished memory, the love, and the esteem, and the confidence and the admiration, which our fellowship and our service and our work here begot in our friendships.

Rather, Mr. Speaker, death is only the going before, going before to a larger life, into that life freed from the limitations of the habilaments of flesh, stripped of the bandages, if I may so term it, of the five senses, into that life, broad as the limits of space, as enduring as the eternity of God.

It is life, not death, we crave—a larger, fuller, better life—and when we separate here it is not the forgetting, not the oblivion; it is only the thought that our friend has gone before into that larger, better life.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. CAPSTICK was what we might call a new Member. In the provinces of God it was not permitted him to remain here many years, and yet during his short stay, in his association, limited as it was in time, he commended himself to our esteem, to our confidence, and to our admiration. He made many friends, because his friendship was based upon the solid foundation of real worth. He was a man that was justly and rightly held in high esteem.

It is well that, when the curtain falls, those who remain can say that during our association, our work, and our fellowship, "I knew him to be an honorable man; a man of character, of integrity, and of high-mindedness." And such is the testimony of the life of Mr. CAPSTICK.

His private life was successful. I shall not go into that. It has already been enumerated. But, Mr. Speaker, the same elements of character, the same foundation principles of honor and integrity that manifested themselves in his private life and made it successful are the same elements that commended him here to his associates in the work of Congress.

We believe, Mr. Speaker—it is our faith—that in that larger life we shall meet and shall have opportunity for larger service and larger usefulness. We can not draw the veil that separates that life from this and see into it with distinctness and clearness, and while we may say:

> We know not where His islands lift
> Their fronded palms in air;
> Yet we do know we shall not drift
> Beyond His love and care.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] is recognized.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, JOHN H. CAPSTICK, to whose sterling qualities and public services we bear witness to-day, reflected to a marked degree the life and views of that section of New Jersey he represented all too briefly in this House. Though born in Massachusetts and reared in Rhode Island, he removed to Montville, in Morris County, N. J., in his young manhood, and it was there that he spent his active life—wrought, achieved, and developed. True, the military schooling of his boyhood and his service in the Rhode Island Militia had their influence in forming that firmness of character and decisiveness which were characteristic; but in very essence he typified the rural Jerseyman from the northern section of the State.

In Morris County are found no great cities, no vast estates, no crass contrast of extreme wealth and dire poverty. Agriculture, on farms generally owned by those who till them, mingles with the industries of the prosperous towns carried on by the intelligence and capital of the inhabitants themselves. Economically independent, these people are consequently politically and intellectually independent. They are of what we consider the soundest and truest type of American manhood. They reverence American traditions, believe in American institutions; they posses a conservatism that impels them to reject new and strange doctrines repugnant to the foregoing fundamentals; but they are intelligently receptive to progressive ideas which seek the development of these sound principles to meet modern social and economic conditions.

In such an atmosphere JOHN H. CAPSTICK spent the years of his manhood. His energy and public spirit led him to participate in the public affairs of his community, and his sound common sense and wise counsel earned him marked influence throughout the countryside. Contented in his devotion to the prosperous industry he had established and developed and in his home circle, he sought no public office. He was at length prevailed upon to accept without remuneration the office of president of the State Board of Health of New Jersey, in which for a period of six years he rendered faithful and effective service.

With his election to Congress there opened before him opportunity for a career of great usefulness. It would seem as if his whole life had been shaped to train and develop in him those qualities which make a sound and successful legislator.

In the inscrutable wisdom of Providence his country, however, was not to benefit from his services. The blighting touch of disease rested on him before he had fully served here his apprenticeship, without which none can attain a position of influence in this body. Manfully he bore the pain and suffering through the progress of his illness, cheery, brave, optimistic, until in His own time the Merciful Father laid his tortured body to rest and took unto Himself a great soul.

JOHN H. CAPSTICK'S most marked quality was a rugged and uncompromising honesty. It was of the very essence of his being. He could neither himself dissemble nor had he patience with equivocation in another. He was sincere in his intellectual processes, held decided views, and never hesitated to give expression to them. This at times gave to one coming casually in contact with him an impression of brusqueness or harshness. Nothing could have been further from his true nature. Although a strong and forceful personality, he was at heart gentle, considerate, and kind.

The loss of a daughter, who had twined herself about his heart, at the very threshold of glorious young womanhood, bowed him with grief, but did not, as it might have done a smaller nature, embitter him. Unmindful of his own agony of soul, he devoted himself with loving gentleness to assuaging the sorrow of the one who shared with him the loss.

Although a busy man of affairs, he had keen appreciation for the fine arts, and was a critic of no mean discernment. He loved music, and understood it as only one may whose very soul is held in its thrall. In times of turbulence and trouble he turned to it for solace and found in its spell rest and peace.

In the untimely end of his career the membership of this House lost a loyal friend, his constituency a valuable Representative, the country a faithful servant. Strong and forceful, gentle and considerate, he was in all respects a true man.

Mr. WOODS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, when in the splendor of physical manhood our late colleague, Mr. JOHN H. CAPSTICK, entered the Sixty-fourth Congress he seemed as far removed from the summons of the dread reaper of death as any man among us. His active and efficient service in that session of Congress gave promise of usefulness and achievement far beyond that ordinarily attained. Few men indeed had his capacity for labor. During his first session of Congress he spoke on a number of important subjects that showed a thorough understanding and a grasp of the affairs of the Government. He took his work seriously and went into every question presented with the thoroughness of a trained business man. I have often heard him say that the Government was the greatest of all business institutions, and one of its chief functions was to so conduct its affairs that every citizen shared equally in its blessings and benefits. How fortunate the country having such men for its citizens. In this world of ours every act, every word, every thought tends to change the action of men fifty and a hundred years from now. And though his service in Congress was short, the work of Mr. CAPSTICK will tend toward better government, more equitable laws more equitably administered for future generations.

He went about his work with patient industry—an example we all might well follow as Members of Congress in our service for others. The love of a people for their country depends to a considerable extent upon the service of the Government for its citizens. The people are the Government in our country, and in them rests the sovereignty, not because of the Constitution and laws, but as something inherent and fundamental. The Members of Congress represent and act for the people, and whenever the courts which have the duty of interpreting the laws, or the executive officials who have the duty of administering the laws, legislate by court decisions or by arbitrary rules and regulations, just to that extent is government by the people encroached upon and individual influence and power and liberty of the citizen curtailed. Mr. CAPSTICK stood firm for these principles taught by the fathers as written in the Declaration of Independence and in the Constitution—principles represented by Washington and Lincoln. He did not disdain to follow the beaten paths, but revered the Constitution and laws as safeguards to liberty.

Mr. DRUKKER. Mr. Speaker, JOHN H. CAPSTICK, a man of unusual attainments, strong convictions, and indomitable will, gifted with the power that made him a leader among men, a man whom to know intimately, as was my great good fortune, was to love, was taken from us at a time in the affairs of the Nation when his sober, matured judgment and his broad vision would have won for him a commanding position in this body. Even though he was not spared for this high service, be it said that he had rounded out a career of usefulness, a career filled with activities that were ever for the public weal.

The thought of others was uppermost in his mind; his kindly hand was stretched out to help and his voice was raised for the righting of wrongs. Endowed with a spirit of kindliness, of sympathy with all human grievances and of unswerving fidelity, he retained until the end the affectionate regard and the deep-seated confidence of his electorate.

His home life was ideal; he was idolized by his friends, who valued him for his sterling qualities; and by those in his employment prior to his retirement from active business life, who looked to him for guidance, he was held with a feeling closely akin to worship. No dispute of a personal or business nature that arose between these employees but was brought to him as arbiter. To these men his judgment was infallible.

His memory will be revered by them and by the thousands who called on him for help and strength, not so much, perhaps, for what he accomplished in his public works—

> That best portion of a good man's life—
> His little, nameless, unremembered acts
> Of kindness and of love.

He was a noble type of noble citizenship. The ideals which he carried with him through his public life were those very ideals which had raised him to a high position in the business world.

Born at Lawrence, Mass., of sturdy New England stock, in September, 1856, he attended the public schools of that city and, later removing to Providence, R. I., finished his education at Morey & Goff's College. The military instruction he received at that institution served him when he became a member of the Rhode Island State Militia. Of powerful physique, he carried himself with a soldierly bearing; he had the instincts, the straightforwardness, and the determination of a soldier, and I know, had he been younger when war came to us—he was even then too ill to be here—he would have been among the first to shoulder a rifle and go forth to battle. He would have grasped the opportunity to relieve the oppressed, to uplift the down-trodden.

Pursuing the profession of his father, he became associated in the year 1883 with the textile firm of John Capstick & Sons, at Montville, N. J. By profession he was a chemist and colorist, and in pursuit of this profession he made an outstanding name for himself. His wife, a woman of much talent, was Miss Ella F. Blake, daughter of the Hon. William Wells Blake, of Boston.

Throughout his majority he manifested deep interest in matters of public welfare, acting as president of the New Jersey State Board of Health for six years and holding a membership covering two years on the State sewerage commission.

The same inborn traits that had made him eager to promote all matters for the public good gave him place as a dominant figure in the affairs of his own immediate community—strong, forceful, and conscientious. The perplexing problems arising in a small city received from him the same careful thought and consideration as did those larger and more vexatious questions which a later day brought before him.

When he was elected to the Sixty-fourth Congress his experience as director and vice president of the Morristown Trust Co. and as former president of the Boonton National Bank for 11 years gained for him a place on the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Through living within a short distance of Mr. CAPSTICK I was privileged to be thrown into intimate relationship with him. I loved to be in his company; I marveled at his wisdom and at his wide knowledge of the world and events, and I grew to rely on him as a younger brother would grow to rely on his elder. I profited more than words can tell by this intimacy, and now that he has gone my association with him remains a dear, a jealously-guarded memory, one which I shall always cherish and which ruthless time can never efface; I prize the recollection of those sacred days when the honor of knowing him so well was given me.

He had everything to live for, an adoring wife, a home amid beautiful surroundings, and the love and admiration of his friends. But when the call came he was ready to go; there was no duty left undone. He was a loyal, big-hearted, unselfish friend, an earnest worker, a public servant devoted to his trust.

> His life was gentle, and the elements
> So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up
> And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

Mr. RAMSEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words relative to the character and worth of our late colleague, and in whose honor these memorial services are being held.

JOHN H. CAPSTICK proved his value as a man by the successes he attained throughout his whole life. Born in New England, that part of our country which has produced so many great and distinguished men, he came into the world naturally and by inheritance well equipped to battle with the life's problems that were to confront him, and which he so courageously met and so successfully mastered. But he did not remain long in Massachusetts. When a comparatively young man he sought out New Jersey as his home, where he continued to live until his demise.

JOHN H. CAPSTICK was always a vigorous, painstaking, and successful business man. He applied himself not only to his own private business, but also devoted much of his time and energies to public affairs. He was interested in the financial institutions of his county, and his advice and counsel were of great value and highly appreciated by those with whom he was associated.

He for a number of years was the president of the State Board of Health of New Jersey, and the service he rendered in that capacity was recognized as most efficient as well as beneficial to all the people of our State.

The service he rendered the Nation as a Member of this House was no less conspicuous. Here he performed his work well and with a fidelity that brought many praises to him by his colleagues, when it was learned that it was doubtful whether he would ever again be able to participate in active legislation because of his illness.

He was liked by all and had no enemies. He was a lovable man and a good friend. His home life at Montville, N. J., was one of extreme happiness, and it is too bad that the vigorous and sturdy man that he was could not have been preserved in good health so that he might have lived many years more to be of further assistance to his fellow man, his State, and his country.

He in his illness, which was of long duration, was not depressed, but he was always cheerful, happy, and contented. He lived a life of usefulness. He died in peace, in comfort, and in happiness.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with Mr. CAPSTICK did not extend over a long period of time. When he came to Congress he displayed an interest in legislation, especially that character of legislation which looked to the maintenance of business integrity. He seemed concerned about the ability of the country to so direct the Nation's business that no interruption between the producer and consumer might occur. Himself an employer of labor, his chief concern seemed to be for the class of our people who had to depend upon their daily wage for comfort of their families—the constancy of employment of this great mass of our population at such wage to insure not only permanence of employment, but a wage to insure a fair degree of independence and under such conditions as to insure against occupational disease. In a word, he had a keen conception of the need of humanizing industry. At the same time he did not forget the rights of capital, and insisted as labor had its rights which must be respected, so, too, the employer, whose talent of organization and ability in management, which made possible the steady employment of labor, so those taking all the risks of loss should be protected in their rights. I had talked with Mr. CAPSTICK upon this phase of our industrial life quite frequently and found him very responsive to the situation.

He was of the quiet sort in his conduct in the House. He very rarely took the floor, but while he was well enough to attend the sessions he always took a clear-cut position on questions before the House and never hesitated upon what his duty was toward his State and country.

A man of wealth, he was responsive to the needs of the times, and gave freely of his substance to the many movements of altruistic character. I instance the fact that in casual conversation with me one day in the Chamber he asked me about my experience while the head of a college in Ohio. Upon my stating that a college president of to-day must be a successful money collector rather than a great scholar or administrator for scholarly matters, he responded not only by assent to my observation, but without my asking it he drew a check on behalf of the college and requested that I use it for the good of some ambitious student who must have assistance to finish his course. Upon further conversation I found he was making a systematic use of his wealth for the good of the world.

Mr. Speaker, after all, political fame is little more than a bubble, which can not insure real happiness. We have a thousand proofs of it. Riches, as this world goes, have wings, and they are of the moment. None of these things of themselves abide. The rich achievement is in matters of character which are of the substance of successful living. Wealth is a wonderful convenience but can not be of great and abiding value except as used to produce the personal and public weal. Fame is ephemeral and not worthy the seeking, as it inevitably ends in disappointment and frequently sorrow. The man who is famous to-day may be infamous to-morrow, dependent upon the current of a fickle public opinion that sways with the strongest current. The surest road to the greatest happiness is that which leads to the greatest service to mankind. That road may lead through a business career where the accumulations of years are devoted to mankind. It may lead to a professional career whose talent and tact are devoted to the good of the race. The modern slogan of mankind is while making a living learn to live. This demands a service of public spirit where energy, wealth, and reputation are employed to increase the goodness of the world.

For such service, membership in this House is an opportunity. I believe the time is here now when human interest calls for legislation on behalf of our common humanity. In other words, legislation can not be circumscribed by a mere money consideration. My short acquaintance with our colleague convinces me he had the proper angle as a public man, and I desire to pay this brief tribute to his memeory.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, our New Jersey colleagues have paid their tributes to the late JOHN H. CAPSTICK, Member from the fifth New Jersey district. They have spoken of him as we are wont to do when those with whom we have fraternized in our respective delegations have passed away. What they have said has been appropriate and sympathetic. But the acquaintanceship which a Member of Congress from any State acquires after a brief experience in Washington, widens and broadens until representatives of all the States evince an interest in his life and services.

Mr. CAPSTICK was elected to the Sixty-fourth Congress in 1914. The war in Europe had already started when he made his appearance at the Capitol. Like every other Member who came in with that Congress, he mingled with his fellow Members as one who realized that great events were about to transpire. It was this feeling of uncertainty on the part of all Members of Congress, with regard to the future, that gave Mr. CAPSTICK ready access to the thoughts and expressions of his colleagues the country over. It was not surprising under these circumstances that one of his amiable qualities should rapidly advance in the friendship and confidence of his associates.

I admired Mr. CAPSTICK because of his rugged and practical interest in the new life he assumed. A business man, such as he was, is generally more reticent than the lawyer or professional man in matters of legislation, but our New Jersey colleague came into the congressional life when political and economic conditions were badly mixed and when the advice of a solid man of business was doubly welcome. His hard-headed common sense proved of much value to the committees upon which he was appointed and gave great promise of future usefulness. With him, however, it was as we, unfortunately, have sometimes observed in the case of other new and substantial acquisitions to the House. He was not to be given the opportunity to fully develop his service here. He made a brave beginning. What he did was well and creditably done. Then came his sickness, and it long endured.

The electors of the fifth New Jersey district returned him to the Sixty-fifth or war Congress of the United States, and despite his illness he made a gallant effort to do his full duty. He returned to Washington on several occasions—once accompanied by his physician all the way from the hospital—but so enfeebled as to lead his friends to doubt the wisdom of his journey. It was his grit and mettle that induced him to come. Though he knew the outcome of his appearance in Washington might be fatal to himself he still felt that he owed his vote and his attendance here to the constituency which had honored him. Of such stuff was our colleague made.

I mourn with my colleagues from New Jersey and other States the loss of JOHN H. CAPSTICK. He was a strong and vigorous American, too soon removed from those who loved him, and from the path of patriotic duty which he heroically sought to travel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. According to the resolutions which were adopted, the House now stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Thereupon (at 1 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, May 20, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 20, 1918.

(Legislative day of Friday, May 17, 1918.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS IN NEW YORK.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the RECORD the able and eloquent address of the President of the United States upon opening the Red Cross drive in New York City, delivered May 18, 1918.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Mr. Chairman and fellow countrymen, I should be very sorry to think that Mr. Davison in any degree curtailed his exceedingly interesting speech for fear that he was postponing mine, because I am sure you listened with the same intent and intimate interest with which I listened to the extraordinarily vivid account he gave of the things which he had realized, because he had come in contact with them on the other side of the water. We compassed them with our imagination. He compassed them in his personal experience.

"I have not come here to-night to review for you the work of the Red Cross; I am not competent to do so, because I have not had the time or the opportunity to follow it in detail. I have come here simply to say a few words to you as to what it all seems to me to mean. It means a great deal.

FACING TWO DUTIES.

"There are two duties with which we are face to face. The first duty is to win the war, and the second duty, that goes hand in hand with it, is to win it greatly and worthily, showing the real quality of our power not only, but the real quality of our purpose and of ourselves. Of course, the first duty, the duty that we must keep in the foreground of our thought until it is accomplished, is to win the war. I have heard gentlemen recently say that we must get 5,000,000 men ready. Why limit it to 5,000,000? I have asked the Congress of the United States to name no limit, because the Congress intends, I am sure, as we all intend, that every ship that can carry men or supplies shall go laden upon every voyage with every man and every supply she can carry.

INSINCERE PEACE PROPOSALS.

"And we are not to be diverted from the grim purpose of winning the war by any insincere approaches upon the subject of peace. I can say with a clear conscience that I have tested those intimations and have found them insincere. I now recognize them for what they are—an opportunity to have a free hand, particularly in the East, to carry out purposes of conquest and exploitation. Every proposal with regard to accommodation in the west involves a reservation with regard to the east. Now, so far as I am concerned, I intend to stand by Russia as well as France. The helpless and the friendless are the very ones that need friends and succor, and if any man in Germany thinks we are going to sacrifice anybody for our own sake I tell them now they are mistaken. For the glory of this war, my fellow citizens, so far as we are concerned, is that it is, perhaps for the first time in history, an unselfish war. I could not be proud to fight for a selfish purpose, but I can be proud to fight for mankind. If they wish peace, let them come forward, through accredited representatives, and lay their terms on the table. We have laid ours, and they know what they are.

DUTY OF RED CROSS.

"But behind all this grim purpose, my friends, lies the opportunity to demonstrate not only force, which will be demonstrated to the utmost, but the opportunity to demonstrate character, and it is that opportunity that we have most conspicuously in the work of the Red Cross. Not that our men in arms do not represent our character, for they do; and it is a character which those who see and realize appreciate and admire, but their duty is the duty of force. The duty of the Red Cross is the duty of mercy and succor and friendship.

"Have you formed a picture in your imagination of what this war is doing for us and for the world? In my own mind I am convinced that not a hundred years of peace could have knitted this Nation together as this single year of war has knitted it together, and, better even than that if possible, it is knitting the world together. Look at the picture: In the center of the scene four nations engaged against the world and at every point of vantage showing that they are seeking selfish aggrandizement; and against them 23 Governments representing the greater part of the population of the world drawn together into a new sense of community of interest, a new sense of community of purpose, a new sense of unity of life.

INCIDENT IN ITALY.

"The Secretary of War told me an interesting incident the other day. He said when he was in Italy a member of the Italian Government was explaining to him the many reasons why Italy felt near to the United States. He said, 'If you want to try an interesting experiment, go up to any one of these troop trains and ask in English how many of them have been in America, and see what happens.' He tried the experiment. He went up to a troop train and he said, 'How many of you boys have been in America?' and he said it seemed to him as if half of them sprang up and said, 'Me from San Francisco,' 'Me from New York—all over.' There was part of the heart of America in the Italian Army—people that had been knitted to us by association, who knew us, who had lived among us, who had worked shoulder to shoulder with us, and now, friends of America, were fighting for their native Italy.

"Friendship is the only cement that will ever hold the world together. And this intimate contact of the great Red Cross with the peoples who are suffering the terrors and deprivations of this war is going to be one of the greatest instrumentalities of friendship that the world ever knew, and the center of the heart of it all, if we sustain it properly, will be this land that we so dearly love.

GREAT DAY OF DUTY.

"My friends, a great day of duty has come, and duty finds a man's soul as no kind of work can ever find it. May I say this? The duty that faces us all now is to serve one another, and no man can afford to make a fortune out of this war. There are men amongst us who have forgotten that, if they ever saw it. Some of you are old enough—I am old enough—to remember men who made fortunes out of the Civil War, and you know how they were regarded by their fellow citizens. That was a war to save one country; this is a war to save the world. And your relation to the Red Cross is one of the relations which will relieve you of the stigma. You can not give anything to the Government of the United States, it will not accept it. There is a law of Congress against accepting even services without pay. The only thing that the Government will accept is a loan, and duties performed; but it is a great deal better to give than to lend or to pay, and your great channel for giving is the American Red Cross. Down in your hearts you can not take very much satisfaction in the last analysis in lending money to the Government of the United States, because the interest which you draw will burn your pockets. It is a commercial transaction, and some men have even dared to cavil at the rate of interest, not knowing the incidental commentary that constitutes upon their attitude. But when you give, something of your heart, something of your soul, something of yourself goes with the gift, particularly when it is given in such form that it never can come back by way of direct benefit to yourself. You know there is the old cynical definition of gratitude, as "the lively expectation of favors to come." Well, there is no expectation of favors to come in this kind of giving. These things are bestowed in order that the world may be a fitter place to live in, that men may be succored, that homes may be restored, that suffering may be relieved, that the face of the earth may have the blight of destruction taken away from it, and that wherever force goes, there shall go mercy and helpfulness.

DO NOT GIVE SPARINGLY.

"And when you give, give absolutely all that you can spare, and do not consider yourself liberal in the giving. If you give with self-adulation, you are not giving at all—you are giving to your own vanity. But if you give until it hurts, then your heart blood goes into it.

"Think what we have here! We call it the American Red Cross, but it is merely a branch of a great international organization, which is not only recognized by the statutes of each of the civilized Governments of the world, but it is recognized by international agreement and treaty as the recognized and accepted instrumentality of mercy and succor. And one of the deepest stains that rests upon the reputation of the German Army is that they have not respected the Red Cross. That goes to the root of the matter. They have not respected the instrumentality they themselves participated in setting up as the thing which no man was to touch because it was the expression of common humanity. We are members, by being members of the American Red Cross, of a great fraternity and comradeship which extends all over the world, and this cross which these ladies bore to-day is an emblem of Christianity itself.

TRIBUTE TO WOMEN.

"It fills my imagination, ladies and gentlemen, to think of the women all over this country who are busy to-night and are busy every night and every day doing the work of the Red Cross, busy with a great eagerness to find out the most serviceable thing to do, busy with a forgetfulness of all the old frivolities of their social relationships, ready to curtail the duties of the household in order that they may contribute to this common work that all their hearts are engaged in, and in doing which their hearts become acquainted with each other. When you think of this you realize how the people of the United States are being drawn together into a great intimate family whose heart is being used for the service of the soldiers not only, but for the service of civilians where they suffer and are lost in a maze of distresses and distractions. And you have, then, this noble picture of justice and mercy as the two servants of liberty. For only where men are free do they think the thoughts of comradeship; only where they are free do they think the thoughts of sympathy; only where they are free are they mutually helpful; only where they are free do they realize their dependence upon one another and their comradeship in a common interest and common necessity.

INDIAN'S VIEW OF WAR PURPOSE.

"I heard a story told the other day that was ridiculous, but it is worth repeating, because it contains the germ of truth. An Indian was enlisted in the Army. He returned to the reservation on a furlough. He was asked what he thought of it. He said, 'No much good. Too much salute, not much shoot.' Then he was asked, 'Are you going back?' 'Yes,' 'Well, do you know what you are fighting for?' 'Yes, me know; fight to make whole damn world Democratic Party.' He had evidently misunderstood some innocent sentence of my own. But after all, although there is no party purpose in it, he got it right as far as the word 'party'; to make the whole world democratic in the sense of community of interest and of purpose; and if you ladies and gentleman could read some of the touching dispatches which come through official channels (for even through those channels there come voices of humanity that are infinitely pathetic); if you could catch some of those voices that speak the utter longing of oppressed and helpless peoples all over the world, to hear something like the Battle Hymn of the Republic, to hear the feet of the great hosts of liberty coming to set them free, to set their minds free, set their lives free, set their children free—you would know what comes into the heart of those who are trying to contribute all the brains and power they have to this great enterprise of liberty. I summon you to the comradeship. I summon you in this next week to say how much and how sincerely and how unanimously you sustain the heart of the world."

APPOINTMENT OF CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I have also an article from the Christian Science Monitor commending the appointment of former Justice Hughes to the position of assistant in the aircraft investigation. It reviews his great ability and success as an investigator. I should like also to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. To this request I object. As I told the Senate some time ago in the absence of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], the chairman of the Committee on Printing, I shall object to newspaper or magazine articles going into the RECORD, and I object to this.

Mr. THOMPSON. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection in view of the fact that it refers to the appointment of former Justice Hughes. It is a very able article and reviews the successful work of this great jurist as a lawyer. I can not see why it is not pertinent, particularly in view of the question now before the Senate regarding an investigation of aircraft production.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not a Senator who would not agree with all the article says of Gov. Hughes——

Mr. THOMPSON. It certainly can do no harm then, Mr. President, to have it given publicity by printing in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. But that is not the proposition. If one article goes in the RECORD all must go in, and that seems to be the policy. Therefore I object.

Mr. THOMPSON. Of course, the Senator can not keep it out of the RECORD, for I shall take the floor at my first opportunity and read it if necessary. I hope I shall not be obliged to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will be obliged to do it if it goes into the RECORD unless the Senate shall decide otherwise. I do not object to the Senator reading it, nor could I object to that.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Guion	Nelson	Smoot
Beckham	Hale	New	Sterling
Brandegee	Hardwick	Nugent	Sutherland
Calder	Hitchcock	Overman	Thomas
Chamberlain	Hollis	Page	Thompson
Colt	Johnson, Cal.	Phelan	Townsend
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Poindexter	Trammell
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Ransdell	Underwood
Curtis	Kellogg	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Dillingham	Kendrick	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Fall	Kirby	Sheppard	Weeks
Fernald	Lenroot	Sherman	Wilfley
Fletcher	Lewis	Shields	Wolcott
France	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Smith, Mich.

Mr. LEWIS. May I announce the absence of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], occasioned by official business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KIRBY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are detained on official business.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I was very much surprised at the objection raised by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to having printed in the RECORD an article commendatory of the distinguished jurist, Hon. Charles E. Hughes, as an investigator. I was glad on Saturday that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] commended this appointment from a Republican standpoint and disputed a newspaper comment that it was not satisfactory to the Republican Party. However, it seems from the objection raised now by the Republican leader upon the floor that there must be some objection by that party to this appointment.

I have here a very able editorial appearing in the Christian Science Monitor, printed May 18, 1918, reviewing the work of this lawyer as an able and successful investigator, and showing his success in many of those endeavors. I send it to the desk and ask to have it read as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

"CHARLES E. HUGHES, INVESTIGATOR.

"His city and his State had long before known him for something else, but his country first became acquainted with Charles E. Hughes as an investigator into the conduct of certain immensely important, immensely wealthy, and immensely powerful insurance companies, with their headquarters in New York City. To the preponderating majority of his fellow countrymen the beginning of this man's public career dates from the insurance inquiry, but as a matter of fact he never, in all probability, would have been called upon to undertake that famous inquisition had he not already made a great reputation among lawyers through his wonderfully thorough overhauling, overturning, and ventilation of the affairs of the Consolidated Gas Co., of New York, his merciless arraignment of its management, and his pitiless excoriation of the watered-stock system upon which the corporation was floated.

"To the average man, even to the average lawyer, the prospect which the Consolidated Gas Co. offered to an investigator was anything but inviting. Behind it were intrenched powerful and unyielding interests, unwilling to budge an inch. Charles E. Hughes had, so to speak, to blast them out. They would give him no information. They would volunteer no help. They would confess nothing, admit nothing. Their lips and their teeth had to be pried open, as it were, before they would utter a sound. But the quiet, soft-voiced lawyer persisted, convinced them that mere obstruction and stubbornness would be unavailing, and finally had them scrambling and clamoring to tell him all, and sometimes more, than they knew. The result was reform and reorganization and an end to extortion in the gas and electric lighting service of the chief city of the Nation.

"The patience, the perseverance, the tact which Mr. Hughes manifested in the conduct of the legislative inquiry into gas won admiration for him, even among those whom his victory had seriously affected financially. When the great insurance scandal was precipitated, through the lavish display of luxury indulged in by princely salaried but useless officials of certain of the great companies, and a legislative investigation became imperative, the name of Charles E. Hughes, as that of the man most competent to conduct it, was proposed by common impulse. There was never a question on any side as to his fitness or his integrity. Those for whom he had fought and those against whom he had fought in the gas scandal were alike willing to give him abundant confidence.

"As he had delved into the franchises, capitalizations, and watering processes of the combinations that constituted the Consolidated Gas Co., so he bored into the inner recesses, secrets, and mysteries of the great insurance companies. The externals and the sensational things, such as the Sherry dinners, the town and country mansions, the distribution of gratuities and graft, concerned him little, in comparison with the problem presented by the almost unlimited opportunities for evil afforded by the entire insurance system of finance. The prosecuting attorney and the courts could deal with the criminal phases if they thought best. In view of the many attempts made to draw red herrings across the track of the aircraft exposure, it is worth while to recall his course with regard to irrelevancies in the insurance investigation. In the language of a review of the methods followed by him, published while he was before the country as a presidential candidate, "once the investigation got under way the public began to notice the same persistent, painstaking policy that had marked the gas probe. Mr. Hughes refused to be diverted from any phase of the subject until he had exhausted all its possibilities, and he refused absolutely to depart from the general subject of insurance to go into other matters, political or ethical."

"The defense in all such cases labors to becloud the real issue. It is the common practice of those under inquiry to try to turn attention to matters that have little or no relation to the main point. There were ingredients enough to make a score of first-class side sensations in the insurance exposé, but Mr. Hughes kept always in view his principal purpose, which was that of disclosing wherein the methods and practices of the insurance system of New York were wrong and of devising legislation which would prevent the recurrence of such baleful conditions.

"Incidentally, his conduct of the inquiry broke up the old insurance ring completely; but it did far more than that, it placed the insurance system on a sounder basis than ever before. Incidentally, it drove some individuals who had been very conspicuous to the background, but in these personal aspects its accomplishments were trivial compared with the revival of public confidence in the insurance system resulting from the adoption of the reforms which Mr. Hughes proposed and advocated.

"It may be taken for granted that if Charles Evans Hughes shall be given a free hand—and it is well-nigh certain that he will have nothing less—every fact connected with the apparent failure of the aircraft program will be brought to light and weighed and measured in relation to the main question. Nothing will be left uncovered. Light will be poured in upon everything. Camouflage, confusion, and calcimine, at all events, have in the past been foreign to Hughes investigations."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely wish to say to the Senate that if the Senator from Kansas had reference to me in his statement before he asked to have the article read he is certainly mistaken. The Senator can rest his soul in peace, for I assure him that Gov. Hughes's appointment was as remarkable as it was admirable.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed bill (S. 3935) to prohibit the sale, manufacture, and importation of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii during the period of the war, except as hereinafter provided.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

S. 2123. An act to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia;

S. 4409. An act to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes";

H. R. 8696. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919; and

H. R. 11628. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia," approved September 25, 1914.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a memorial from the Billy Sunday Tabernacle Workers remonstrating against the action of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia permitting Sunday baseball, which will be inserted in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

Hon. THOMAS MARSHALL,
President of the United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: At a meeting of the Billy Sunday Tabernacle Workers of Washington, D. C., on Tuesday, May 14, I was instructed to transmit the following resolution to your honorable body for consideration:

"Resolved by the Billy Sunday Tabernacle Workers, That we strongly disapprove of the action of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, announced to-day, authorizing the playing of professional baseball games on Sunday.

"Congress has unanimously voted for a day of fasting and prayer for the entire Nation and the President has accordingly designated the 30th day of the present month as the day when all the people are urged to unite in prayer and supplication for the favor and help of Almighty God for ourselves and our allies in the gigantic struggle in which we are engaged for liberty and righteousness.

"It is singularly inappropriate for the civil authorities of the National Capital to follow this action of the President and Congress with an order which is directly in conflict with one of God's laws.

"We believe this action will meet with general disapproval by the better class of our citizens here in the National Capital and throughout the entire country: And be it further

"Resolved, That this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, Senate, House of Representatives, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the local newspapers."

Very respectfully,

JOHN O. LEWIS, Secretary.

MAY 18, 1918.

Mr. McKELLAR. I present resolutions adopted by the Commercial Club of Nashville, Tenn., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMERCIAL CLUB OF NASHVILLE,
May 13, 1918.

Hon. K. D. MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: At a meeting of the board of governors of the Commercial Club held Thursday evening last the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to oppose the postponement of the advance postal charge on publications beyond July 1 next."

I would much appreciate your answer to this letter and a statement as to your position in the matter.

Yours, truly,

W. R. MANIER, Secretary.

Mr. McKELLAR. I also present a statement relative to the response made by the citizens of the city of Nashville to the third liberty loan, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"HE PROFITS MOST WHO SERVES BEST"—NASHVILLE'S RESPONSE.

In the first liberty loan Nashville was allotted $3,120,429.58, and Nashville subscribed $4,381,650.

In the second liberty loan Nashville was allotted $4,511,420.96, and Nashville subscribed $6,642,600.

In the third liberty loan Nashville was allotted $4,800,000, and, although this liberty-loan campaign does not close until May 4, Nashville has already subscribed over $5,000,000.

In the Red Cross drive Nashville was allotted $150,000 and subscribed $185,000, of which over 97 per cent has been paid.

In the Army Y. M. C. A. campaign Nashville was asked for $40,000 and agreed at the beginning of the campaign to raise $75,000 and actually subscribed $94,000.

In the campaign for "eyes for the Navy" Nashville furnished more than 500 pairs of glasses.

In the campaign for books for our soldiers Nashville furnished 47,518 volumes.

In the campaign for clothes for the relief of Belgium Nashville was asked for a carload and furnished one and a half carloads, estimated second-hand value over $50,000.

Nashville was asked for $8,000 for Y. W. C. A. rest rooms buildings at different cantonments. Nashville gave $13,500.

More than 50 representative business men of Nashville are now in the religious and Army work of the Y. M. C. A.

Nashville furnished one complete medical unit, composed of 12 leading physicians, 21 nurses, and 45 enlisted men, who are now in France.

Nashville is one of only nine cities in the United States showing improvement in condition of their boys since the war began—as reported by executive secretary of Boys' Club Federation of America.

APRIL 24, 1918.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the adequate construction of highways and for a Federal centralized authority for the administration of the policy governing same, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Portland, Me., remonstrating against the adoption of a proposed amendment to the naval appropriation bill, to penalize the granting of bonuses or premiums to employees of the Government, or employees who are under Government supervision, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Federation of Churches of Portland and South Portland, Me., and a petition of the Young Men's Christian Association of Lewiston, Me., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2654) providing for the appointment of two additional district judges in the State of Illinois, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11658) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 446) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11663) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 447) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 4558) granting an increase of pension to William H. McKay;

A bill (S. 4559) granting a pension to James T. Brown (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4560) granting a pension to Schuyler C. Jackson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4561) to reimburse Capt. K. E. Kern, Fifty-fourth Infantry, for certain expenditures, commanding military police, Chattanooga, Tenn., and Douglas, Ariz., for money expended by him at said points in the prosecution of sellers of alcohol and peddlers of narcotics and in the renting of automobiles for transportation of sick and wounded to hospitals; and

A bill (S. 4562) to reimburse Horace A. Choumard, chaplain in Twenty-third Infantry, for loss of certain personal property (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4563) granting an increase of pension to Susan E. Nash (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 4564) for the relief of Chauncey Boyce; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4565) for the relief of Jay W. Daley (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4566) granting an increase of pension to Martin Joy (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4567) granting an increase of pension to Enos S. Whitcomb; and

A bill (S. 4568) granting an increase of pension to James E. Embury; to the Committee on Pensions.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, a few weeks ago I introduced a bill providing for the vocational rehabilitation of men discharged from the military and naval services of the United States. The bill which I then introduced was largely the work of a committee appointed by the Council of National Defense, of which the Assistant Secretary of the Navy was chairman, and upon which served representatives of the Army, the Navy, the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, the Federal Board of Vocational Education, and others who have made a special study of this subject.

The Senate Committee and the House Committee on Education met jointly and conducted for a number of days hearings upon this bill. The Governor General of Canada did us the favor of sending to our committee the director of this work in Canada, who gave us a full and detailed account of what was being done and what had been accomplished in Canada. The record of our hearings has been printed, and Senators will find in it a synopsis of the action of each one of the countries at war along the line of vocational rehabilitation for their soldiers and their sailors.

A number of modifications of a minor character have been made in the bill by the Committee on Education, only one of any substantial importance, that one being to strike out the provision which during the vocational rehabilitation would put the injured soldier or sailor back under military discipline. The result of the information we have received from foreign countries was that no country among our allies resorts to such an extreme course.

I ask unanimous consent to introduce the bill as the Committee on Education and Labor has practically agreed upon it. I will submit the report of the committee upon it in a day or two.

The bill (S. 4557) to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

S. 3771. An act authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government; and

S. J. Res. 124. Joint resolution providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration, by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

TATSUJI SAITO (H. DOC. NO. 1108).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Senate, the accompanying letter from the Secretary of War in reference to the case of a Japanese subject named Tatsuji Saito, who was killed on the night of May 25, 1916, at Camp San Geronimo, Mexico, presumably by American soldiers. The attention of the Senate is invited to the recommendation of the Secretary of War that, as an act of grace, an appropriation of a reasonable sum of money be made for the benefit of the family of the said Japanese subject.

The matter has also been brought to the attention of the House of Representatives.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 20 May, 1918.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, when we took a recess on Saturday last the matter pending was, I believe, the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. If the Senator is ready to proceed with that matter now, I should be glad to have him do so. I understood that the amendment had really been offered and read, though I am not sure whether or not the amendment as modified was submitted by the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not know what the RECORD shows, but I think that, as a matter of fact, I offered this amendment just before the Senate took a recess on Saturday; but, at any rate, I offer it now. It has been printed. I was going to ask that it be printed in the RECORD, but as it has already been printed in the RECORD I shall not make that request.

In this connection, Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a letter from the Chief of Engineers in regard to this amendment. Formerly it was incorporated in the bill reported by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives as section 5 of that bill as it stood at that time. The only change I have made in the language is to limit the effect of it to navigable waters and their tributaries above tidewater. There is some opposition to it from manufacturing interests, and by making that limitation it relieves the measure of opposition, at least to the extent of factories that discharge acid or other pollution into navigable streams that are tidal or tide waters. In my judgment there is not nearly so much damage done by the discharge of acids in waters which are tidewaters which are partly salt and where there are not generally Government locks or improvements which are injured by them. At any rate the amendment restricts the scope of the prohibition to that extent, and I have limited it in that way. Otherwise it is in the same language as the original section 5 of the bill as reported by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the other House. On that subject the letter of the Chief of Engineers is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, January 30, 1918.

The discharge of acid and acid waste into the navigable waters of the United States by the numerous mines and manufacturing establishments operating near such waters has been the subject of complaint for many years.

It has been generally recognized and admitted for a long time that such discharge pollutes the streams, destroys fish and fish life, and renders the waters insanitary and unfit for ordinary domestic purposes; but as these are matters peculiarly of local concern and subject to corrective regulation and control under State and municipal laws they did not seem to call for any Federal action.

Studies and investigations in recent years, however, have demonstrated beyond question that the practice has increased to such an extent as to cause very serious injury to commerce and navigation, as well as direct damage to the Government, especially on such important rivers as the Monongahela, Allegheny, and Ohio. Careful tests made in the pools above the navigation dams in the Pittsburgh district show that the quantity of free acid discharged from mines, coal washers, and mills into these rivers aggregates about 6,500 tons per day.

The presence of acid and acid salts in the water results in deterioration to the boilers and hulls of steamboats, and damage to the submerged metal parts of the Government locks and dams.

For use in boilers the water has to be subjected to a special treatment, the expense of which is considerable, and in spite of the treatment experience has shown that the life of the boilers is only about half what it should be. Formerly the boilers of vessels using these waters lasted, with average annual repairs, 20 years; with similar repairs they now last only 10 years. In other words, the boilers in boats employed in commerce and those in the boats belonging to the Government and used for purposes of improvement must be wholly renewed once in 10 years, instead of once in 20 years. It is estimated that the annual loss to these vessels in this district alone due to acid is nearly $25,000.

The damage done to the Government locks and dams is extensive. The valves, gates, plates, operating chains, and all metal parts below water are corroded and eaten away by the action of the acid. Posts have been found almost eaten through after a few years' service, when in pure water they ought to be almost as good as new. While it is difficult to fix the exact money value of the damage done to these works, yet, from careful estimates, excluding as far as possible all other causes, it is safe to say that the cost to the United States of deterioration due to acid in the waters is not less than $25,000 a year on the Monogahela, and not less than $32,000 a year on the Ohio.

It is believed, therefore, that the proper conservation of purely Federal interests requires legislation by means of which this evil may be limited and corrected, and a proposed draft is submitted for consideration.

As will be seen, the letter points out the damage to locks and other metal works used in connection with the improvement of navigation as being to a much larger monetary extent than to the boilers of vessels.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator's amendment apply to navigation on navigable rivers and inland lakes, as well as to the ocean and its tributaries?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It does not now by the limitation which I have placed in it apply to the ocean or to tidal waters, but it applies to navigable waters above tidal waters.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In Michigan we have had some difficulty in past years, and until recently the matter has not been settled. There have been chemical plants and others which have been constructed on navigable streams, which have polluted the waters, and which have thereby affected the healthfulness of the water for drinking purposes and for its habitation by fish. The Senator's amendment, as I understand, would prohibit the construction of plants which would pollute waters in that way.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the purpose I have in making this modification of the language; it leaves some discretion in the Secretary of War, operating, I presume, through the Chief of Engineers, as to the extent of the limitations which are to be placed by him upon that matter. Within those limitations and restrictions, having regard, I presume, to the different circumstances and conditions, it is prohibited to pollute waters in that way.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt, I will say that, while I have no authority to accept the amendment on behalf of the committee, personally I think that it is a very meritorious amendment, and I should be perfectly willing to have it go to conference and to have the matter thrashed out by the conferees. If we can agree upon it, I shall be glad to have it in the bill. The amendment provides:

That, within limits to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, it shall not be lawful—

And so forth.

Therefore, with that safeguard about it, it seems to me it is a very excellent amendment. I make no contest over it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Florida for that statement, and with that statement from the chairman of the committee, and considering that this language was incorporated originally in the bill, I submit the amendment to the Senate with the hope that it will be adopted.

Everybody is more or less familiar with the general question of the destruction, practically, of the usefulness and beauty of many of our streams in the manner prohibited in the amendment, and the Secretary of War sets out specifically the injury to navigation and the expense to the Government of the United States which is caused by it.

The Senator from Florida has pointed out very succinctly the safeguards that are placed around this amendment to avoid any unreasonable action. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the New York items it is proposed to insert the following:

Examination and survey for straightening, widening, and improving the waters of Coney Island Creek, in the Borough of Brooklyn, city of New York, for the purpose of providing a ship canal, 200 feet wide at the bottom, connecting Sheepshead Bay with Gravesend Bay, with a view to forming a plan for their improvement, with the cost thereof, it being understood that the cost for the right of way or land to be taken is to be borne by the State of New York in conformity with an act of the legislature adopted at the session of 1918.

The Secretary of War is hereby requested to confer and cooperate with the commissioner of docks of the city of New York and the canal board of the State of New York to determine upon the character of the improvement.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this amendment is an authorization for a survey. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House and the Committee on Commerce of the Senate determined in the consideration of this bill that they would not provide for any new surveys this year. This is not, however, exactly a new survey. There is at present a creek dividing in part Coney Island from Brooklyn, which was used for many years as a waterway, permitting small barges to go from the upper bay in New York Harbor to Jamaica Bay, supplying much of the Boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens with very needed building material, coal, and so forth. While this is in a sense a departure from what the committee has recommended in other directions, it seems to me that the port of New York, where there is such great congestion to-day because of the fact that we are asked to take care of 60 per cent of the Nation's over-sea business, ought to be made an exception.

I might add, Mr. President, that at the recent session of the New York Legislature a bill was passed committing the State to take care of a very material part of the expenditure in connection with this improvement, and recently the board of estimate and apportionment of the city of New York passed a resolution indicating their intention to contribute toward it. If this survey is authorized, Congress may next year, upon a favorable recommendation from the War Department, provide for this important work in conjunction with the State and city of New York. The Government will only be asked to bear relatively a third of the cost. It is a very meritorious proposal, Mr. President, and I hope the chairman of the Committee on Commerce will agree that it be made an exception to the general rule adopted by the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think there were several amendments proposed on Saturday by the Senator's colleague [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I do not know that this is one of them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On Saturday I proposed one amendment on behalf of my colleague [Mr. CALDER], which was rejected, but this is not the one.

Mr. FLETCHER. The same objection, however, that was raised on Saturday to the amendment which was offered by the Senator applies to this. I have no doubt it is a meritorious proposition, but the House refused to put in any provisions for surveys at all. There were a number of proposals there that were meritorious; but the policy upon which this bill is framed eliminates all new surveys looking to new projects, and the Senate committee has followed that policy in reporting this bill; so that this would be a departure which would open up the whole field of surveys, and other Senators would offer amendments along the same line.

I think it would be a great mistake to provide for surveys in this bill. It is really an emergency measure, and these surveys, I think, can wait. I must insist that the objection to the proposed amendment is sound, in view of the principle and policy on which the bill is based. I therefore can not accept it, and must ask that it be voted down.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, just a word in reply to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. It is a fact that no surveys have been authorized in this bill; but if there is an emergency provision in connection with this measure, this is one. It is so important locally that the State of New York and the city of New York have indicated their willingness to bear a large proportion of the cost of the improvement. It has to do, in a measure, with carrying out a survey adopted last year, which provides for the connection of the waterways along the south side of Long Island.

As I have already stated, Mr. President, the city of New York is asked to handle in these war days 60 per cent of the Nation's over-sea business, and there is nothing that I know of that will help more materially in the performance of that great task than the improvement which is contemplated in this survey.

I hesitate to disagree with the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in this matter, but I do hope that, because of the importance of this matter to the city of New York, which is bearing so heavy a burden in our transportation problems, the Senate will authorize this survey.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say further that the rule we adopted was that none of these new matters should be taken up unless the War Department certified that it was a war measure and necessary to the national defense. No certificate of that sort has appeared in connection with the pending amendment, and therefore the objection is reinforced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. CALDER. I ask for a division.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments, with the exception of one reserved, were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. One amendment has been reserved.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understood that an amendment was reserved by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and my recollection is that it was on section 8.

Mr. SMOOT. I reserved a separate vote on section 8, which I understand now is section 9 because of a renumbering of the sections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 9. That if the Secretary of War shall determine that any of the contracts for work of river and harbor improvements entered into but not completed prior to April 6, 1917, the date of the entrance of the United States into the war with Germany, have become inequitable and unjust on account of increased cost of material and labor and other unforeseen conditions arising out of the war, he is hereby authorized, in his discretion and with the consent of the contractors, to modify and readjust the terms of said contracts in such manner as he may deem equitable and just: Provided, That said modifications and readjustments shall apply only to work under said contracts remaining to be done hereafter and shall not include any relief for work performed heretofore under said contracts, and any such sum as may be necessary to provide for the increased cost of the contracts due to said modifications and readjustments, not exceeding the sum of $2,000,000, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided further, That as a condition of any such contract being so modified, the Secretary of War shall have the right at the end of any fiscal year until the contract is completed to make such further modifications as in his judgment shall be advantageous to the United States and just to the contractor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, upon the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I indulge the vain hope that this amendment may not receive the approval of the Senate.

The best that can be said of the pending bill, in my judgment, is that it is the least objectionable of all river and harbor bills that have appeared since I have been a Member of the Senate. I had hoped that during the war the presentation and enactment of measures like this would be postponed and that appropriations for absolutely needful improvements in the harbors of the country would represent all river and harbor legislation until peace was declared. While the bill has been greatly modified, I regard it as nearly as objectionable as many of its predecessors.

We have gotten in the habit of making appropriations for and expending money upon projects in this country, of which a great many are found in all river and harbor bills, which, in my judgment, can not be successfully defended. Of course, the underlying theory of river and harbor bills is improvement in inland water navigation, and improvement in harbors as well, connected with the high seas, in order to increase and cheapen our facilities for communication.

It is perhaps expecting too much to hope for any substantial abandonment of our methods of appropriation in times of peace during times of war, either as regards rivers and harbors or as regards other subjects which find sustenance in bills that relieve the Treasury of its surplus funds.

I was greatly impressed with the comparison instituted by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] in his discussion of this measure two days ago, and which consisted in a computation of the number of $50 Liberty bonds which could be purchased by an unneeded appropriation of some $8,000,000 at this time. I might use the same method of illustrating the extravagant nature of other appropriations equally unneeded at the present time which we have enacted into law and which are embodied in bills now upon the calendar, but it is not necessary.

Mr. President, I do not believe that we even now realize what this war will cost before it shall have ended. There is nothing like this war in history, and consequently we have no standards of comparison. The war is a contest of endurance between the manhood and physical resources and forces of the peoples engaged in it. With the exception of German successes upon the eastern front, there has been no appreciable advance in the contest since the fall of 1914. We have been in the war about a year, and already the cost is far more than the cost of the Civil War from its inception to its close. The estimated cost for the current year is greatly in excess of that for the year just ended, and the cost of the next ensuing year will undoubtedly be more, I was about to say, than the combined cost of the two years previous; perhaps not. But its cost is enormous, so utterly beyond the imagination of the human mind to adequately conceive that the ability of this country to respond to the calls of the Government necessarily has a limitation somewhere; and that limitation will be reached earlier or postponed later in proportion as we devote the money paid into the Treasury by the people to the actual purposes for which it is raised.

I apprehend that until the clamorings and mutterings of the taxpayers are loud enough to reach the floors of the two Houses of Congress there will be little in the way of contraction and not much evidence of frugality or economy in our financial legislation. Hence all that I hope to do, in the few moments of time that I shall occupy, is again to register my objection and to protest against the enactment of measures like this beyond the sums absolutely necessary to carry out improvements which relate to harbors which are needed, and badly needed, for our war commerce, for the shipment and exportation of men and of equipment to the French front. That, of course, is not only a war expenditure, and therefore a necessary one, but it permanently and substantially improves those entrances to the sea from our coast which are essential to the transaction of the business of the Nation, and which in peace, as in war, are always active.

Mr. President, I have said, and I wish to repeat it, that we can spend all the money now in the Treasury and all of the revenues that we are to derive in the coming 10 years of the immediate future upon the improvement of rivers and creeks and estuaries and bodies of water which exist in esse and in posse, and we will not increase the water-borne commerce of the United States 1 per cent until the commercial and transportation conditions of the country are very radically changed. The expenditures of the Government for so-called river and harbor improvements have for a long time been in nearly inverse proportion to the decrease of water traffic upon the streams and bodies of water that have been the recipients of these appropriations; and it is inevitable that it should be so, Mr. President, since the land transportation system of the country, controlled by a comparatively few men, is averse to any water participation in the transportation business of the country.

We have taken over the railroads, it is true; but that is in pursuance of a strictly war policy, and a necessary step toward the active and efficient prosecution of our part of that war as one of the allies against Germany. It does not mean, and I do not think it can mean, a permanent transfer of the transportation system to the ends of the Government. I am not one of those who believe that this temporary expedient will become a permanent national policy. That will be determined hereafter. Whether it does or not, Mr. President, for the purposes of bills like this it is safe to say that until such a permanent policy is established there will be no change in railroad policy as affecting water transportation. Therefore the Mississippi, the Ohio, the Missouri, and other great inland rivers which at one time were utilized very freely for purposes of tansportation, may be improved until they are in a perfect condition and capable of carrying the largest boats afloat, but the expected benefits to transportation will not then materialize.

The railroad companies own a very considerable portion, if not the majority, of the real water fronts of the country on the coast and inland as well. Their acquisition of these advantages is intended to discourage water transportation quite as much as it is to aid the railroads in their methods of transportation. In Germany the strong hand of the Imperial Government has been used, and it was necessary that it be used, to divide the traffic between the water transportation system and the railway transportation system, and to compel the cooperation of the two to a common end. Without it the tremendous improvements there made would have failed of their object quite as completely as they have failed here.

A document issued by the Department of Commerce within the past six months tells us that during the 10-year period between 1906 and 1916 the tonnage on the Mississippi River and its tributaries decreased from 4,412,000 tons to 1,621,000 tons, or 63 per cent; and during that time I do not know how many hundred millions have been expended for river and harbor improvement. The same authority informs us that during that period a decrease of 24 per cent appears for canals and other inland waters. An average of these two percentages would be about 45; so that during our time of greatest improvement activity the tonnage upon our inland system—if I may so call it, our water system of transportation—has decreased fully 50 per cent.

Yet in the face of this, Mr. President, we are going ahead just the same, yielding to local pressure, invoking the recommendations of a board of engineers that, as far as I am able to judge, seems to be capable of favorably recommending almost any scheme on earth, and many of whose recommendations of the past, although carried practically to completion, have not materialized in benefits, notwithstanding the immense demands upon the Treasury at the present time for funds so sorely needed elsewhere. But I presume that the good work will go on and we will continue this carnival of expenditure and extravagance, notwithstanding these conditions, and unfortunately the basis of them will be that it aids in the prosecution of the war.

I wonder if we have enacted any bill carrying appropriations up to this time since the 6th day of April, 1917, which has not been based upon the theory or the pretense that it is designed for the prosecution of the war or necessary thereto? It is perhaps very trite to use the old comparison of "stealing the livery of heaven to serve the devil in" and apply it to the situation; yet it is perhaps the most appropriate one that has ever been penned so far.

I shall, as usual, record my vote against this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I trust the Senate will agree to this amendment, now section 9 of the bill, which was agreed to in the Committee of the Whole.

It is perhaps needless for me to say that I have no personal knowledge, except only as letters have come to the committee and contractors have appeared before the committee, as to the situation in which these contractors find themselves. The subject was raised before the Committee on Commerce by a delegation of eight or nine contractors on the Ohio River. I do not know them personally. I know nothing of the facts except as they gave them to us. This amendment was framed to cover all contractors doing the river and harbor work. It takes care of the situation on the Ohio River as well as all other contracts made in pursuance of the river and harbor bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator information as to the probable appropriation which will be necessary to meet these obligations?

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment provides that the amount shall not exceed $2,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it not fair to assume that if the contractors in connection with river and harbor work are compensated for losses that they have sustained we shall have to recognize all the contractors on every branch of work for the Government who may have sustained losses?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, that is a suggestion which probably holds good. This committee has only to deal with the particular subject before it, and I do not know myself how far this will extend. But I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this is not intended to reimburse the contractors for any loss. This provision is confined to an authorization to the War Department to readjust and modify contracts made prior to the war as to operations in the future after this act is passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has nothing to do with taking care of any losses that may have occurred heretofore.

Mr. GALLINGER. It simply provides against their sustaining losses in the future. I so understood it. I used the word "losses" with that meaning.

The thing that troubes me, if the Senator will permit just a word, is that this $2,000,000 is simply the beginning. If we are going to guarantee the men who take contracts to build dikes and do revetment work and dredging and all that sort of thing in connection with rivers and harbors, we will necessarily and inevitably be compelled to do the same thing so far as other contractors having Government work are concerned.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know how far it will extend. There was some provision inserted in the Post Office appropriation bill to this effect, but I do not believe there is very much public building going on. I think contracts of that sort are pretty well suspended anyhow. I do not know how far it may go, but it is the estimate made by the engineers that to readjust and modify these contracts to cover future work by these contractors the expense can be brought within $2,000,000. At any rate, it is limited to that, and they will have to come within that sum.

Mr. GALLINGER. They are limited to that for the present; but if it shall be found that the $2,000,000 will not cover the necessities of the case, of course we shall be asked to make further appropriations. That goes without the saying.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator from Florida permit me to ask a question of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire what he thinks ought to be done in the case of contracts for river and harbor work, or for naval vessels, or for supplies for the Post Office Department, or for any of the great works in connection with the Government which were entered into in good faith by citizens of this Republic prior to April 6, 1917, to be undertaken during the course of the following one, two, or three years, and which are now incomplete, and on which because of the war there is a greatly increased cost of carrying on those works, owing to the high prices of labor, the high prices of material of every kind, the higher price of foodstuffs, and of everything the contractors are obliged to use. I ask in a case of that sort does the Senator think that the individual citizen should be forced to carry out the contract even if it is going to impoverish him, or should the Government authorize the proper officer or officers to revise and recast the contracts for the uncompleted portion of the work?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will permit me I will reply in a very few words.

The individual citizen in a great many instances has been ruined in the past by making an unfortunate contract. The Government as far as I know has never reimbursed him. But however that may be, I have offered no objection as to the propriety or necessity of this legislation. What I wanted to get at, if I could, was the probability as to the future, so far as this matter is concerned. I take it that if the $2,000,000 appropriated in this bill does not protect them all we will be asked to make a further appropriation. I have no idea that $2,000,000 will accomplish the purpose the committee has in view.

Then, again, if we take care of these people I see no reason why we should not take care of every citizen of the Republic who has any dealings with the Government and who took contracts under similar conditions. So I was curious to know where it would lead us and what the probable expense would be ultimately. I think it will be, in place of $2,000,000, five times $2,000,000, and perhaps ten times $2,000,000, before we get through with it; but I may be wrong.

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator from Florida will permit me just a word more, we do not know exactly where it will lead. We took the best evidence we could. We had the assistance of Col. Newcomer, Assistant Chief Engineer, who told us that it possibly would amount to a million and a half, and might run up to $2,000,000; he could not say. But it was the feeling of the Commerce Committee that any unfortunate citizen who has uncompleted contracts entered into prior to the war ought to be relieved by appropriate legislation. We were told that in the case of the Navy some contracts were given which had several years to run and which had been recast. A prominent member of our committee told of an instance in which if the contractor had been compelled to complete his contract he would have suffered a loss of over $2,000,000 on a single ship.

Surely this great Government ought not to require such awful losses to the citizen when the event is brought about by no act of that citizen; something he could not foresee. The citizen could not tell that this war was coming on. He entered into contract with the Nation in good faith prior to the war, and if subsequent to the outbreak of the war the contractor is going to suffer this awful loss the Nation ought to relieve him, it seems to me.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator talks about the citizen. Suppose we extend this to the citizens of our great country, and say that every man who took a contract in good faith not for the Government but in private business shall be protected. The morals of it are the same from my viewpoint.

Mr. THOMAS. And the reasons are the same.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the reasons are the same. This is a class of citizens, and there are many other classes of citizens who are exactly in the same fix.

Mr. FLETCHER. To continue, Mr. President, I call attention to the language of the amendment:

> Any such sum as may be necessary to provide for the increased cost of the contracts due to said modifications and readjustments, not exceeding the sum of $2,000,000, is hereby appropriated—

And so forth.

The department will be limited to that sum. The testimony before the committee was to the effect that when these contracts were made the contractors were able to get labor at $1.35 and $1.50 a day, perhaps as high as $1.75 or $2. Now they are paying for the same labor $3.50 and $3.75 and $4 a day. Further, the testimony shows that the prices they have to pay are at least double former prices for material and labor—100 per cent or 125 per cent higher.

Of course, if the contractors had made a profit on a contract they would not have paid that profit back to the Government. I admit that. But here is a situation where contracts were entered into in 1914, 1915, and 1916, some of them going as far back as 1913. They have, especially since April, 1917, been subjected to conditions that they could not foresee and are not responsible for, which have imposed upon them these extraordinary increases in the cost of their work, so that many of them have already lost everything, practically, that they had when they entered into these contracts. Some of them now are in a position where they will have to discontinue the work because they are utterly unable to go on with it. In one instance one of the contractors told me his concern had lost $600,000 already on their contract, and that it was three-fourths finished, so that they would get very little relief under this bill.

There is some consideration, it seems to me, to be paid in connection with these contracts. The contractors are not responsible for these conditions. Not only has the cost of labor and material enormously increased—from 100 to 125 per cent—but the difficulties of transportation, the difficulties of getting the material that they need, and that sort of thing, have been simply insurmountable in some instances. It is a question whether the public work in such instances will go on at all unless we can authorize the modification or readjustment of these contracts upon a reasonable basis as to the work that is to be done hereafter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator for a question. I should like to finish. I am not going to take much time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can see a great deal of justice in what the Senator is saying and I ask him this question: Is it not true that in many cases some of the losses of the contractors have been occasioned by the very necessities of the Government itself, as to transportation facilities which have been required, so that the contractor is not to blame for it? It has not been an emergency which has been encountered in the ordinary processes of business, but the loss, as I said, has been occasioned in many instances by the necessities of the Government itself.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] suggested that it ought to be extended possibly on the same basis to private contractors. If private contractors are suffering, I should like to see some relief, if Congress can give it; I should like to see such contractors saved as much loss as possible; but in reference to governmental matters I know what the Senator from Florida says is absolutely true, that many of the contractors are losing their all. It does not apply, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] tells me, to past transactions, those that have been completed since the war began, but it simply applies to future transactions. It looks to me that the Government ought really, as a matter of even-handed justice, to be willing to relieve as much as possible from the ruinous condition which the war has imposed on these contractors.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think what the Senator from Michigan suggests is quite true, that the necessities of the Government relating to certain requirements as to transportation and as to material have brought about this situation to a large extent. As I said, the activities of the Government have created an enormous demand for labor and raised the price of labor of this sort very extensively, and the needs of the Government as to certain material and as to transportation facilities have been such that the Government itself is to a degree responsible for the increased burdens which fall upon these contractors.

I think it is fair and just in these circumstances for the Government to say we will authorize a modification of the contract covering operations after this bill becomes a law—not as to what has gone before, as that would involve an enormous expense, a tremendous amount of calculation, and a large variation of opinion as to just what the losses really were; and in that case we would have to take into consideration what the profits were, so as to have the matter equitably adjusted; but as to the future operations under these contracts, beginning away back in 1913 and 1914, all made prior to the war, prior to the existence of these conditions, it seems to me fair and just that we should authorize the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers and his force to make a fair and reasonable modification of the contracts.

I am going to leave the matter there for the Senate. It is a matter in which I have no concern whatever except in connection with this bill and with the testimony that developed before the committee. I believe there are instances where it would be an unconscionable thing to look to the bonds of these contractors in those circumstances and force them into bankruptcy, and in many instances it would be a great injury to the Government to compel them to stop their work. In such cases the Government would have to seek other contractors and we would have to pay the prices that now exist as to new work, and so forth.

So the Government is not losing anything, really, by this proposal, it seems to me. Unless this is done, there will be a necessity here and there to call for new bids and enter into new contracts with other people to carry on the work already contracted for by those who are now doing it, because many of them can not continue. In that event there will be necessarily a large additional amount that the Government will have to pay in order to complete the work.

So I do not believe that the Government would be out of pocket really if it readjusted these contracts to-day and allowed the modification of them, because unless they do it the Government will have to make other contracts at enormously advanced prices, and therefore would have to pay more money than the present contracts call for.

I think it is fair and just to make this arrangement. The contractors themselves, of course, would very much desire that this readjustment should relate back to April, 1917, and they have very good argument and reason to offer for that, but the committee has limited it to future operations and only to such work as is done after this bill becomes a law.

Mr. President, with reference to river and harbor legislation I perhaps may be permitted to say just a few words somewhat in reply to the observations of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] this morning. The Senator says that we ought not under any circumstances to enter into any new improvements that are not called for by our war necessities. That is precisely what is done in this bill. There is not a single new improvement provided for that has not been certified to as a war measure by the Secretary of War—absolutely none. Maintenance is provided for so as to prevent the wasting away of the improvements already made, and such work as is already contracted for and undertaken is proceeded with where it is certified to be an economy and a need. That is the principle upon which the bill is framed, so that every objection which can be made to this sort of legislation outside of the general objection that there ought to be no legislation of the kind is overcome by the very principle and policy upon which the bill is founded.

A remarkable speech was made in the Senate last Saturday by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], remarkable in many ways, because of its general denunciations of river and harbor legislation, remarkable because of its display of lack of accurate information and as an evidence of misinformation on this great public question, the improvement and the development of the waterways of the country. The Senator proceeded to use such strong language in connection with this legislation, as corrupt, as criminal waste, as pork, and a dishonest, reckless misappropriation of public funds, robbery of the Treasury, and all such loose expressions and indictments as those words would imply. Those observations either meant, or they did not mean anything, that for the past 50 years—I think he went back as far as 100 years—this sort of abuse and criticism applies to every great Secretary of War this country has had, to every great Chief of Engineers that the country has had, because they have approved in ninety-odd per cent—I will say practically all—the items in the various river and harbor bills.

The indictment applies to every great Committee on Commerce we have had in the Senate—to such distinguished men as Frye of Maine, to my friend, the Senator from Minnesota, Mr. NELSON, and to other great members of that committee, which is one of the most important commitees of the Senate. The denunciation applies also to the great Committees on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives during that period—to the distinguished chairman of that committee, and to the members of that commitee, which is one of the most active and important in that body. The denunciation applies even to the Presidents of our country, who have approved and signed these bills which have been denounced as corrupt, as robbery, as "pork," and as a reckless waste of public funds.

Why, Mr. President, it is perfectly absurd to make any such claim as that or to make any such sweeping denunciation respecting river and harbor legislation. What situation would we be in to-day, let me ask any reasonable man, if the Government had failed to appropriate money to improve the great harbors at New York, at Philadelphia, at Boston, at Baltimore, at Hampton Roads, at Newport News, at Norfolk, at Charleston, at Savannah, at Brunswick, at Jacksonville, at Key West, at Tampa, at Pensacola, at Mobile, at New Orleans, or at Galveston? The same, at Los Angeles, Portland, and Seattle? What would be the situation of the country to-day if we had not taken care of those harbors? The Government's obligation was to do it, because the Government controlled those navigable waters. The navigable waters of the country were not within the jurisdiction of the States. Individuals could not interfere; individuals could not develop them or improve them; the States could not do it, because they were, as highways of commerce, under the control and jurisdiction of the Federal Government. Therefore the responsibility rested upon this Government to improve and develop them. What would be our situation if we had not built the Soo Canal? What about the great commerce on the Great Lakes—the most stupendous and the least expensive water-borne commerce in the country—if we had not improved the ports and harbors on those lakes? It is perfectly absurd to claim that there has been any mistake about the policy which we have been pursuing in taking care of the navigable waters of the United States.

The same rule applies to the rivers which empty into these harbors and which are tributary to these ports. We would have been in a weak and defenseless position to-day but for the policy which we have pursued.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Florida is criticizing another Senator, and I have nothing to say about that; but I will ask the Senator if he recalls a time when any of us who have criticized river and harbor bills ever placed ourselves in antagonism to the harbors of the country or the great rivers of the country in the matter of legislation?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there have been——

Mr. GALLINGER. A word further. The Senator will recall the fact that two years ago some of us opposed a river and harbor bill then pending with some earnestness, contending that there were items in it which were not necessary; that the proposition was to expend money on small streams and creeks and rivulets that never could bear any commerce. The result of that opposition was to reduce the bill $30,000,000; and even those who were most anxious to have the bill passed in its original form concluded that they had better accept that modification. I do not know that any harm has come to the country through the saving of those $30,000,000. So some of us who are disposed to criticize the present bill are of opinion that there are a great many little streams which are named in this bill for which small amounts are proposed to be appropriated for maintenance that might just as well be dropped entirely from consideration in river and harbor legislation. They will never amount to anything. We may expend just as much money as we please on them, but there will be no commerce on them.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from New Hampshire that all I ask of opponents of this legislation, and all I have ever asked of those who have fought river and harbor bills on this floor, was to specify. Why do you not point out the rivers and streams and creeks, as you call them, that ought to be eliminated from the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we did that two years ago, and as a result the bill was reduced. I do not recall the exact amount of the reduction.

Mr. FLETCHER. But that reduction amounted to nothing; it was simply a postponement. The money which was then provided in the bill is going to be expended.

Mr. GALLINGER. The names of those streams have never appeared in a bill since then, and they are not in the pending bill. Those appropriations were taken from the bill as a result of that discussion.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is not one of those small items which was stricken from the bill; they are in the bill here to-day, except as to some projects which have been recommended but have not yet been adopted by Congress, as they will be when normal times come; and they are going to remain in this bill until the improvements are properly taken care of. Talk about the saving to the country of $30,000,000! That is an absurdity; it is perfectly ridiculous. You save nothing; you simply postpone the day when that money will have to be spent upon your rivers and harbors. It has got to be spent, and a part of it is carried in this bill now.

Mr. GALLINGER. We are not talking about this bill; we are talking about scores of little streams——

Mr. FLETCHER. I know, Mr. President. There have been Senators on this floor who have stood for the development of harbors, and the railroads of this country have favored the improvement of harbors because they offered them terminals. The railroads have wanted the harbors improved; but where will you find a railroad that wants a river or a canal as a competitor in the transportation business?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida is not doing me justice.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am answering the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not talking about highways which compete with railroads; I am talking about these insignificant small streams. The Senator from Florida knows what I am talking about.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know perfectly well what the Senator is talking about, and I am answering him.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Florida knows that bill was reduced from over $70,000,000 to $30,000,000. Those appropriations were then discontinued because of the opposition made to them, and they have not appeared in river and harbor bills since then. The Senator on Saturday said that these little appropriations were merely for maintenance.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; they are.

Mr. GALLINGER. But they are not the kind of appropriations that were in the river and harbor bill two years ago.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; they are. I am simply asking the Senator to name the items in the bill to which he objects. I am perfectly willing to go over every item in this bill with any man.

Mr. GALLINGER. I called attention to some of them the other day, and so did the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], naming them. I think very likely I could call attention to them to-day, but I do not care to take the time to do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. The reason which was urged for opposition to the bill by the Senator from Iowa and the reason now urged for opposition to the bill by the Senator from New Hampshire apparently is that there are insignificant matters taken care of by the bill—matters which are insignificant in amount and insignificant as to the waterways.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. If those Senators favor economy, if they object to the bill because it appropriates money, why object to it because it does not appropriate enough, or why object to it because the appropriations are insignificant?

Mr. GALLINGER. This is not the time to do it. We did that two years ago, and, as I have said, reduced the bill from over $70,000,000 to $30,000,000; and the Senator from Florida knows that. The Senator ultimately agreed to it, because the President thought it was a wise thing to do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not remember that. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] quoted from the speech of Mr. Burton on Saturday, I believe, and yet the last bill reported to the other House by Mr. Burton, as chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of that House, carried something over $80,000,000—the largest appropriation ever carried in any river and harbor bill in the history of the country. The former Senator from Ohio was quoted as authority for these alleged extravagances and wastes that are now going on under a bill which carries less than $20,000,000, while the bill to which the Senator refers carried about $45,000,000, as I remember.

Mr. GALLINGER. It carried more than that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Perhaps it carried $47,000,000. I am contending, however, that we have not saved any money. The amount of the appropriation was subsequently reduced in another bill, but none of the items in that bill have gone off the record. That money will be eventually appropriated by Congress, because it provided for improvements which will be needed and ought to be made.

It is simply a postponement of the appropriation, so far as river and harbor improvements are concerned; it has not saved the country anything. If I contemplate to-day buying a new pair of shoes, but, after thinking it all over and viewing the size of my bank account, I say, "I guess I will get along with the old ones a while yet," and I do not buy the shoes to-day, I have not saved the price of the shoes, because eventually I will have to have those shoes. It is the same way with reference to the alleged saving of $30,000,000. That money has eventually got to go to these improvements, and it will go to them; there is no question about that.

I am not deterred by the general denunciation of river and harbor legislation and by the cry of "pork" with reference to what this country is going to do. The people of this country will say that these waterways are important, and this means of transportation, these facilities for taking care of the commerce of the country, are going to be provided. You may postpone them for a while, you may mislead some people about them for a while, but the people are going to insist upon these improvements, because they mean everything to our prosperity and welfare. You can not get along, you can not do the business here at home, let alone abroad, in a commercial way, you can not move the products of this country, you can not get commodities from the producers to the consumers and from the manufacturers to the dealers and consumers unless you provide means of transportation, and this is one of the means of transportation that the people are going to insist upon being provided.

I am in favor of good roads, I am in favor of railroads, I am in favor of providing every means of transportation that it is possible to provide with any reasonable outlay on the part of the Government. This outlay is incumbent upon the Government, because the Government controls the navigable streams of the country.

So, Mr. President, this general denunciation of river and harbor legislation, the characterization of it as corrupt, as criminally wasteful, as lacking in good faith and honest dealing with the public funds, is based upon just that sort of information that would be submitted to an expert, for instance, who was called upon to give his opinion as to the water-power possibilities of Great Falls if all the data handed to him consisted of a bucket of water out of the Potomac River. The basis for the denunciation of river and harbor legislation, the general broad denunciation that is indulged in and the cry of "pork," the indictment and the criticism of public officials, committees of Congress, and the friends of this kind of legislation is comparable to the situation if an engineer were called upon to give an expert opinion whether the improvement of a given river is commercially justified, without furnishing to him information as to the depth, the width, and the volume of water in that river. There is no foundation at all for this denunciation; there are no facts upon which to base it; it is just a general, broad, sweeping denunciation.

Mr. President, I dislike to discuss the speech of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] in his absence; it is not in the RECORD; but I heard it, and I do not feel that it ought to be passed by without some response, because he himself said that a good many of the statements which he quoted from others had never been denied; and I do not want any writer or speaker in the future to be able to point to the language used by the Senator when it is printed in the RECORD and to say that nobody denied or questioned any of those statements. I say there is no foundation whatever for that remarkable exhibition of general denunciation and criticism. Both the Utah Senators, I am afraid, are rather vying with each other these days in their attitude toward river and harbor legislation; they are outstripping Don Quixote in his palmiest days when he was fighting windmills; but the junior Senator from Utah has no pacemaker either in history or in literature, unless it be that fellow who, the newspapers told us a short time ago, undertook to ride up the west Capitol steps on his horse, with the intention of proceeding right into the Halls of Congress in an effort to "teach Congress confidence and horse sense." He was prompted by a high sense of public duty, similar to that which the junior Senator from Utah was laboring under, I take it. The idea of the man on horseback was that he was to represent confidence and the horse was to represent horse sense. So on Saturday the junior Senator from Utah rode into the Senate on his hobby of economy and reactionary conservatism. He himself represented superiority—superiority in wisdom, superiority in integrity, superiority in patriotism, superiority in information, superiority in broad statesmanship, superiority in his conception of fiduciary responsibility.

Mr. President, it may be that that Senator can reach some people in this country with that sort of thing, but I think he underestimates the intelligence of the American people. He must figure that the average intelligence of the people of the United States is that of a 5-year-old child, and he assumes, I presume, that below that age he would be able to find some believers. At any rate, there was no justification whatever for that assault; and the general, broad denunciations of legislation of this kind have just about as much basis as I have indicated in the reference to the observations of the Senator from Utah.

I believe, Mr. President, I will not take up further the time of the Senate. I felt like saying this much, and for the present I leave the matter there.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, like every other question, the question we are now discussing has two sides to it. The contractor is on one side and the Government is on the other. It is the duty of the Commerce Committee of the Senate to look after and take care of the interests of the Government when they are preparing river and harbor legislation. The purpose of this provision of the bill was to take care of the Government of the United States and to save it from a very great loss financially. Now, why?

The contracts that are under discussion were made before the outbreak of the war. The bill does not have reference to any other class of contracts. If the Government, having made these contracts in good faith on the part of the Government and the contractor before the beginning of the war, were literally to enforce the contracts, what would happen? These contractors, Mr. President, under existing conditions, can not comply with their obligations. They can not complete the work in which they are engaged without a financial loss of such a character as would put them into bankruptcy, perhaps most of them. Now, if the Government of the United States is going to stand firmly for the enforcement of these contracts according to the terms of the contracts, the result will be that the Government will have to take over these contracts. They will have to declare them forfeited, or the contractors will have to surrender them. Most of them have nominal bonds. I do not know to what extent their bonds cover the amount of their contracts, but the question is whether they are enforceable or not, whether they can be collected or not; and if they can be, we all know that it will be at the end of a long lawsuit. So in order to save the Government, as we saw it, from a heavy loss, we provided that the Government of the United States might readjust these contracts in such a manner as to save the contractors from bankruptcy, if possible, in an amount not in excess of $2,000,000.

Our deliberate judgment, Mr. President, was and is that if these contracts are to be surrendered and the Government of the United States must readvertise and relet these contracts, it will cost five or ten million dollars more than the expenditure we proposed in this bill to remedy the situation which is $2,000,000. That is the whole case as I see it.

It is up to the Senate to say whether or not in justice to the Government this step should be taken. I dismiss the contractor. I make no defense for him. I am not here to plead his cause or to take care of his interests. My business is, as a member of the Commerce Committee and as a Member of the Senate, to take care of the Government as best I can. In doing that I am willing to be fair and just to the citizen; that is all. Our conclusion was that if the Secretary of War, through the Chief of Engineers, was permitted to readjust these contracts along fair and reasonable lines, he might perhaps save a number of these contractors from bankruptcy, and at the same time save the Government of the United States many, many millions of dollars, because, since material and labor have advanced from 75 to 100 per cent, and as a result of the difficulties accruing from the impossibility of transporting materials, the whole business of them will be in bankruptcy, and the Government in the end will have to take over the work and complete it at a cost many, many million dollars more than it can be completed for under the provisions of this bill; and that is why this section is in the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Can the Senator inform me as to what will be the probable cost of completing the contracts that are now unfulfilled at the contract prices, and what it would cost at present prices?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am sorry that I can not give the Senator from Ohio the correct and definite information; but the conclusion of the committee was—and we were aided in reaching that conclusion by the representative of the Chief of Engineers who was before the committee—that these contracts might be readjusted in such a way that all of those now in existence that come within the terms of this bill could be completed for a sum not exceeding $2,000,000 in excess of the present contract prices.

Mr. President, that is the whole case. The Senate can say whether or not they are willing to trust the War Department, through its Chief of Engineers, to investigate this whole question, to take up all of the contracts that come within the provisions of this bill and readjust them in such a manner as to save the contractors from bankruptcy and save the Government in that way many millions of dollars.

It must be borne in mind that these contracts were all entered into before the war. Some of them were made in 1913, 1914, 1915, and so on. They have not been completed. This section does not apply to any other class of contracts. It applies only to those entered into before the war. I insist, Mr. President, that it is good legislation. I insist that it is the only means I can conceive of; it is the only means that the Engineering Department, representing the Secretary of War, could suggest, that would save the Government in the end, as I have already said, many, many millions of dollars, perhaps ten or fifteen, if they have to take over these contracts and execute them now, with the increased cost of materials and labor and the difficulties of transportation.

There is one other observation that I want to make, and then I shall be through.

There has been a great deal said during this discussion about the provisions of this bill that look to the improvement of "cricks"—we call them down in my country "creeks," but I recognize the name—and sloughs. At first blush one would say: "Why are you improving a creek or a slough where there is no commerce?" It is fair to suppose that on these creeks and sloughs there is no commerce, and that none can be carried over them, but if you will examine the reports of the engineers with reference to these matters you will get real information.

For instance, take Cooper Creek. It carries five and a half million dollars of commerce annually—more commerce than a great many so-called rivers of the country carry—at a very small appropriation. This creek is one of those waterways that lead up into an industrial section where transportation is absolutely necessary for the conduct of their business and to get their products out to a market. Its maintenance is appropriated for together with a string of creeks—five or six that have been mentioned—that are in the same category. They are grouped for convenience. Some of these creeks may have no money expended upon them, because the engineers may not deem it necessary, but there are others where they will deem it necessary and they can spend this appropriation on them. Those creeks that have been so severely criticized carry annually $5,000,000 of commerce that can not be gotten to a market in any other way. There are no railroad facilities which can carry to a market the products of the country that these creeks traverse. They must rely upon this water transportation to get their products to a market, and it amounts to more than $5,000,000 annually.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator refer to the group when he makes that statement?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I mean that particular group; yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Some of them carry comparatively little.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, some of them carry comparatively little, and those perhaps will have none of this money expended on them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator, who is always frank in his discussions in the Senate, tell the Senate the character of this commerce?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not got it here. The reports show it, but I have not got it with these figures. I do not know exactly what the character of the commerce is. All I know is the total. It does not make much difference what the character is if it has the value.

Mr. GALLINGER. It makes a little difference whether it is saw logs, which might be floated down the stream, or whether it is oysters, which in one instance——

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is nothing we need now more than saw logs. They are a war necessity.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand, but in our country we have water enough to float them down the streams.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Unfortunately, we have not; but then you have not the trees. That is the difference.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes, we have.

Mr. BANKHEAD. You have not any trees up there that are big enough to build ships like we have.

Mr. GALLINGER. When the debate was on before, when these creeks were referred to—by the way, I pronounce the word "creeks"; is that correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know what the correct pronunciation is. We call them "creeks."

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is right.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I recognize the name, whatever you call them.

Mr. GALLINGER. During that debate it was shown that in a great many instances the commerce was inconsequential——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. And that it was made up of saw logs and various and sundry other things that might have been transported, and in our country are transported, in another way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. That may be true, but we have not got the other way.

Mr. GALLINGER. But apparently where there are these little streams that are hardly big enough to float a canoe the Government is asked to make an appropriation for them, so as to get down the little commerce that could be transported, possibly at a little greater expense, in some other way. That was the criticism that we made.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not objecting to the criticism.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, if my colleague will permit me——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am through.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have the report here before me, and I can show what the commerce was.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. RANSDELL. Let me help the Senator out with this, if he pleases.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I am glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator from New Hampshire asked what the commerce was. These creeks—Fishing Creek, Contentnea, and Swift—all appear on page 5 of the bill. There are a number of other items in that same appropriation; but the report of the Chief of Engineers, on page 559, shows that in 1915 Fishing Creek had a commerce of 2,450 tons, valued at $34,926. Under the head of "Commercial statistics," the report says——

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator tell, as he goes along, how much money has been expended on those several creeks?

Mr. RANSDELL. Let me answer one thing at a time, if the Senator pleases. The commerce consisted of cotton seed, cottonseed meal, and timber. The report does not give the exact amount. It says that the timber was rafted. I can not find the total amount expended. This does not show.

Now, I want to show the commerce on the next one here, Swift Creek. The commerce on that creek in 1916 was 21,781 tons, valued at $324,309. The principal items of commerce were cotton, cotton seed, general merchandise, fertilizer, and timber.

In the case of the other one, Contentnea Creek, page 573 of the report shows that the commerce in 1916 was 7,447 tons, valued at $148,150; and that commerce, it says, was carried in steamers drawing from 3 to 4 feet, except timber, which was rafted. The principal articles of commerce were cotton, cotton seed, cottonseed meal, fertilizer, and timber.

Those were the creeks which I think the Senator alluded to as not having water enough in them to float a bar of Ivory soap.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the Senator is wrong.

Mr. RANSDELL. The fact is that they have considerable commerce on them.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is wrong. I may have said that two years ago.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator said something about Ivory soap the other day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I did. I said there were streams that would hardly float a cake of Ivory soap.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator spoke of the items that were referred to by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. He mentioned the Kissimmee River in Florida, the Caloosahatchee, and the Withlacoochee, in addition to the three I have just referred to.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I want to secure a little information about Contentnea Creek.

Mr. RANSDELL. All right. I have it here. I shall be glad to try to answer the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator suggests that that creek conveyed a little over 7,000 tons during the year?

Mr. RANSDELL. That is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator tell us just what has been expended on that creek, not this year, but since that vast improvement commenced?

Mr. RANSDELL. The report does not show it. If I can find it, I will give it to the Senator and put it in the RECORD. The report does not show it, but I want to say to the Senator that the item there in which Contentnea Creek appears reads thus:

Manteo Bay, Scuppernong, Pamlico, Tar, South, Bay, Neuse, and Trent Rivers, Fishing, Contentnea, Swift, and Smith Creeks, and waterway connecting Swan Quarter Bay with Deep Bay, N. C.: For maintenance, $19,200.

There are a number of waterways in this item. The total appropriation for the whole is $19,200, and there is a very large commerce in the aggregate on them. It is true that Contentnea Creek had only 7,447 tons, but in the aggregate the commerce of all those creeks runs very considerably into the millions, and into a large tonnage, and we are appropriating very little money for them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator take the other items in that same schedule and tell us something about them? He has cited three. I think there are some other items in that same schedule, are there not?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir. There is Fishing Creek, which I have just read to the Senator, and Swift Creek and Smiths Creek.

Mr. GALLINGER. What are the others?

Mr. RANSDELL. Those seem to be the only creeks in this item. There is Manteo Bay, and then there are the Scuppernong, Pamlico, Tar, South, Bay, Neuse, and Trent Rivers. Those are rivers, and then there are four creeks—Fishing Creek, Contentnea Creek, Swift Creek, and Smiths Creek.

In regard to the improvement of Contentnea Creek, the report shows that—

The work of the year consisted of snagging for the purpose of clearing the natural channel of obstructions from the mouth to Snow Hill, 32 miles above. This work was carried on entirely by Government plant and hired labor, at a cost of $1,010.72. The U. S. hoister Contentnea began operations on this stream on February 1, 1917, and to March 16, 1917, removed a total of 38 large logs, 11 stumps, 33 snags, 22 saw logs, and 9 trees from the channel, and cut and hauled back 37 trees from the banks. This work was accomplished at a cost of $942.88, which gives a unit cost of $6.285 per obstruction or threatened obstruction removed. Other expenditures were $67.84, and were in payment for superintendence and main-office expenses.

I want to say just a word about the other items there.

The Kissimmee River in Florida, the Caloosahatchee in the same State, and the Withlacoochee were criticized as worthless creeks. On the Kissimmee River in 1916 13,625 tons were carried, valued at $410,142. On the Caloosahatchee River, in the same year, 55,304 tons were carried; and please listen, Senators, to the value of that commerce—$3,214,943. On the Withlacoochee, in 1915, the commerce was 20,789 tons, valued at $195,186.

In other words, those three creeks or small streams, or whatever you may choose to call them, carried over 4,000,000 tons of commerce.

Now, let me read this item to the Senate. It appears on page 7 of the bill:

Kissimmee, Caloosahatchee, Orange, Anclote, Crystal, Withlacoochee, and Suwannee Rivers, Charlotte Harbor, Sarasota Bay, and Clearwater Harbor and Boca Ceiga Bay, Fla.: For maintenance, $4,000.

For all the enormous commerce on these three small streams, for the commerce of several harbors and the other streams, some very large and important rivers, we give only $4,000. The criticisms are absolutely without foundation. The bill could not have been framed on more conservative and wise lines than this bill has been framed.

Mr. FLETCHER. If I may interrupt the Senator, I ask him whether he will verify this statement. A good deal has been said about the loss of tonnage on these waterways, canals, and rivers in volume. That is the general statement as made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] this morning, to the effect that there had been a decrease in the amount of tonnage on the inland waterways of the country. I ask the Senator whether he will verify the opinion which has been expressed to me by those who ought to know and do know that whereas the volume of tonnage may have decreased the value of tonnage has not decreased in that way, that in most instances the value of the tonnage on the contrary has increased.

For instance, the farmer to-day, instead of going to market with his hay, corn, and bulky stuff, carries to market pigs, cattle, butter, chickens, eggs, and a few things that he makes at home. So in transporting these products, whereas the tonnage may show a decrease, the value of those products has enormously increased, and the transportation is needed just as much now for those products as for the more bulky products that the farmer carried—hay and corn—which he now converts into pigs and cattle.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to say, in reply to the Senator, I think he has stated the case absolutely fairly. Commerce has diminished, beyond any question, on some of the larger rivers, notably the Mississippi River. There is not as much commerce on the Mississippi River as there was many years ago, and not as much commerce on the Ohio River as formerly. The reason is perfectly apparent. Railroad lines parallel the river on both sides, and those railroads have driven the boats out of business. There is no doubt about that; but taking the country as a whole, I am convinced from my study of the subject—and I have studied it as well as I could for a number of years—there is a great deal more commerce carried on our waterways than ever before. As the Senator from Florida says, it is very much more valuable commerce. There is a little river in my own State not even referred to in this bill. It is the Terrebonne. I was told when I visited it several days ago that there are over 1,000 boats on that little river. They do an immense business down there. It is a local business, if you please. There is no railroad there. They have one of the best shrimp canneries in the world; they can more oysters there than in any place I know of. There are a number of big sugar factories there. There are plants of every kind on that little river. It is not even mentioned in this bill.

So it is in other States. There is a big commerce, especially on these little streams that are referred to as creeks. They are streams which are exceedingly valuable to the people living on their banks. As a rule, they furnish the only transportation for the people. The railroads are not convenient, or if they be convenient the little streams furnish a means of transportation up and down to railroad points, and the amounts are ridiculously small compared with the value of the great commerce on these small streams.

It is not the small streams that ought to be criticized, if any are to be criticized; it is some of the larger streams, on which the commerce has been driven away because of railroad opposition.

I agree with some of the Senators who say we are not going to get the waterways properly used until we regulate, in a very stringent manner, the railroads of this country or take them over. I for one would hate to see them taken over by the Government. Strong advocate as I have always been of waterways, I want to see a wise, proper, businesslike development of every means of transportation we have. I want to see the individual do whatever he can. I am not one of those who would like to see the Government go into every business under the sun. There is enough commerce for all. The waterways, the highways, and the railways all ought to be used wisely, and the railroads should be prohibited from driving the commerce off the waterways by unfair, improper competition.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the wisdom of improving and maintaining the system of water transportation has been proven by experience in this country and every other country in the world where the experiment has been made. It is a tribute to the wisdom and vision of the great railroad magnates and captains of industry that they discovered some years ago the unwisdom of attempting the destruction and prohibition of river transportation. As a matter of fact, the growing commerce of this country, the increase in population, and the conditions of modern civilization demand all the means of transportation both by rail and water available to meet the demands of our increasing trade. These facts are so well known that any lengthy discussion at this time would be entirely out of place and a needless consumption of the Senate's precious time. If there is any graft in this legislation, as has been suggested, no particular section of the country has a corner on it. Really there is no piece of legislation considered by the Congress at this or any other session more general in character than this. You can take the map of the United States—a map of ordinary size—and put a silver dollar on any place on that map and it touches some project provided for in this bill. Beginning on the eastern coast of Maine and going entirely around the Republic to Alaska you will find every State with a water front interested in this bill. The same is true with reference to the States located in the interior. Every river that bears upon its bosom commerce in which the people are interested, every lake with a port and canal which our commerce needs, is provided for in this bill. It is nation-wide in its scope and universal in the opportunities which it is intended to afford.

But I did not rise for the purpose of defending this bill against the immature criticisms, the unwarranted animadversions upon it, and the ill-tempered attacks that have been made by honorable Senators. It is an easy matter to get up and plant oneself on the circumference of universality and "cuss out" creation. Denunciation is easy and criticism requires no special information or technical knowledge of the subject criticized. For my own vote upon this bill I am perfectly willing to leave to the common sense and patriotism of my constituents to determine the correctness of it. But I want to say just a word with reference to the amendment pending before the Senate. It is not the policy of this Government, as I understand it, and never was, and I trust never will be, to drive a hard bargain with its citizens. I do not suppose there is a man living beneath the Stars and Stripes who has quite as much contempt for the craven profiteer or the patriot for pelf, for the man who would plunder and rob his Government, as I have. I think a man who would take advantage of the present emergency brought about by the war to rob and plunder the public is an enemy to the Government and ought to be treated as such. But when men who have taken contracts to do Government work before war was declared, when conditions were so different from what they are to-day, find themselves up against a situation that could not have been anticipated or avoided and to whom it means ruin if the contract shall be enforced, it is perfectly proper for the Government to see that justice shall be done them and save them from bankruptcy. I differ somewhat from the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] with reference to the duty of Senators in the matter of protecting the interests of individuals when the interest of the Government is also involved. I deem it quite as much my duty to insist that this Government shall deal justly with the private citizen as it is my duty to see that the private citizen shall deal honestly, patriotically, and justly with his Government.

Now, I do not know personally a single individual who asks relief under the terms of this amendment. I am not interested in any contractor or person to be benefited by the adoption of this amendment; but I do know that conditions have changed, and as conditions have changed it becomes necessary that the Government should modify this contract. To fail to do so, in my judgment, would be the acme of injustice. There is a moral obligation resting upon Congress to see that those men who have entered into contracts with the Government to do Government work prior to April, 1917, which contracts are yet to be executed, are not destroyed on account of the change which the war has brought about. It is insisted that a large amount of money, larger than we probably anticipate, will be necessary to meet or carry out the purposes of this amendment. The amount cuts no figure. A moral obligation can not be measured by dollars and cents. A private individual whose moral obligations are determined by pecuniary consideration is a dishonest man, and I hold that the same moral code should guide governments in dealing with individuals that we insist that our fellow man should observe in their business intercourse with each other.

I think we can safely trust the Board of Engineers to see that absolute justice is done, or as nearly as is possible for human intellect to see that justice is done. Certainly these trained, watchful, patriotic, faithful servants of the Government may be relied upon to see that the Government shall not be robbed and to see also that the Government of the United States shall not withhold from the private citizen anything which of right belongs to that citizen.

Therefore I think the amendment ought to be adopted, and I trust the Senate may agree to it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the other day something was said about the dangerous character of legislation of this kind. As a general proposition it is dangerous. If the losses these contractors will probably sustain had been due to any miscalculation of their own, I would feel differently about it; but when they entered into these contracts before war was declared they did it with the reasonable expectation of being able to get labor and material at the current prices or at least that they would not differ materially from what the prices were at the time the contract was entered into.

I have personally had an interview with a member of one of the contracting firms and their lawyer, and I think I am within the truth when I say that unless some relief is granted by the Government this contract will not be completed by the contractors, or if completed it will be at the expense of the bondsmen, and it will leave the contractors bankrupt. I am satisfied that this contractor and his bondsmen would be very glad to complete the contract under normal circumstances at their own expense, but I do not believe that the great Government of the United States expects the work to be completed, when the prices have been increased as they have been during the last year, due to the war, at a cost that may bankrupt these people.

I do not believe anyone who will pass through the locks and dams on the Ohio River after they shall have been completed would receive any satisfaction from knowing that in their building certain men were made bankrupt by act of war. I think the committee has very carefully guarded the Government against any excessive allowance which may be made. It is my belief that the American people do not want this man and his bondsmen to be bankrupted under the circumstances.

For these reasons I shall support the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, a short time ago the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] asked a question as to the aggregate amount of contracts that would be affected by this amendment. The committee had reports from the Board of Engineers upon that subject, and the committee reported that of the contracts let prior to the entry of the United States into the war but remaining uncompleted on the 1st day of April this year the aggregate was $4,387,000.

Under this amendment it will be very much less than that, because the adjustment can only be upon the portion of the contract remaining not completed at the time this act is approved. So it is fair to say that the total amount will not be more than $4,000,000, and it was testified by Col. Newcomer that, in his judgment, the amount that will be required to readjust these contracts upon an equitable basis would be somewhere between one and a half million dollars and two million dollars.

I wish to say a word, however, with reference to the position taken by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. He stated that he favored the adoption of this amendment solely in the interest of the Government; that in his judgment the adoption of the amendment would save the Government millions upon millions of dollars; and, if I understood him correctly, he undertook to state to the Senate that that was the actuating motive of the committee in recommending the amendment to the bill. That is the first intimation I have had that this amendment should be adopted upon any such theory as that. It was not urged before the committee. It was urged solely as a measure of justice to the contractors, and that is, I think, the basis upon which it ought to be considered by the Senate. Indeed, if it was from the standpoint of the interest of the Government, this amendment is not necessary, because the Secretary of War now has full authority to readjust any river and harbor contract where in his judgment such readjustment will be advantageous to the United States.

So this amendment should be considered solely upon the question whether it is fair and just to the contractors who prior to our entry into the war entered into these contracts. It was represented to the committee that in the Navy, for instance, under a power they already have, on account of the increasing cost of work previous contracts were canceled and new contracts given upon the basis of the increased cost of work. We know that in contracts by the Shipping Board provision is made in the contract itself for a readjustment from time to time depending upon the increased labor costs.

So it seemed to the committee, and I think that was the basis of its recommendations, that it was only fair to give to these contractors the same consideration that is given to contractors for the Navy, contractors for the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and thus do justice to this class of contractors as well as to others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KELLOGG in the chair). The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Kirby	Page
Bankhead	Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Phelan
Beckham	Gallinger	Lewis	Pittman
Borah	Gulon	McCumber	Poindexter
Brandegee	Harding	McKellar	Pomerene
Calder	Hardwick	McNary	Ransdell
Chamberlain	Henderson	Martin	Robinson
Cummins	Hollis	Myers	Saulsbury
Curtis	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Shafroth
Dillingham	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sheppard
Fernald	Kellogg	Nugent	Shields

Smith, S. C.	Swanson	Townsend	Wadsworth
Smoot	Thomas	Trammell	Walsh
Sterling	Thompson	Underwood	Wilfley
Sutherland	Tillman	Vardaman	Wolcott

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is absent campaigning for the Red Cross. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the amendment in its present form will not be concurred in. It could be written so that it would not be so open to abuse as this amendment is.

Senators will remember that there is no limit upon this amendment as to what the extra cost might be. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] in offering his amendment for the same purpose limited the amount of cost that it could be over and above the contract price, but to this amendment there is no limit. It is an invitation for every contractor on river and harbor work in the United States to make the cost just as high as possible, to take care of all their relatives and all their friends and all the officers of the association, if it is an association or company that is doing the work, and the Government will pay for it.

I recognize, Mr. President, that it is costing more to do work to-day than it did in 1913 or 1914. Nobody will deny that. Contracts that were made two years ago are costing more to-day than if the work had been done at the time the contract was taken. But here, Mr. President, is a proposition that, no matter what the extra cost piled up, the Government is to pay for it.

Senators know what comes from the 10 per cent plus proposition. That is nothing compared to this. Senators talk about $2,000,000 being sufficient. It will only be the beginning of what it is going to cost the Government of the United States. If you once embark upon this plan there will be no end to paying the claims made against the Government until the last one is made, no matter what the amount. Congress can not hesitate; it can not refuse to pay them after passing a proposition such as has been adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Conditions as to extra cost were exactly the same three months ago as they are to-day. There was no appeal made to the House for a provision of this kind. Nobody asked the House to put it in the river and harbor bill. Those who have suffered on the Ohio River work were suffering at that time just as they are to-day, and nothing was heard of this proposition until the Post Office appropriation bill had a provision of this character inserted in it by the Senate.

The amendment offered is to take care of every contractor who entered into a contract before the war, and hereafter in all the work that is done for the Government the contractor must be paid a sum sufficient to insure that they will lose nothing on the cost of the work.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am not familiar with the amendment. Is it proposed to indemnify contractors for work that they have entered into contract with the Government to perform?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. As soon as the bill becomes a law all work done on rivers and harbors, no matter what the price of the contract might be, the Government of the United States is to indemnify all contractors whatever amount it cost extra over and above what it would have cost at the time the contract was entered into.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It applies to past contracts?

Mr. SMOOT. It applies to contracts entered into before April 6, 1917.

Mr. FLETCHER. But, if the Senator will permit me, the readjustment only applies to future contracts.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what I said to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. FLETCHER. But the Senator from Colorado does not understand it in that way. His question was whether or not it applied to all contracts.

Mr. SMOOT. I said it applied to all contracts entered into before the 6th of April, 1917, and for all work done under those contracts immediately after the signing of this bill, or as soon as the bill becomes a law.

Senators, that is the proposition. As I said on Saturday, this plan will not apply to river and harbor contracts, but it means every contract that the Government of the United States has entered into for any purpose and for goods and supplies of every character and description. Do not be deceived because but $2,000,000 is named in this provision. The Government will not be relieved by the payment of $2,000,000 or ten times $2,000,000 if this amendment is adopted. I want to say that, if it is adopted, the same principle ought to be extended to all contractors of every name and nature.

Reference has been made to the fact that, if we do not give this relief, contracts will be thrown up, and the Government of the United States will have to ask for new contracts, in which case the cost will be more than we would pay under this provision. Why, Mr. President, if we have to ask for new contracts, we shall have competition, and we shall have a chance to partially save ourselves, but under this provision there is no such opportunity.

Mr. President, I know of no Senator who has criticized the river and harbor bill as such; but there are Senators, and among them myself, who are opposed to many items which have been carried in river and harbor bills in the past. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] has asked Senators several times to name the rivers to which we object. Why, the list is too long to undertake such a task. I named some of them when I last spoke at length upon the river and harbor bill in 1916. Mr. Burton at the same time also named a long list of them, and I find in the RECORD a statement which was then made by myself.

Let us take the Arkansas River and see what is the result of river and harbor improvement on that river and then judge whether any sane person would invest his money in such a project if he had to pay the expense of maintaining it and receive all profits from carrying the commerce.

The total appropriations for that river which were made up to 1916 were $3,533,033.40.

Mr. RANSDELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. The amount of commerce on that river for the year 1916——

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will wait until I finish the sentence, then I will yield to him.

The amount of commerce on that river in that year was 79,169 tons, as reported by the Chief of Engineers. The valuation of all the products transported, including everything making up the 79,169 tons, was only $812,657. We were asked to appropriate for that year $334,700, the total value of the products transported on which in dollars and cents was $812,657. I call attention——

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me? He is talking about a river in my State.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, I will yield.

Mr RANSDELL. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I never spoke on a river and harbor bill or offered a word of criticism but what the Senator from Louisiana was immediately upon his feet to defend the project—no matter how ridiculous it was.

Mr. RANSDELL. Certainly, whenever slanders are uttered against things in Louisiana or anywhere else in connection with rivers and harbors, I am going to be on my feet. I consider it a slanderous statement for a Senator to rise in his place here and try to make the Senate believe that three million and some odd thousand dollars were spent on a river, the commerce of which is the ridiculously small sum which the Senator states. Why do you not be fair, Mr. Senator, and if you give the total expenditures on that river, also give the total commerce on it from the time we began to make the expenditure? The Senator read the items of expenditure on Red River from the beginning of the Government—that is what he did—and then he gave the commerce for the last year. I ask the Senator now if there is anything fair in that kind of a statement?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator has asked his question and will sit down, I will answer it.

Mr. RANSDELL. All right. Now, let us hear the answer.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is very impatient and very sensitive upon any question concerning river and harbor bills; and he can not, therefore, have patience with anyone who sees such bills in any other light than that in which he sees them.

Mr. President, I called attention to the amount of money which was spent upon that river up to the day which I have named; and I ask the Senator if it is incorrect?

Mr. RANSDELL. No.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, then, enough for that.

Mr. RANSDELL. I believe the statement is correct, but I desire to say to Senators that there was a very large commerce on that river. I was born and reared on its banks, and know that when I was a boy we were scarcely ever out of sight of the smoke of a steamboat. I know that a great commerce was carried on that river for 500 miles, into all northwest Louisiana and up into the State of Texas. We had no railroads in those days, and a colossal commerce was carried then on the river; but in recent years, when we have had railroads on both its banks, the commerce of the river has been completely driven off. The large appropriation which the Senator from Utah has read is from the beginning of the Government to the present time. A very large portion of it was for removing a great raft above the city of Shreveport and another large sum was to remove obstructions in the river above the city of Alexandria, where I was reared. If we had the figures here to show the total commerce on Red River since we began to improve it, they would compare very favorably with the total expenditure of over $3,000,000, and would show this sum was wisely expended. What I object to in the Senator's statement is that he gives the figures of expenditures for all time, and gives the commerce for but one year. I ask him, Is that fair?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is all right for the Senator to hark back to his childish recollection when there was some commerce on the river, but this very argument is against the appropriation for such rivers as is the Arkansas to-day. If there was a time when there was commerce upon that river to justify the Government appropriations, it was years in the past; for I know that during the year 1916 there were only 79,169 tons of commerce carried on the river.

Mr. RANSDELL. How much did the Government spend on the river that year—$3,000,000?

Mr. SMOOT. I stated to the Senate how much it spent.

Mr. RANSDELL. Would the Senator mind stating it again?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; I will not mind stating it again. The amount spent that year was $334,700. But, I say to you, Mr. President, that in the figures I have presented for that time I only estimated 4 per cent on the money that was invested; and who would desire to invest money if he did not get 4 per cent interest on it? On that basis I want to call attention now to the cost to the Government of the United States for hauling commerce on some of these so-called arteries of commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I desire to call attention to the provision in the present bill on page 9. The bill now provides:

> Red and Sulphur Rivers, Ark. and Tex., and Cypress Bayou and Waterway between Jefferson, Tex., and Shreveport, La.: For maintenance, $5,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the estimates of the cost to the Government for furnishing waterways to float actual commerce on a few projects in the bill in 1916 were as follows—and this I want it distinctly understood does not include logs as commerce. I have a list of the creeks, the rivers, and the bays that have had money spent upon them by the Government of the United States to float logs down them.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, I may say I sympathize with a Senator who has in his State neither creeks nor streams of any kind, nor any logs to float in them. It is quite natural such a Senator should feel as does the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah will vote as large appropriations for the harbors of the United States as will the Senator from Minnesota; the Senator from Utah will take care of the industries of this country, no matter where they may be located, as well as will the Senator from Minnesota; and I think my record will bear me out in that statement.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will wait a moment——

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely wish to state that, while the Senator from Utah seems to be very economical about rivers and harbors, he is a strong advocate of an increase of $40,000,000 for permanent pensions.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, certainly, Mr. President. I am an advocate of doing justice to the men who saved the Nation and offered their lives for the preservation of this country; and had it not been for the heroic sacrifices of those men the Senator from Florida would not be in this Chamber to-day. If the Senator from Utah is charged with being interested in the Government partially recognizing the labors of such men or the just claims of their widows or their dependent children, he is perfectly willing to stand whatever there may be in the way of criticism or of chastisement for such position, no matter if it does come from friend or foe.

I might proceed further along this line, Mr. President; but I see the Senator from Florida has left the Chamber, and so I will say nothing more in this connection at this time. I wish, however, to assure the Senators present that there is a great deal more that might be said upon this question. If the Senator from Florida wants to be economical and wants to reduce unnecessary expenditures of the Government, let him cut out of this bill a lot of rotten projects, and if he will follow me I will point out to him not how $40,000,000 may be saved but how a billion dollars may be saved without interfering with the proper maintenance of the Government. Do not let us harp upon the $40,000,000 that is to be paid to the old soldiers in their dying days, to the men who saved this Nation and all that it stands for, but let us look for extravagances and wicked waste that is manifest on all sides.

Now, Mr. President, let me call attention to some of the rivers and creeks for which appropriations have been made, and to the result in connection with such appropriations, based on 4 per cent interest on the amounts the Government has expended and the amount of commerce carried upon the rivers each year.

The Ohio River, a little over $5 a ton, excluding soft coal; on the upper Mississippi, $12 a ton; on the lower Mississippi, $35 a ton; on the Arkansas River, nearly $20 a ton; on the Hennepin, $36.75 a ton; on the Missouri, a little over $40 a ton; Muscle Shoals, $41 a ton; Arkansas Pass Canal, $80 a ton; the Brazos, $80 a ton; the Red River, $100 a ton; the proposed Muscle Shoals project, $100 a ton; and the Big Sandy, Ky., $350 a ton.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. RANSDELL. Would the Senator mind telling the Senate how he arrived at those figures?

Mr. SMOOT. I thought I did tell the Senate, but I will tell the Senate again. Those figures are arrived at by taking all the appropriations that have been made and spent——

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator means from the beginning of the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. From the beginning, and including 4 per cent upon the amount—and the Government is certainly entitled to that much——

Mr. RANSDELL. And giving the rivers credit for the commerce of the current year?

Mr. SMOOT. Then I figure what the interest is and compute the cost of the commerce upon that basis for any given year.

Mr. RANSDELL. Does the Senator think it quite fair to take the total expenditures on a river from the beginning of the Government, say on the Red River, amounting to something over $3,000,000, calculate 4 per cent on that, and charge the commerce of the current year with the total amount expended on that river from the beginning of the Government, without giving any credit to the enormous commerce carried on that river years ago? If he is going to charge it with the whole expense of improvement, does he not think, in common justice, he ought to credit it with the commerce which has been carried in all these years?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that the Government of the United States ought to be treated exactly the same as any man or any set of men in business. Upon every dollar that a man invests in his business, whether in 1 year or in 10 years, or any number of years, he is entitled to interest. So is the Government; and I treated the Government in these estimates precisely the same as I would treat any business man, and in no other way. Why, Mr. President, in the case of a private business, if a man had invested a million dollars and that million dollars had been used for 10 years and the investment still paid dividends, he would anticipate at least dividends in the future; and if he added half a million dollars more, he would anticipate at least a dividend upon that additional amount. That is exactly what the Government ought to expect when it invests money in rivers and harbors.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, if the dividends in a private enterprise, say a railroad, have amounted to 10 per cent, 15 per cent, 25 per cent, 30 per cent, or perhaps 50 per cent per annum for many years, and have been placed to the credit of the stockholders, the original investment having been $3,000,000, as in the case of the Red River, and if there has been earned all told perhaps ten or fifteen or twenty million dollars in all the years of operation, is it fair to say when the business ceases to be profitable that it should be charged up with all the costs and given no credit for the dividends?

Mr. SMOOT. There has been no dividend paid or credit to the Government in any case referred to.

Mr. RANSDELL. But to the individuals who compose the Government there has been.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not follow the Senator's reasoning, and I know that if he were in business and tried to follow such reasoning himself he would become bankrupt in a very few years. If the railroads make 20 per cent or 40 per cent or 50 per cent, as suggested, and if they pay it to the stockholders in the way of dividends, it does not go to the company but to the stockholders; and if paid as a stock dividend, it also goes to the stockholders, and they will expect interest on the stock dividend the same as their original investment.

Mr. RANSDELL. But does the Senator differentiate between the stockholders of a railroad and the citizens of this great Republic? Are we not the stockholders of the Nation?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes——

Mr. RANSDELL. And if the people of Louisiana, of Texas, of Oklahoma, and of all that region served by the Red River were getting great dividends for the National Government through the expenditures made on the Red River, is not that just the same as if there were being paid dividends to the stockholders of a railroad?

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, I am a citizen of the United States; I have got to help pay the amounts to the citizens of Louisiana, and when it comes to my having a word to say as to how they shall be paid, I would rather pay for the goods carried on some of these creeks and give to the people without cost to them, if that is the cheaper way, and in some cases it is cheaper, than to make appropriations for certain rivers and creeks.

I am not complaining of a policy that would construct the best possible harbors, and I care not where they are located; whether they are in the South or in the North makes no difference to me; I want the best. I also want the rivers on which there is commerce to be maintained, but I do not want efforts to be made to have artificial creeks, with no water in them during portions of the year, converted into a waterway system. Mr. President, I say now that the American people will never stand for it. It is a waste of their money. It may be an advantage locally to Representatives or Senators who can get the appropriations, but I believe I can go into any State in the Union and call the attention of the people to the effect of such appropriations, and they will not approve of them.

It is said that 90 per cent of these projects have been approved by the engineers. I have not looked that question up, and I will take it for granted that it is true. I saw, however, in the year 1916 an adverse report from an engineer upon a project; I spoke against it from this very desk; and yet it was not 24 hours until we had a report favorable to the project, a supplementary report, when I knew that within the time elapsing no additional examination could be made; that conditions had not changed; and I knew that there had been a request for such a report made, and that request was granted and a supplementary report made to the Senate.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, that is a right serious charge against the Engineer Corps. Would the Senator mind stating what the report was and what project was included in the report?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can easily find it out if he will but examine the record.

Mr. RANSDELL. Of course, if the Senator objects to telling me, I do not care.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the Senator need not ask.

Mr. RANSDELL. Very well; I thought the Senator was a fair man.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will allow me, he will recall the fact that in that famous bill there were quite a number of these wonderful projects that had been reported adversely upon by the local engineer, by the division engineer, and by the Chief of the Corps of Engineers, and yet they went into the bill and were defended here, and I think some of them probably got appropriations, although I am not sure as to that.

Mr. RANSDELL. Would the Senator mind giving us the names of those projects?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator knows that to be the fact.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not know it to be the fact; I know the exact reverse.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator then is not well informed on the subject.

Mr. RANSDELL. Perhaps I am not, but I have been trying to study this matter closely, and if the Senator knows it to be a fact he ought not to conceal the fact from the Senate. The Senator is a fair man generally.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not talking about the pending bill, but if the Senator will go back to the debate on the bill to which I refer he will find it all pointed out.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator from New Hampshire is a fair man; he never makes a misstatement; I have never heard him make one, and I appeal to him in all fairness and all kindness to tell us the facts. Why, Mr. President, the ordinary murderer is entitled to have a copy of the indictment served on him setting forth the time, the place, and the circumstances of the crime. I ask the Senator to tell us.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator, Mr. President, is a bit excited.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not excited, but I ask the Senator to give us the facts.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Louisiana called the Senator from Utah a slanderer, which was contrary to the rules of the Senate, and the Senator from Utah very properly did not pay any attention to that. Now, the Senator must not get excited at what I say.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not a bit excited.

Mr. GALLINGER. The fact is, and the RECORD will bear it out, that there were some projects proposed after they had been turned down by the local engineers.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator said a moment ago "a number of them."

Mr. GALLINGER. A number of them; yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. Would the Senator mind naming some?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not fair——

Mr. RANSDELL. It seems fair to me; we are charged with responsibility for this bill. The Senator says we reported favorably on projects that had not been favorably reported upon by the engineers.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply say, on my word of honor, that there were several such projects in that bill. Now, the Senator can go look them up for himself.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask the Senator to name them.

Mr. GALLINGER. They were pointed out in the debate; I do not carry them in my mind; but that is the fact.

Mr. SMOOT. I will mention the Missouri, if the Senator wants to know one. I thought the Senator really knew them; I thought he was merely camouflaging when he asked the question.

Mr. RANSDELL. I recall one or two, but there were not a number. I recall one myself, but there were not a number of them.

Mr. SMOOT. I only referred to one, but the Senator arose and challenged that. Now, if the Senator wants to know I will tell him a number of them.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator refused to tell me awhile ago.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator was camouflaging and trying to make people believe that there were no such projects provided for.

Mr. RANSDELL. I never camouflage; I do not follow my distinguished friend from Utah in that respect. All I ask is a detailed statement, which the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Utah have refused to give.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well; let us get at the facts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is about time to enforce the rule of two speeches in a day. We will never get through. The Chair has been here five years and nobody has ever been converted since he has been here.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Chair for the position that he has taken.

There were a number of other statements made that I intended to answer to-day, but I think it is unnecessary for me to do so. All I want is if Senators consider this amendment a wise one, and if there is a Senator in this Chamber who can see the end of it, let him vote for it; but I know that no one appeared before the committee of the house of Representatives and asked for this, but came before the Senate committee. The amendment was offered without being printed; it was adopted with a very few Senators in the Chamber without a record vote, and if anyone wants to see it now he must get the desk copy of the bill. I repeat that I sincerely hope this amendment will be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask for a roll call.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. KENYON's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. If present, he would vote "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON (when Mr. KIRBY's name was called). The junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] is absent from the Senate on important public business.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). May I inquire if the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. THOMAS. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask whether the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have a pair with that Senator. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] to the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I am informed that if present he would vote as I shall vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Because of my general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] I withhold my vote.

Mr. WEEKS. I understand that my pair, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], would vote as I shall vote on this subject. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. Not knowing how he would vote on this matter, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BECKHAM. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], is detained by illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 12, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Sterling
Beckham	Kellogg	Pomerene	Sutherland

So the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill a new section, to be numbered section 10, and to read as follows:

SEC. 10. That no new work of improvement appropriated for in this act, involving an expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, of $100,000 or more, shall be undertaken until the Secretary of the Treasury shall first certify to the Secretary of War that the condition of the Treasury is such that such expenditure can be made without injury to the war needs of the Government: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any expenditure heretofore specifically recommended by the Secretary of War as a war emergency.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment was offered in Committee of the Whole and voted down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is overruled. The Chair has ruled that amendments rejected in Committee of the Whole may be reoffered in the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Florida that this amendment is not exactly the same as the other. There is one substantial difference between the amendment I have now proposed and the amendment that was rejected in the Committee of the Whole. The amendment before the Committee of the Whole prohibited the expenditure of any amount exceeding $100,000 under the circumstances stated except with the certificate of the Secretary of the Treasury. The amendment now pending would include all work costing $100,000 as well as work exceeding that amount. In other respects the amendments are the same.

Mr. President, I have reoffered the amendment in the Senate because of the close vote that was had in the Committee of the Whole, and because it does not seem to me that many of the Senators who voted against this amendment in the Committee of the Whole could have been advised as to what the amendment proposed to do, because their action is entirely inconsistent with other legislation passed recently by Congress practically unanimously.

Let me restate what the amendment does. It merely provides as to all new work authorized by this bill costing more than $100,000, except such work as has been certified by the Secretary of War to be war-emergency work, that before that new work can be undertaken the Secretary of the Treasury shall certify that the condition of the Treasury is such that the proposed expenditure can be made without injury to the war needs of the Government. In effect, it merely means that if at any time the condition of the Treasury is such that we need the money in it to actually carry on the war, the prosecution of the new work provided for in this bill shall be suspended until such time as there is money in the Treasury to do it.

A very striking illustration of the present situation came to me this morning. The Senator from Utah the other day called attention to the legislation recently passed creating the War Finance Corporation and the Capital Issues Committee, whereby private undertakings can not float bonds or indebtedness in excess of $100,000 without securing the prior approval of the Capital Issues Committee. A city in my State voted $100,000 in bonds to build a schoolhouse, because they were absolutely unable to care for and properly house children in the existing schools of that city. They made arrangements with a bank to take the whole issue of $100,000. That bank is ready to take the issue to-day if it can get the prior approval of the issues committee. The matter was submitted to that committee and the committee rejected the application, and the city has a representative here in Washington to-day undertaking to get a rehearing of the matter before this committee.

In other words, because of the war condition that we are in we are not going to permit cities throughout the United States to build schoolhouses for their children, we are not going to permit them to improve their streets, we are not going to permit them to do many necessary things, because we will need the money in subscriptions to liberty bonds and in other ways to carry on this war. Yet we have the amazing condition, Mr. President, that it is proposed in this bill to appropriate at least $8,000,000, and no doubt more—but my amendment would lie to at least that much—to go on with these improvements that have nothing to do with the war, that can not benefit commerce for years and years to come, and in some cases in all probability will never benefit commerce at all; and the Senate votes down an amendment that refuses to apply to the Government itself the same terms and conditions that it does apply to every private citizen in the land.

That is all I have to say about the matter, Mr. President. Either this amendment should be adopted or else Congress ought to repeal the legislation creating the Capital Issues Committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think it would be very unwise and, in fact, inexcusable for us to postpone the work provided for in this bill until the Secretary of the Treasury certifies that it may be done. The proposition is an absurd one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. FLETCHER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement that I made on the last roll call as to my pair and its transfer and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous roll call and the same transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last roll call as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Transferring my general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and to state that were he present he would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMPSON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I observe that he has not voted. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. KIRBY] is detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Borah	Hale	Nugent	Sterling
Brandegee	Harding	Page	Sutherland
Cummins	Kendrick	Pomerene	Thomas
Curtis	Lenroot	Shafroth	Townsend
France	Lodge	Smith, Mich.	Walsh
Gallinger	New	Smoot

NAYS—30.

Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Thompson
Beckham	Kellogg	Poindexter	Tillman
Chamberlain	Lewis	Ransdell	Trammell
Fletcher	McKellar	Robinson	Vardaman
Guion	McNary	Sheppard	Wilfley
Hardwick	Martin	Shields	Wolcott
Henderson	Myers	Simmons
Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Smith, S. C.

NOT VOTING—43.

Ashurst	Gore	La Follette	Smith, Ariz.
Baird	Gronna	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Calder	Hitchcock	McLean	Smith, Md.
Colt	Hollis	Norris	Swanson
Culberson	James	Overman	Underwood

Fall	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Warren
Fernald	Kenyon	Pittman	Watson
Frelinghuysen	King	Reed	Weeks
Gerry	Kirby	Saulsbury	Williams
Goff	Knox	Sherman

So Mr. LENROOT's amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I shall occupy but a moment more in the discussion of this bill.

I have not allowed myself to get at all excited over the matter, because I propose to vote for the bill. I shall vote for it for the reason that it carries appropriations for harbors that are essential to the commerce and the prosperity of the country, and for some of the great rivers of the country. Whatever criticisms I have offered, either to-day or on a former occasion, were directed against the small and inconsequential streams that in the very nature of things never can become arteries of commerce in the proper sense of the word.

I have been comparing the bill of 1916 with the present one, and I find that a great many of my old friends have disappeared from this form of legislation. The work that was done by the Senate on that occasion in reducing the appropriation almost one-half, if not one-half, has borne fruit, and it will continue to bear fruit in the years to come.

I may not have examined the bill with the care that I ought to have done, but I even fail to find in the bill my old friend from Texas, the Trinity River. It may be packed away somewhere in these omnibus paragraphs that are in the bill, but I have failed to find it, and I feel bad to think that the Trinity River has gotten lost in the shuffle. That river has had only about four millions, I think, expended upon it up to date.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that the Trinity River has been turned into an automobile road. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. I believe I almost suggested once on the floor myself that that would be the best use to make of it. But we have spent $4,000,000 or thereabouts on the Trinity River—I am not exact in the statement I make—and now it has disappeared. It never will become a great waterway; it never can become a great waterway; and I hope that the appropriation for that river will not appear in the bill again.

A little while ago the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], with a good deal of warmth, challenged my suggestion that in the bill of 1916 there were, as I said, several items that had been adversely reported on by the local engineer, the division engineer, and the Chief of Engineers. After giving the matter a little consideration, the Senator admitted that there was one such item, as he recalled. Now, I spoke in entire sincerity, and I believe advisedly, when I said there were several such items; but I have not had time to verify the statement and it is inconsequential at best. There was certainly one such item, according to the admission of the Senator from Louisiana, and that item ought not to have been in the bill.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will go further, and say I think there were two. I think there was a little item up in Michigan and a little item on the Missouri River. They were the exceptions which prove the rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am glad the Senator has mentioned those two because I said there was a number, and I believe two is a number. So I think I was not inaccurate.

Mr. President, it would be idle to waste time in the further discussion of the bill. I think a good purpose was served in 1916 in the discussion we then had. I think a good purpose has been served to-day in discussing the bill. I regret that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] was not agreed to. I equally regret that the amendment proposing to reimburse these contractors under the conditions of the amendment was not either rejected or modified. But that is past. The bill is going to pass, as these bills always pass. They are written to be passed, and the man who undertakes to defeat them is simply beating the air and wasting time which might be better employed. I suggested that a good many of my old friends had disappeared from the bill but in looking it over I am gratified to find that Alligator Creek and Black Fish Bay are still retained. If we can only take care of the alligators and the black fish in this bill we will be doing something toward winning the war, because it will provide some food for our people and for our allies.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say. I shall vote for the bill, as I suggested a moment ago, for the reason that the good in it outweighs the bad in it. The appropriations which are designed to improve our harbors and the great waterways of commerce in this country are of more consequence to me, as a man who wants to legislate for the best interests of the entire people, than the inconsequential and unnecessary appropriations that I find in the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I present the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 18, line 14, at the end of section 3, add:

That, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, such examinations and surveys shall include an examination and survey of the Missouri River within and on the boundaries of the State of South Dakota for the purpose of determining the location of practicable water-power sites and the relation of such sites, when developed, to the navigation of the river.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hope I do not tax the patience of the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge or seem unduly persistent in presenting this proposal in regard to the survey of the Missouri River. In view of the petition that I presented the other day, and which has been twice read here in the Senate, signed by thousands of citizens of South Dakota, and in view, too, of the abiding faith that I myself have in the development of the Missouri River and the great benefit the improvement of that river will be, I can do nothing less than present this amendment here in the Senate.

I wish to say that I present it in a modified form, and now, fair as it was before, it ought to be acceptable, it seems to me, to the chairman of the committee, for, as modified, the amendment provides that the survey shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

As I stated in discussing the amendment when in Committee of the Whole, not a single dollar of appropriation is asked. It comes after the item in the bill appropriating $200,000 for surveys and examinations.

I want to say this: That in the petition these petitioners recognize the fact that we are in a state of war. They recognize the fact that no appropriation for an improvement is contemplated by the people of South Dakota until after the war is over. I may say, Mr. President, that when the people of South Dakota come to ask an appropriation by Congress of any improvement of the Missouri River the request for that appropriation will be accompanied by an offer which will be a generous contribution on the part of the people of the State to the improvement for which they ask an appropriation at the hands of Congress.

In qualifying the amendment so as to make it subject to the approval of the Secretary of War I simply make it in harmony with the act of 1917, which contained a provision that no surveys therein provided should be made until after the close of the war with Germany, except such as the Secretary of War shall direct. The amendment as now modified and presented here in the Senate is in conformity with that provision of the act of 1917.

I trust, Mr. President, that the amendment will prevail. I hoped the chairman of the committee would see fit to accept it. It is a very little thing we are asking, and I see no reason in all fairness and justice why the amendment should not prevail.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I regret that I can not find myself in full accord with the Senator who has just offered this amendment, but I am obliged to ask that it keep company with all the others that have been left out of the bill providing for surveys, however meritorious. In ordinary conditions I might have been willing to agree to the proposal, but under the circumstances I think I am quite justified, and besides the feature in connection with it as a water-power development lessens its value in a river and harbor bill.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him——

Mr. FLETCHER. I am inclined to think that our friends out there who want to develop the water power of the river ought to go to some little expense in making their own surveys. However, that is aside from the main question, and that is that we have not provided for any surveys in the bill.

Mr. STERLING. I think I can safely say, Mr. President, that no other proposition for a survey presented here by way of an amendment to this bill contained a provision that it shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, as my amendment now proposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I want to occupy the time of the Senate for just a moment to call attention to the fact that this bill contains a provision which requires the dredging of a channel to a depth of 40 feet through Hell Gate connecting East River with Long Island Sound. I consider this by far the most important provision in the bill. When this work is completed it will mean that a fleet of battleships and the largest merchant ships that float can come through the Sound and the East River to the city of New York, affording two means by which vessels can come in and out of that great harbor.

The city of New York has for years on its own account ,at the expense of the State and the city, spent vast sums of money to make that great harbor meet the requirements of the country. Last year the business—the foreign business—done in this port, including imports and exports, aggregated a sum in excess of $4,000,000,000—one-half the foreign trade of the Nation.

New York has just completed a great barge canal which has cost the State on its own account over $130,000,000. There has been some complaint of late that New York Harbor was not quite equal to the demands placed upon it in these war times. Mr. President, New York has provided a great port and a great series of piers for the accommodation of the Nation's shipping. It has taken care of 60 per cent of the business of the country in peace times. But Congress has not done its full duty by New York in the past. Despite this neglect, with a commerce double in value of what it was three years ago, one great port is taking care of the demands made upon it. We want a proper organization of our terminal equipment, and when this is arranged there can be no doubt of our ability to handle even a much greater business than we do to-day.

I simply call these facts now to the attention of those in charge of preparing river and harbor bills in the future, that they may see to it that a survey is made of the great harbors of the Nation, to the end that the congestion at those harbors may not occur again when the country so much needs these facilities.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask leave to insert in the RECORD certain communications from the War Department bearing on matters mentioned in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 22, 1918.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your letter of April 19, 1918, calling my attention to the provision made in the pending river and harbor bill for the improvement of Key West Harbor in accordance with the report published in House Document No. 185, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, and to the great importance attached to this improvement by the Navy Department, I have the honor to inform you that I have just received a confidential letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy setting forth that department's interest in the locality and expressing the conclusion that this work is considered by the Navy Department as an essential war measure. I therefore recommend its retention in the bill as coming within the rule observed by the War Department which limits favorable consideration of new projects for adoption at this time to those that are deemed essential in connection with the prosecution of the war.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 1, 1918.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the report on preliminary examination and survey of the west basin of Los Angeles Harbor, Cal., which has just been submitted to Congress, and is to be published as House Document No. 1072, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, in which improvement of the west basin is recommended to provide a necessary channel of approach to a large floating dry dock which is to be built in connection with the operations of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and the Chief of Engineers report that this work is considered essential as a war measure. I concur in their views, and therefore recommend that provision for this work be made, if practicable, in the pending river and harbor bill.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, May 17, 1918.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: 1. In response to your letter of May 15, 1918, inclosing a letter from Senator HARDWICK and another from the secretary of the board of trade of Brunswick, Ga., complaining about the delay in expending the funds appropriated for Brunswick Harbor, I have the honor to state that this office has no record of any former complaint about the use of the funds supplied for this harbor, and I am not in a position to state whether the omission of dredging operations up to the present time during the current fiscal year has been justified or not. In the absence of any complaint from local interests on this point, and with the understanding that the district engineer would take such steps as the conditions might warrant, it was assumed that no dredging had been urgently required. Copies of these papers will be sent to the district engineer, however, for report, and it is expected that the work will be prosecuted as the needs of the situation demand. It is suggested that the secretary of the Brunswick Board of Trade communicate direct with the district engineer, Col. John Millis, Corps of Engineers, post-office building, Savannah, Ga., if he has any further suggestions to make as to the work, as the details of administration of the affairs of the district are left largely in the hands of the district engineer.

2. The inclosures to your letter are returned herewith, as requested.

Very truly, yours,

W. M. BLACK,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.
By H. C. NEWCOMER,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar under Rule VIII, commencing at Order of Business 314, Senate bill 954, and considering only bills to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARDWICK. Why does the Senator suggest that we begin at No. 314?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the point where we left off when we last considered the calendar.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

COAL-LAND ENTRIES.

The bill (S. 954) to amend an act approved June 22, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 1, line 9, after the word "Alaska," to strike out "including surplus lands in any Indian reservation heretofore or hereafter opened to settlement and entry," and, on page 3, line 14, after the word "disposal," to strike out the words:

Provided, That the proceeds arising from the disposal of such coal deposits in surplus Indian lands opened to settlement and entry shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and shall be applied in the same manner as the proceeds arising from the disposition of the surface lands therein.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands," approved June 22, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That from and after the passage of this act unreserved public lands of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, which have been withdrawn or classified as coal lands, or are valuable for coal, shall be subject to appropriate entry, selection, or sale under any of the nonmineral public-land laws applicable to the particular lands desired if not containing coal, and to withdrawal under the act approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, whenever such entry or withdrawal shall be made with a view of obtaining or passing title with a reservation to the United States of the coal in such lands, and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same: Provided, That those who have initiated nonmineral claims under the public-land laws in good faith prior to the passage of this act on lands withdrawn or classified as coal lands may perfect the same under the provisions of the laws under which said claims were initiated, but shall receive the limited patent provided for in this act.

"SEC. 2. That any person, State, or corporation desiring to make entry or selection under any nonmineral public-land law of lands withdrawn or classified as coal lands, or which are valuable for coal, shall state in the application for entry or selection that the same is made in accordance with and subject to the provisions and reservations of this act, and the Secretary of the Interior, in withdrawing under the reclamation act lands of this character, shall state in the notice of withdrawal that such withdrawal is made subject to the provisions and reservations of this act

"SEC. 3. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which the entry or selection is made, and of this act, the entryman or selector shall be entitled to a patent or to a certification, as the law may require, to the land entered or selected, which patent or certificate shall contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal in the lands so patented or certified, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. The coal deposits in such lands shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the coal-land laws in force at the time of such disposal. Any person qualified to acquire coal deposits or the right to mine and remove the coal under the laws of the United States shall have the right at all times to enter upon the lands selected, entered, or patented, as provided by this act, for the purpose of prospecting for coal thereon upon the consent of the surface entryman or owner, or upon the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of a bond or undertaking to be filed with him as security for the payment of all damages to the crops and improvements on such lands by reason of such prospecting. Any person who has acquired from the United States the coal deposits in any such lands, or the right to mine or remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining and removal of the coal therefrom, and mine and remove the coal, upon payment of the damages caused thereby to the owner thereof, or upon giving a good and sufficient bond or undertaking in an action instituted in any competent court to ascertain and fix said damages: Provided, That the owner under such limited patent shall have the right to mine coal for use upon the land for domestic purposes at any time prior to the disposal by the United States of the coal deposits: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held to deny or abridge the right to present and have prompt consideration of applications to locate, enter, or select, under the land laws of the United States, lands which have been classified as coal lands with a view of disproving such classification and securing a patent without reservation."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the next two bills on the Calendar, House bill 8496 and House bill 9160, be passed over temporarily until the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] arrives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure that some of the beneficiaries named in those two bills have died since the bill was reported to the Senate, and we would like to have those eliminated from the bill as soon as the Senator from Montana gets here.

CLAIMS OF COWLITZ TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The bill (S. 3663) authorizing the Cowlitz Tribe of Indians, residing in the State of Washington, to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 13, to strike out the words "decree the fees" and insert "fix and determine a reasonable fee not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery," and, in line 17, to insert "included in the decree and shall be," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature, both legal and equitable, which the Cowlitz Tribe of Indians, residing in the State of Washington, may have against the United States, shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States for determination; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine any and all such claims and to render final judgment thereon.

The Court of Claims shall advance the causes upon its docket for hearing and shall have authority to determine and adjudge the rights, both legal and equitable, of the said Cowlitz Tribe and of the United States in the premises, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation. The suit or suits instituted hereunder shall be begun by the Cowlitz Tribe of Indians as parties plaintiff and the United States as the party defendant. The petition or petitions may be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by the Cowlitz Tribe upon information and belief as to the facts therein alleged, and no other verification shall be necessary: Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the said Cowlitz Tribe of Indians, and the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due said tribe.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT HALL INDIAN RESERVATION, IDAHO.

The bill (H. R. 4910) to authorize the establishment of a town site on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, Idaho, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to set aside and reserve for town-site purposes a tract of land within the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, Idaho, as in his opinion may be required for the future public interests, and he may cause the same to be surveyed into suitable lots and blocks and to dedicate the streets and alleys thereof to public uses; and he is hereby authorized to set apart and reserve for school, park, and other public purposes not more than 10 acres in such town site; and patents shall issue for the lands so set apart and reserved for school, park, and other public purposes to the municipality legally charged with the care and custody of lands donated for such purposes on condition that Indian children shall be permitted to attend the public schools of such town under the same conditions as white children.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to cause the lots within such town site as may be established hereunder to be appraised and disposed of under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe and any and all expenses in connection with the survey, appraisement, and sale of such town site shall be reimbursed from the sales of town lots, and the net proceeds derived therefrom shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation and shall be subject to appropriation by Congress for their benefit: Provided, however, That any lands disposed of hereunder shall be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country until otherwise provided by Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the next two bills on the Calendar, House bill 9506 and House bill 9612, may go over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

PUBLIC LANDS IN RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The bill (S. 3943) to provide for the disposition of public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the reclamation laws and which are no longer needed in connection with said laws was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior any public lands which have been withdrawn for or in connection with construction or operation of reclamation projects under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and which have been improved by and at the expense of the reclamation fund for administration or other like purposes, are no longer needed for the purposes for which they were withdrawn and improved, the Secretary of the Interior may cause said lands, together with the improvements thereon, to be appraised by three disinterested persons to be appointed by him and thereafter sell the same, for not less than the appraised value, at public auction to the highest bidder, after giving public notice of the time and place of sale by posting upon the land and by publication for not less than 30 days in a newspaper of general circulation in the vicinity of the land.

SEC. 2. That upon payment of the purchase price the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, by appropriate patent, to convey all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to said lands to the purchaser at said sale, subject, however, to such reservations, limitations, or conditions as said Secretary may deem proper: Provided, That not over 160 acres shall be sold to any one person, and if said lands are irrigable under the project in which located they shall be sold subject to compliance by the purchaser with all the terms, conditions, and limitations of the reclamation act applicable to lands of that character.

SEC. 3. That the moneys derived from the sale of such lands shall be covered into the reclamation fund and be placed to the credit of the project for which such lands had been withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF INDIANS IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 3923) authorizing the Indian tribes and individual Indians, or any of them, residing in the State of Washington and west of the summit of the Cascade Mountains to submit to the Court of Claims certain claims growing out of treaties and otherwise was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all claims of whatsoever nature, both legal and equitable, of the tribes and bands of Indians, or any of them, with whom any of the treaties of Medicine Creek, dated December 26, 1854; Point Elliott, dated January 22, 1855; Point-no-Point, dated January 26, 1855; the Quin-al-elts, dated May 8, 1859, growing out of said treaties, or any of them, including claims for allotments of land, or the value thereof, which they failed to receive under any of said treaties; and that all claims of whatever nature, both legal and equitable, which the Muckelshoot, San Juan Island Indians; Nook-Sack, Chinook, Upper Chehalis, Lower Chehalis, and Humptulip Tribes or Bands of Indians, or any of them (with whom no treaty has been made), may have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States for determination and jurisdiction, both legal and equitable, is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine any and all suits brought hereunder and to render final judgment therein: Provided, That the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States shall not extend to those tribes or bands of Indians, or any of them, with whom no treaty has been made: Provided further, That the court shall also consider and determine any legal or equitable defenses, set-offs, or counter claims which the United States may have against any of said tribes, bands, or individual Indians.

SEC. 2. The Court of Claims shall advance the cause or causes upon its docket for hearing, and shall have authority to determine and adjudge all rights and claims, both legal and equitable, of said Indians, tribes or bands of Indians, or any of them, and of the United States in the premises, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation.

SEC. 3. The suit or suits instituted hereunder shall be begun by such Indians, tribe, tribes, or bands of Indians, as parties plaintiff, and the United States as the party defendant. The petition or petitions may be verified by attorney or attorneys employed by such tribes or Indians upon information and belief as to the facts therein alleged, and no other verification shall be necessary: Provided, That the attorney or attorneys of said tribes or bands of Indians, or any of them, shall be selected by the claimant Indian or Indians with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and upon final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery, to be paid to the attorneys employed by the said tribes or bands of Indians, or any of them, and the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found to be due said tribes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COOS BAY, UMPQUA, AND SIUSLAW TRIBES OF INDIANS.

The bill (S. 3572) authorizing the Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians in the State of Oregon to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 18, to strike out the words "decree the fees" and to insert "fix and determine a reasonable fee not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery" and, in line 22, to insert "included in the decree and shall be," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature, both legal and equitable, which the Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians residing in the State of Oregon may have against the United States, shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States for determination; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine any and all such claims and to render final judgment thereon.

The Court of Claims shall advance the cause upon its docket for hearing, and shall have authority to determine and adjudge the rights, both legal and equitable, of the said Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes and of the United States in the premises, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation. The suit or suits instituted hereunder shall be begun by the Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians as parties plaintiff and the United States as the party defendant. The petition or petitions may be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by the Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes upon information and belief as to the facts therein alleged, and no other verification shall be necessary: Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the said Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians, and the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due said tribes.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that Order of Business 328, House bill 9641, and all down to and including Order of Business 345 may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that Order of Business 328 is a pension bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, too, because the chairman of the committee is not here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be passed over.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is objection made to the consideration of Order of Business 331, the bill (S. 3898) to require cashiers and other officers of a national banking association handling its funds to give bond and to prevent its officers and employees from making erasures on the books of the association.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; there is objection to the consideration of all those bank bills.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hoped to get consideration of some of those measures. I have no objection to passing over bills that involve a dispute, but Senate bill 3898 involves simply the question of requiring subordinates to give bond and preventing the erasure of items in the ledgers of banks. There can not be any possible objection to that bill. It is evidently a measure that is in the interest of good banking. I ask that the bill may be read. I am sure that everyone will agree to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I objected to its consideration to-day, and it went over. I promised to object to all those bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the Secretary will announce the next bill on the calendar not objected to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not feel that these bills ought to be objected to, and there can not be any objection to them. Here is a bill simply for the purpose of requiring subordinates to give bond——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But they are objected to, and the Secretary will announce the next bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am asking the Senator from Utah to withhold his objection so that I may make an explanation.

Mr. SMOOT. As I stated to the Senator, I promised to object to all these bills to-day, and I can not violate the promise I made.

ALFRED SJOSTROM.

The bill (S. 280) for the relief of Alfred Sjostrom was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment in line 6 to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$720," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alfred Sjostrom the sum of $720 for injuries sustained by him while in the performance of his duties as an employee of the Government at Battle Mountain Sanitarium, Hot Springs, S. Dak., on December 3, 1910, in an accident in which he lost all the fingers of his right hand.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER M'KAY.

The bill (S. 304) for the relief of Peter McKay was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Peter McKay, or his legal representatives, the sum of $2,500, as full compensation for permanent injuries received by the said McKay on the 5th day of May, 1904, at Fort Worden, in the State of Washington, by being struck with a large piece of log hurled by the explosion of an excessive blast of powder discharged without warning by employees of the United States Government engaged in clearing lands at said Fort Worden under the direction and control of the United States Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALASKA STEAMSHIP CO.

The bill (S. 1090) for the relief of the Alaska Steamship Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$9,024.27" and insert "$5,974.27," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Alaska Steamship Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Nevada, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,974.27, in payment of the balance due said company for services rendered at the request of the United States deputy collector of customs at Unalaska, Alaska, and in pursuance of an agreement with him, for the transportation and care of 193 survivors of the wreck of the American ship Columbia near Scotch Cap Lighthouse, Alaska, in May, 1909.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATE CANNIFF.

The bill (S. 57) for the relief of Kate Canniff was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 5, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,345," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Kate Canniff the sum of $1,345, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the death of her husband, James Canniff, who received injuries April 15, 1901, while in the service of the United States on the lighthouse tender Haze, and as a result of which he died on October 20, 1909.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE T. HAMILTON.

The bill (S. 1804) for the relief of George T. Hamilton was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 5, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to George T. Hamilton, as full compensation for wounds received at the hands of soldiers of the United States in the year 1863.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN WYOMING.

Mr. KENDRICK. I ask that the bill (S. 728) to permit the State of Wyoming to relinquish to the United States lands heretofore selected and to select other lands from the public domain in lieu thereof be taken from the calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

DELILAH SIEBENALER.

The bill (S. 924) for the relief of Delilah Siebenaler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to refund to Delilah Siebenaler the sum of $188.41, paid to the Department of Agriculture by her for certain timber which she cut from her homestead entry within the Cabinet Forest Reserve, Mont., prior to her receipt of patent therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR DECORATIONS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 143) to permit any and all members of the military or naval forces of the United States serving in the present war to accept decorations from the government of any of the countries concurrently engaged with the United States in the prosecution of said war was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to insert "during the present war or within one year thereafter"; on page 2, line 5, to insert:

Provided, That any officer or enlisted man of the military or naval forces of the United States is hereby authorized to accept and wear any medal or decoration heretofore bestowed by the government of any of the nations concurrently engaged with the United States in the present war.

And, after line 9, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the President is authorized under regulations to be prescribed by him to confer such medals and decorations as may be authorized in the military and naval services of the United States upon officers and enlisted men of the military and naval forces of the countries concurrently engaged with the United States in the present war.

So as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That any and all members of the military or naval forces of the United States serving in the present war be, and they hereby are, permitted and authorized to accept, during the present war or within one year thereafter, from the government of any of the countries engaged in war with any country with which the United States is, or shall be, concurrently likewise engaged in war, such decorations, when tendered, as are conferred by such government upon the members of its own military and naval forces; and the consent of Congress required therefor by clause by 8 of section 9 of Article I of the Constitution is hereby expressly granted: Provided, That any officer or enlisted man of the military or naval forces of the United States is hereby authorized to accept and wear any medal or decoration heretofore bestowed by the government of any of the nations concurrently engaged with the United States in the present war.

SEC. 2. That the President is authorized, under regulations to be prescribed by him, to confer such medals and decorations as may be authorized in the military and naval services of the United States upon officers and enlisted men of the military and naval forces of the countries concurrently engaged with the United States in the present war.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the acceptance by members of the military or naval forces of the United States of decorations from the government of any of the countries concurrently engaged with the United States in the prosecution of the present war and the issuance by the United States of decorations to members of the military and naval forces of said countries."

CACHE NATIONAL FOREST, UTAH.

The bill (S. 4103) to consolidate certain forest lands within the Cache National Forest, Utah, and to add certain lands thereto was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. The next two bills, Order of Business 361 and 362, House bills 10027 and 10477, I ask may go over on account of the chairman not being here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will go over.

RIGHTS OF WAY OVER FOREST RESERVES IN CALIFORNIA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4023) amending an act entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Los Angeles, Cal., certain public lands in California; and granting rights in, over, and through the Sierra Forest Reserve, the Santa Barbara Forest Reserve, and the San Gabriel Timberland Reserve, Cal., to the city of Los Angeles, Cal.," approved June 30, 1906, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 3, after line 2, to insert:

Provided, however, That the grant hereby made shall not apply to lands located in the drainage basin of Mono Lake or of Kern River, in said State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 22, after the word "and," to insert "until said map or maps and the proposed plan of development have been"; on page 4, line 6, after the word "approval," to insert "by the Secretary of the Interior"; in line 7, after the word "maps," to insert "and the plan of development"; and in line 8, after the word "to," where it occurs the first time, to strike out "by the Secretary of the Interior," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That section 2 of the act entitled and approved as aforesaid be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows

"SEC. 2. That on or before the 31st day of December, 1922, the city of Los Angeles shall file with the register of the United States land offices in the districts where the lands traversed by said rights of way are located a map or maps showing the boundaries, locations, and extent of said proposed rights of way, for the purposes stated in section 1 of this act, and there shall also be filed within that time all desired changes of location, the amended map or maps necessary to show such changes of location to be filed in the same manner and subject to the same approval as are the original map or maps of location, but no construction work shall be commenced on any of said lands until the map or maps have been filed as herein provided and until said map or maps and the proposed plan of development have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of any amended map or maps showing changes of location of said rights of way shall operate as an abandonment ipso facto by the city of Los Angeles, to the extent of such change or changes, of the rights of way indicated on the original map or maps: Provided, That any rights inuring to the city of Los Angeles under this act shall, on approval by the Secretary of the Interior of the map or maps and the plan of development referred to, relate back to the date of the filing of said map or maps with the register of the United States Land Office, as provided herein."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 10, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. That section 5 of the act entitled and approved as aforesaid be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That all lands over which the rights of way mentioned in this act shall pass shall be disposed of, subject to such easements: Provided, however, That if the construction of said waterworks shall not have been begun in good faith within five years of the date of the approval of this act, then all rights hereunder shall be forfeited to the United States: And provided further, That if any power or electric works or structure to be used in connection therewith shall not be completed within five years after approval of the map or maps of rights of way for such works or structure as herein provided, or within such additional time as the Secretary of the Interior shall, in his discretion, grant, then such rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to any uncompleted portion of such works or structure, to the extent that the same is not completed at the date of the forfeiture."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask merely one question in reference to section 5 of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I can answer the Senator's question, or the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] can do so.

Mr. LENROOT. My inquiry is as to the language of the section:

That all lands over which the rights of way mentioned in this act shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such easements.

Is there an authorization or a direction to dispose of lands a part of which are in forest reserves?

Mr. SMOOT. The Secretary of the Interior has that right and authority, and he issues these easements over the public lands.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand that; but the lands within the forest reserves are not subject to disposition at all except in certain cases. Whether this is a direction to dispose of all lands covered by these rights of way is my question.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is in conformity with a request made by the Secretary of Agriculture. The land being situated in forest reserves, if the Senator will notice the report——

Mr. LENROOT. I did notice that that is the recommendation of the Secretary.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 4 of the report the Secretary himself recommends that section 5 be amended to read exactly as the bill provides.

Mr. GRONNA. I think that this is a change of the present law. I do not think that there is any statute which provides for the disposal of a right of way in a forest reserve. There is a general law providing for the disposal of rights of way on public lands.

Mr. SMOOT. As the Senator from North Dakota will see, this is the provision of the law.

That all lands over which the rights of way mentioned in this act shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such easements.

In other words, the lands can not be disposed of in any other way except subject to the easements which have been granted.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I ask for whose benefit this is proposed?

Mr. SMOOT. For the benefit of the city of Los Angeles.

Mr. GRONNA. Why should those lands be disposed of for the benefit of the city of Los Angeles or for the benefit of any other city so long as they are in a forest reserve?

Mr. SMOOT. Because a pipe line must run through the forest reserves in order to get the water from where the intake is to the city.

Mr. GRONNA. I know that the city of Los Angeles has been given the privilege to use the lands in this forest reserve for this particular purpose, but for no other purpose. Mr. President, if it is not too late I shall object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. If I may be permitted, I will reserve the right to object to the consideration of the bill. I should like to have a further explanation of it from the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]; but I am opposed to disposing of any of the public lands for the benefit of any city or for the benefit of any private corporation. That is my objection to the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, if I may enlighten the Senator from North Dakota, the design of this bill is not at all of that sort. Its purpose is to give a mere right of way for the particular pipe line that is now there in existence. It legalizes what has already transpired and does not do what the Senator from North Dakota thinks that it does.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that what I said covers it all; that there is no transfer of land whatever to the city of Los Angeles or to anyone else, but—

That all lands over which the rights of way mentioned in this act shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such easements.

Or, in other words, whatever easements have been granted in these lands, if the Government itself should dispose of them in any way, they would be subject to the easements which the Government has given to the city of Los Angeles. That is all there is to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is it.

Mr. GRONNA. Why should the city of Los Angeles be given the right at all to dispose of the land in any manner or to use it in any way except for specific purposes?

Mr. SMOOT. They have no such right.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. They have no such right, but have only the mere easement, a right of way for the pipe line; nothing more than that.

Mr. GRONNA. I confess, Mr. President, that I never even have read the bill, but the inquiry of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] led me to believe that this was legislation which provided for the granting of some right to this particular city, and if it were not used by the city of Los Angeles that city could dispose of it to some one else.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be that I can explain it to the Senator from North Dakota more in detail in this way——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GRONNA. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill grants an easement for a pipe line through a forest reserve to the city of Los Angeles. If the Government decides later to sell any part of this land in the forest reserve—for instance, to some lumber people who may desire it—in selling that land to anyone it must be sold subject to the easement which has been granted for a pipe line to the city of Los Angeles. That is all there is to the proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Exactly. If the Senator from North Dakota will yield for an instant——

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator from Wisconsin presented merely a question of phraseology, and that related to section 5. If the Senator from North Dakota will follow me for just an instant he will see that the language is:

That all lands over which the rights of way mentioned in this act shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such easements.

It simply requires that the subsequent disposition of the land over which these pipe lines pass shall carry with the transfer the easements for the right of way. That is all; that is the only purpose.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR AGAINST BULGARIA AND TURKEY.

The resolution (S. Res. 229) to request the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred S. J. Res. 145, to give said resolution early consideration and report to the Senate thereon was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over.

JACOB NICE.

The bill (S. 1477) for the relief of Jacob Nice was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Jacob Nice, who was a private of Company G, Ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of that company and regiment on the 17th of August, 1865, but no back pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN DOYLE, ALIAS JOHN GEARY.

The bill (S. 1923) for the relief of John Doyle, alias John Geary, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that there is no report here from the War Department upon this bill; and I really can not, from the committee report, see why the bill should be passed. The same is true as to the bill just previously passed, being Senate bill 1477. There is generally a report from the department as to why such bills should be passed. Can the Senator reporting the bill tell us why such a report was not called for?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will let this bill go over for a moment and let it come up a little later, I shall probably be able to enlighten him.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the vote by which the bill (S. 1477) for the relief of Jacob Nice was passed be reconsidered and that the bill then be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered; and that bill and the bill last announced on the calendar, being the bill (S. 1923) for the relief of John Doyle, alias John Geary, will be passed over for the present.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3907) to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 4426) to amend and reenact sections 5235 and 5236 of the Revised Statutes of the United States by providing for a guaranty fund for payment of certain deposits, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FRANCIS M. ATHERTON.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3124) for the relief of Francis M. Atherton. It proposes that in the administration of the pension laws Francis M. Atherton shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered into the service of the United States as a member of the First Battery Vermont Volunteer Light Artillery on the 15th of March, 1862, and to have been honorably discharged on the 1st of February, 1863, and to have been mustered into the service of the United States as an unassigned recruit on the 19th of December, 1863, and to have been honorably discharged on the 9th of March 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF ARMY FIELD CLERKS.

The bill (S. 4451) to provide for allowances for and minimum pay of Army field clerks, to provide for increased pay to Army field clerks for service beyond the continental limits of the United States, and to provide quarters or commutation thereof to Army field clerks in certain cases was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter Army field clerks shall have the same allowances and benefits as heretofore allowed by law to pay clerks, Quartermaster Corps: Provided, however, That the minimum or entrance pay, exclusive of said allowances, of said Army field clerks shall be $1,200 per annum: And provided further, That Army field clerks shall receive the same increase of pay for service beyond the continental limits of the United States as is now allowed by law to commissioned officers of the Army.

SEC. 2. That during the present emergency every Army field clerk, while on active duty in the field or on active duty without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, who maintains a place of abode for a wife, child, or dependent parent, shall be furnished at the place where he maintains such place of abode, without regard to personal quarters furnished him elsewhere, the number of rooms heretofore allowed by law to pay clerks, Quartermaster Corps, to be occupied by, and only so long as occupied by, said wife, child, or dependent parent; and in case such quarters are not available every such Army field clerk shall be paid commutation thereof and commutation for heat and light at the rate authorized by law in cases where public quarters are not available: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to reduce the allowances now authorized by law for any person in the Army.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have received a number of communications in reference to this bill, and I thought I had them here in my desk. I find, however, that I have not, and I desire to ask some member of the Military Committee relative to a certain provision in the bill which was referred to in those letters. I dislike to ask that it go over, but I will inquire of the Senator from New York if this was a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. WADSWORTH. My recollection is that it was a unanimous report, but I am not absolutely certain of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think it is a just bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that letters I have received complained about the bill, but I do not feel justified in asking that it go over because I have not the letters with me.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COPPER RIVER & NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY CO.

The bill (S. 3002) for the relief of the Copper River & Northwestern Railway Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Copper River & Northwestern Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Nevada, $3,102.92, in refund of the gross income tax paid to the collector of internal revenue at Tacoma, Wash., on May 21, 1915, pursuant to a tax levied under the act of Congress approved July 18, 1914 (38 Stat., p. 517), for the period beginning January 1 and ending June 30, 1914, for which period the company had previously paid the license fee or tax provided by the act approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat., pp. 1336, 1337), as amended by the act approved June 6, 1900 (31 Stat., pp. 330, 331).

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARTER OF NATIONAL GERMAN-AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

The bill (S. 3529) to repeal the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance," approved February 25, 1907, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Attorney General is directed to bring an action in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the property of said corporation to have a receiver appointed to take charge of such property, pay the debts, and wind up the affairs of said corporation.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved February 25, 1907, entitled "An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] desired to be present when this bill was under consideration. I also think that there was a similar request from another Senator. I will, therefore, ask that the bill go over temporarily, and if the Senator returns to the Chamber we can revert to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ANSEL G. WINEMAN.

The bill (S. 3566) authorizing the President to appoint Second Lieut. Ansel G. Wineman as a provisional second lieutenant in the Regular Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President to issue a commission to Second Lieut. Ansel G. Wineman as a provisional second lieutenant in the Regular Army, to take rank from the date he would have taken rank had he been considered eligible at the date of his examination, July 23, 1917.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAAC J. REESE.

The bill (S. 2205) for the relief of Isaac J. Reese was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws Isaac J. Reese shall hereafter be held and considered to have been in the military service of the United States as a private of Company K, One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, from the 24th day of July, 1864, to the 6th day of November, 1864, and to have been honorably discharged from the service on the date last named, but no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 10843) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF PENAL LAWS.

The bill (S. 4428) to amend section 272 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 272 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909 (35 Stats., p. 1142), by adding thereto a paragraph to read as follows:

Fifth. When committed upon the person of any officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States while said officer or enlisted man is engaged in the performance of his official duties.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARE OF ALIENS DISCHARGED FROM MILITARY FORCES.

The bill (S. 4365) to authorize the President to make provision for the care and treatment of persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States who are citizens of any nation at war with a nation with which the United States is at war was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President of the United States to make provision for such care and treatment as he may deem advisable of persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States on account of physical disability who are citizens of any nation at war with a nation with which the United States is at war; but such provision shall be made only for the citizens of a nation that makes suitable provision for the care and treatment of persons discharged from the military or naval forces on account of physical disability who are citizens of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PINEY BRANCH ROAD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 3172) to provide for the abandonment of Piney Branch Road between Allison Street and Buchanan Street NW., in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LAND AT LEON SPRINGS, TEX.

The bill (S. 2704) for the acquisition of additional land at the Leon Springs Military Reservation, Tex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice from the calendar I have, which was printed to-day, that No. 2704 does not appear on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The suggestion is made to the Chair that the Printing Office probably dropped it from the calendar through inadvertence.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] if the bill, the title of which has just been read, was unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It was; and the Military Affairs Committee reported it at the urgent request of the Secretary of War. I had previously introduced the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $316,941 for the acquisition of land as an addition to the Leon Springs Military Reservation, Tex.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the bill as passed by the Senate, together with the report submitted by me from the Committee on Military Affairs, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill as passed and the report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 2704) for the acquisition of additional land at the Leon Springs Military Reservation, Tex.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $316,941 for the acquisition of land as an addition to the Leon Springs Military Reservation, Tex.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2704) for the acquisition of additional land at the Leon Springs Military Reservation, Tex., having had the same under consideration, reports thereon with the recommendation that it do pass, and in support thereof submits the following communications from the War Department:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 22, 1917.

To the CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

SIR: Favorable consideration of this bill (S. 2704) is requested.

Inclosed is an extract copy of an indorsement from the officer in charge of cantonment construction which I beg leave to bring to your notice, as it shows conclusively the necessity of acquiring the land as an addition to the Leon Springs Military Reservation, Tex.

Respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

1. The land in question contains approximately 16,000 acres, and the estimated cost of the same is $316,941.

2. On September 12, 1917, the commanding general, Southern Department, was authorized to lease this land for target range, maneuver, trench work, bombing instruction, and other drill purposes, for $75,000 to the end of fiscal year (June 30, 1918), and in the event land is purchased all the unaccrued portion of lease money is to be credited to the purchase amount. A purchase option was included in the leases which will expire on June 30, 1918.

3. The target range to be constructed on these leased lands will cost approximately $60,000, and the damage to improvements necessary in constructing the range will be considerable.

4. Should the land not be purchased some of the owners will have leased at a sacrifice on account of having to remove cattle, etc., from the lands. This necessitated either their selling at the present low prices or securing other pasture lands.

5. By first indorsement, date June 24, 1917, from the commanding general, Southern Department, to The Adjutant General of the Army, the following reasons were given for the acquisition of this land:

"The Leon Springs Military Reservation is an excellent tract of land, of about 17,273.87 acres, for military purposes. It has, however, a number of disadvantages.

"(a) Owing to its distance (22 miles) from Fort Sam Houston, it takes two days for Infantry to make the march.

"(b) It is now becoming somewhat crowded on account of the cantonments recently completed and under construction for four regiments of Field Artillery, one regiment of Infantry, one regiment of Engineers, a training camp that will accommodate 3,000 student officers, a large remount depot, storehouse, and two small-arms target ranges.

"(c) The greatest dimension of the reservation from north to south is about 5 miles and from east to west about the same, but the tract is quite irregular, and the difficulties of conducting suitable maneuvers on this ground have been found in the past to be serious when large bodies of troops are employed.

"(d) Additional room is very much needed for artillery practice, machine-gun practice, exercises in combat firing, and for maneuvers of large bodies of troops, notwithstanding that the cantonment now under construction for the Regular troops was located up against the western boundary line of the reservation in order to avoid undue interference in the use of the ground for range practice and maneuvers.

"It is proposed to extend the reservation toward the south for a distance of about 5 miles, having an area of approximately 16,000 acres, the land costing on an average of $18.96 per acre—a very reasonable price. The advantages of this enlargement are as follows:

"(a) It will bring the portion of the reservation on which camping is possible within 10 miles of the post instead of 22 miles, making it an easy march for Infantry.

"(b) It will more than double the value of the tract for maneuvers and for artillery practice.

"(c) It will bring on the reservation 12 additional wells, with a total of 168,000 gallons of water per day. This is an important matter, as water has been scarce at times. [There are also two on the Muesser tract, one on the Lieber tract, a very strong well on the Sand, Lime & Brick Co. tract, and one on the Rudolph Aue tract valued at $1,200.]

"(d) It will afford large additional areas for grazing animals and for cutting hay. It is to be noted that by using hay cut on the reservation it will be possible to save $5 per ton. Since each animal consumes on an average of 2 tons of hay per year, it is not impossible to pay the interest on the value of this property in savings on hay alone.

"(e) Finally, it will add to the reservation an area making the whole an important field for the concentration of troops and training ground worthy of its importance."

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 9, 1918.

To the CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

SIR: Favorable consideration of Senate bill 2704 is requested. The desirability of this tract of land for military purposes has previously been brought to your attention by a letter under date of November 22, 1917. The purchase option on this leased ground, which it is proposed the Government acquire by purchase, expires July 1, 1918. Should the land not be purchased, some of the owners will have leased at a sacrifice on account of having to remove their stock from the land, necessitating the disposing of same at the market price at that time or securing other pasture lands. This land is used as a target range at present for both Artillery and Infantry troops, and it is of the greatest importance that for the training of troops at that point this land be acquired by the Government.

Respectfully,

BENEDICT CROWELL,
Acting Secretary of War.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

The bill (S. 3438) to prevent corrupt practices in the election of Senators, Representatives, or Delegates in Congress was announced as next in order.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I have no familiarity with that bill, but evidently it is an important measure, and, as only a few Senators are present, I object to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that Calendar No. 385, being House bill 10850, Calendar No. 386, being House bill 10924, and Calendar No. 389, being House bill 11364, all being pension bills, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3914) authorizing a right of way for the transportation of water for improvement of grazing and development of the live-stock industry upon public and national forest lands in Arizona was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3735) to provide for enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have had a visit from some person residing in the District who made complaint about this bill. I do not know anything about it, and I should be very glad if the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] would briefly explain the object of the measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator from New York if the bill now called on the calendar is the one relating to the National Guard of the District?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It relates to the National Guard of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF MILITARY CAMPS.

The bill (S. 4498) to amend section 13 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 13 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, to read as follows, subject to the same modifications as prescribed in the act approved October 6, 1917:

SEC. 13. That during the present emergency it shall be unlawful, within such distance of any military camp, station, fort, post, cantonment, training or mobilization place as the Secretary of War shall determine to be needful to the efficiency and welfare of the Army, and shall designate and publish in general orders or bulletins, to engage in prostitution or to aid or abet prostitution, or to procure or solicit for purposes of prostitution, or to keep or set up a house of ill fame, brothel, or bawdy house, or to receive any person for purposes of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution into any vehicle, conveyance, place, structure, or building, or to permit any person to remain for purposes of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution in any vehicle, conveyance, place, structure, or building; and any person, corporation, partnership, or association violating the provisions of this section shall, unless otherwise punishable under the Articles of War, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and any person subject to military law violating this act shall be punished as provided by the Articles of War; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to do everything by him deemed necessary to suppress and prevent violation thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF ACTION FOR INJURIES.

The bill (S. 72) concerning actions on account of death or personal injury within places under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 11, after the word "State," to strike out "wherein" and insert "within," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the case of the death of any person by the neglect or wrongful act of another within a national park or other place subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, such right of action shall exist as though the place were under the jurisdiction of the State within whose exterior boundaries such place may be; and in any action brought to recover on account of injuries sustained in any such place the rights of the parties shall be governed by the laws of the State within the exterior boundaries of which it may be.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN C. HESSE.

The bill (S. 1879) for the relief of John C. Hesse was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to restore the name of John C. Hesse to the official medal of honor list and to the Army and Navy medal of honor roll, with all the rights, privileges, and benefits thereof, in view of the fact that the congressional medal of honor authorized by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1863, was presented to him in person by Secretary of War Stanton on September 10, 1864, for distinguished gallantry and great personal bravery in preserving and bringing away the colors of the Eighth Regiment United States Infantry after the capture of the regiment at San Antonio, Tex., in the month of April, 1861, at which time he was a sergeant of Company A of that regiment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COPYRIGHTED MEDICAL BOOKS.

The bill (S. 4423) relating to the deposit of copyrighted books upon medical and allied subjects was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who reported the bill, why three copies of medical books published should be deposited, while under the law, as I remember it, only two copies of other kinds of books are required to be deposited?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The purpose of this bill is to enable the library of the Surgeon General's Office to acquire copies of all the new medical publications. It is an amendment to the law and merely provides that, instead of two medical books being deposited with the Library of Congress, three shall be deposited, one to be used by the Army Medical Library.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that it will work a hardship upon publishers of this class of books, because usually they are issued in limited numbers and are not sold to the public generally, and I am fearful that if the publishers are required to deposit three copies it may work a hardship.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We had the matter up in the Committee on the Library and we concluded that it would not amount to much of a hardship to have one more copy of a book filed with the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. We might say that of every book that is copyrighted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It might involve a dollar and a half or two dollars to the struggling publisher.

Mr. SMOOT. It will not fall altogether on the publisher; it is the author of works of this kind who will have to pay.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may say that the Surgeon General regards this as an exceedingly convenient and valuable way of reenforcing the medical library of the Army.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all; and the Government is not to pay for the books, but somebody else is to advance the money. If it were made universal I would not object at all, but it does seem to me that to pick out just one class of copyrighted books, a class which is never published in large quantities, is a discrimination that never ought to be made. I dislike to object to the consideration of the bill, and yet I feel like offering an amendment to it to make it apply to all books copyrighted, if we are going to undertake to make this kind of a requirement in the case of a certain class of books under our copyright laws.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I will not object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that in copyrighted books upon medical and allied subjects there shall be deposited with the Congressional Library three copies, one of which shall be for file in the library of the Surgeon General's Office of the United States Army, that library being the large general medical library for the use of the medical profession of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN OKLAHOMA.

The bill (H. R. 5558) to amend section 101 of the Judicial Code was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "approved," to strike out "May" and insert "March"; in line 8, after the word "amended," to insert "so as"; and in line 9, before the words "State of Oklahoma," to strike out "That the" and insert "The," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 101 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as amended by the act approved February 20, 1917, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 101. The State of Oklahoma is divided into two judicial districts, to be known as the eastern and western districts of Oklahoma. The eastern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July 1916, in the counties of Adair, Atoka, Bryan, Craig, Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Coal, Carter, Delaware, Garvin, Grady, Haskell, Hughes, Jefferson, Johnston, Latimer, Le Flore, Love, McClain, Mayes, Muskogee, McIntosh, McCurtain, Murray, Marshall, Nowata, Ottawa, Okmulgee, Okfuskee, Pittsburg, Pushmataha, Pontotoc, Rogers, Stephens, Sequoyah, Seminole, Tulsa, Washington, and Wagoner. Terms of the district court for the eastern district shall be held at Muskogee on the first Monday in January, at Vinita on the first Monday in March, at Tulsa on the first Monday in April, at South McAlester on the first Monday in June, at Ardmore on the first Monday in October, and at Chickasha on the first Monday in November of each year. The western district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1916, in the counties of Alfalfa, Beaver, Beckham, Blaine, Caddo, Canadian, Cimarron, Cleveland, Comanche, Cotton, Custer, Dewey, Ellis, Garfield, Grant, Greer, Harmon, Harper, Jackson, Kay, Kingfisher, Kiowa, Lincoln, Logan, Major, Noble, Oklahoma, Osage, Pawnee, Payne, Pottawatomie, Roger Mills, Texas, Tillman, Washita, Woods, and Woodward. Terms of the district court for the western district shall be held at Oklahoma City on the first Monday in January, at Enid on the first Monday in March, at Guthrie on the first Monday in May, at Lawton on the first Monday in September, and at Woodward on the second Monday in November: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Woodward are furnished free of expense to the United States. The clerk of the district court for the eastern district shall keep his office at Muskogee and the clerk for the west district at Guthrie, and shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Oklahoma City."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that Order of Business No. 400, being Senate bill 4542, a pension bill; Order of Business 401, being Senate bill 4543, a pension bill; and Order of Business 402, being Senate resolution 241, be passed over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator ask that Order of Business 402 go over?

Mr. SMOOT. I do at this time. I will say to the Senator that the committee expects to meet in a very few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does not the Senator mean Order of Business No. 400 and Order of Business No. 401?

Mr. SMOOT. I desire Order of Business 400, Order of Business 401, and Order of Business 402 to go over at this time, for the reason that the committee expects to meet in a very few moments for the further consideration of the resolution. I think we can get it up to-morrow morning; we certainly can if we have the votes; and I believe it would be the best policy to allow it to go over at this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it was just on that point that I desired to make a statement. If this resolution goes over until to-morrow morning it will find the subcommittee on ordnance of the Committee on Military Affairs absent. It is fair to say that while these discussions and conferences have been going on, the subcommittee on ordnance of the Committee on Military Affairs is proceeding with its work upon the invitation of the War Department; and our tickets are purchased for a trip to the Aberdeen Proving Grounds, and the train leaves at 5 minutes of 7 to-morrow morning. I hope the resolution will not be brought up in my absence.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, how long does the Senator expect to be absent?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We will be gone for the entire day.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the subcommittee be back on Wednesday?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It expects to get back to-morrow night.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I will say to the Senator that in so far as I am able to do it, I give notice now that I intend to bring this matter before the Senate on Wednesday morning.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I inject a parliamentary inquiry? Is this the resolution touching the aircraft?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator gives notice that he desires and intends to bring up the matter on Wednesday morning?

Mr. McKELLAR. On Wednesday.

Mr. LEWIS. And from that statement may we gather that not until Wednesday is the matter to be brought up?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. Or as far as I am concerned.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, for the moment I was absent from the Chamber when the Senator from Tennessee made his statement regarding Senate resolution 241. May I inquire as to what it was?

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely gave notice that I intended to call it up on Wednesday in the morning hour.

Mr. THOMPSON. Very well; but, of course, that does not necessarily mean it will be taken up at that time.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 139) for the appointment of three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that George H. Wood, of Ohio; James S. Catherwood, of Illinois; and John C. Nelson, of Indiana, be appointed members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States, to succeed George H. Wood, of Ohio; James S. Catherwood, of Illinois; and John C. Nelson, of Indiana, whose terms of office expired April 21, 1918.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This concludes the call of the calendar.

JOHN DOYLE, ALIAS JOHN GEARY.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up a case which was temporarily passed over, being Senate bill 1923, for the relief of John Doyle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was passed over for the time being.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in relation to that measure, some reference was made to the fact that the report of The Adjutant General was desired. I have here the report of The Adjutant General in this case. It was made a considerable number of years ago, but nevertheless it is a report on the matter [reading]:

CASE OF JOHN DOYLE, ALIAS JOHN GEARY, LATE PRIVATE COMPANY C, ELEVENTH REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER CAVALRY.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
July 11, 1911.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR:

It is shown by the records that John Geary was enrolled October 19, 1861, and was mustered into service December 20, 1861, as a private of Company C, Eleventh Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, to serve three years. He was captured September 25, 1862, and paroled October 9, 1862, and was declared exchanged in orders from this department dated January 10, 1863. Although the orders in which this soldier was declared exchanged were widely published in the newspapers throughout the country, it does not appear that he ever thereafter reported his whereabouts to the military authorities or returned to his command, which remained in service until September 30, 1865. The publication of the orders in question was a notice to all paroled prisoners concerned to place themselves under military control. Failing to report his whereabouts or the cause of his absence to the military authorities, this soldier became a deserter on January 10, 1863, the date of the promulgation of the order of exchange in his case.

Applying to this department for an honorable discharge, John Doyle, aged 72 years, a resident of Homer, Iowa, in an affidavit executed August 2, 1910, declared as follows:

"That he enlisted in Company C, Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, at Galesburg, Ill., about September or October, 1861, under the name of John Geary. That he served until taken prisoner at Davis Bridge, Miss., in the fall of 1862. He remained a prisoner about 15 days and was then paroled at Holly Springs. He further says that after being paroled he went to Baton Rouge, La., and down the river to New Orleans, and from thence to New York by the steamer General McClellan. While in New York Maj. Wagner, who was also paroled, went to Washington and got transportation for us home, with the understanding that he would notify us when we were exchanged and we could return to our commands. Not receiving any notice, the said John Doyle remained at home and never received any discharge."

The application for an honorable discharge in the case of this soldier, involving removal of the charge of desertion, has been denied by the War Department, and now stands denied, on the ground that he did not complete his term of enlistment, and that it appears from his own statement that he was not prevented from completing it by reason of wounds, injuries, or disease received or contracted in the line of duty, and because the case does not come within any of the other provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, the only law in force governing the subject of removal of charge of desertion.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Adjutant General.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I just want to ask the Senator a question, and perhaps it will obviate the necessity of any further discussion of this matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not state that, because, with my present views, I shall object. No deserter shall get a pension, as far as I can prevent it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, this man was totally ignorant. He could not read or write. He was turned loose with the declaration that he would be notified when wanted, and the War Department says that the only notice that was ever given was a published notice. When a man can not read, I should like to know how notice was given to him. He is probably 78 or 79 years old now. Upon his statement, having served for over 18 months, having been taken prisoner in Mississippi and taken to Louisiana, and then to Washington, and then taken by his major to New York, and there having been told that he would be notified when he was wanted, I should like to know why it is not a meritorious case.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask my colleague how many years elapsed between the time of the entry of this order against this man and the time when he made application to have his record corrected?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, I do not know. I think he has been after it ever since the war was over.

Mr. THOMAS. But does the Senator know?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not.

Mr. THOMAS. My experience is that in most of these cases the application is not made until the Government testimony is all under the ground.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Government had no testimony and never did have any testimony. The Adjutant General says that the notice which was given was a published notice. Here is a man who has signed his affidavit simply by mark, who can not read or write, and when the War Department says that notice was given by publication it means that no notice was given to him. He served for 18 months and was taken prisoner. He was not a man who went into the Army for 90 days and quit. It seems to me that the case is a meritorious one and ought to be approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I dislike very much to object to the consideration of this bill. I recall a number of years ago, when I had the honor to serve in the other branch of Congress, that a large number of applications were made by men who had been deserters to clear their records and to be placed upon the pension rolls. It seems to me that that practice has been continued. I have no doubt that there are some instances where their names ought to be placed upon the roll, and they are entitled to a pensionable status; but I am satisfied that there are many who, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has just stated, wait until the Government's evidence of their desertion is under the ground, and then they come here with the utmost serenity and ask for a pension.

I object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold his objection for a minute. I want to read this affidavit to the Senator. It is the affidavit of this man, made in 1911.

Mr. KING. Let me suggest to the Senator that I shall be glad to look into this case a little further, and it can be called up to-morrow or on some succeeding day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I was attending a committee meeting at the time of the call of the calendar. I ask unanimous consent that we return to Order of Business 384, Senate bill 3438.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the bill?

Mr. POMERENE. It is a very short bill on the subject of corrupt practices.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill can not be passed to-night, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. What is the objection?

Mr. SMOOT. There are only a few Senators here, and it would lead to discussion that could not be concluded to-night.

Mr. POMERENE. I know; but this is a matter which simply relates to the giving of money or some other substance in a corrupt way, and there is no Federal statute on the subject. Nearly all of the States have statutes bearing upon the subject. I do not see how any possible objection can be raised to it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] objected to its consideration.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of the bill simply because it seemed to be an important subject, and I knew nothing about it. The Senator in charge of the bill was not in the Chamber at the time, and there was no information regarding it before the Senate.

I think it is just as well, as the bill has been passed over, to have it go over for to-day, and there will be an opportunity to bring it up again. I know nothing about the bill, and did not make my objections on the merits, but simply from the facts I have stated.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, if objection is made I am powerless in the matter at this time. I may say that this matter was gone into very carefully by a subcommittee composed of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and a third Senator whose name I have forgotten, and it relates to a subject on which we have no Federal statute whatever. It simply goes to the question of the honesty of Federal elections.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I am in no sense antagonistic to the bill. I objected simply because there was no one here to explain it, and I knew nothing about it, and there were only a very few Senators on the floor. There will be an opportunity to look into it.

Mr. POMERENE. There is some one here to explain it now, so I hope the Senator will not insist on his objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that to-morrow we can take up the calendar, and go over it again and go through it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m., Monday, May 20, 1918) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 21, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 20, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. John R. Carpenter, of Markesan, Wis., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, we hallow Thy name, because Thou art Love.

We thank Thee for the light of another new day here upon earth. May we live this day aright. Whenever duty calls us, wilt Thou give us a clearer vision and the strength of character to accomplish that duty.

We thank Thee for our beloved Nation. Every day and every hour we pray for our success in everything that is true and right.

Bless the President of the United States and all who are holding responsible positions. Help us all in our various duties in life, to do that which will result in the greatest good to the greatest number.

Be with those who are on battle fields far away. May Thy "everlasting arms" be about them, to protect, to defend, and to save, that they may be victorious in this great struggle for the betterment of mankind.

These and all blessings we ask in the name of Jesus our Savior. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, May 18, 1918, was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal as read will be approved.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the approval of the Journal, I wish to direct the Speaker's attention to the record of the proceedings as stated in the Journal, so far as the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is concerned, relating to the Senate amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill numbered 52. As the Journal states it, the motion was that the House agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment. The original motion, as borne out by the record of the proceedings, was to instruct the House conferees to insist on the following amendment, by striking out a certain part of it. This motion was limited to that certain part. If the Journal is approved as it is now recorded, the conferees on the part of the House will be barred entirely from entering upon the consideration in the conference of the rest of amendment numbered 52. I have in the last minute conferred with the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads [Mr. MOON], and he advises me that it was not his intention to agree to the Senate amendment numbered 52, but wished all the rest of the Senate amendment, other than that part which related to letter carriers, postal clerks, and railway mail clerks, to be in conference. The Speaker will remember that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] moved to disagree to all of the Senate amendments. That motion was agreed to. Then, after the House had voted to disagree to all of the Senate amendments, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] rose and moved to have the conferees instructed as to a certain portion of one of those amendments. It was within his province at that time to move to instruct; but it was not within the province of any Member of the House, after the House had by vote disagreed to all of the Senate amendments, to immediately move to agree to one of those amendments with an amendment. In order to get to the voting stage on all the amendments, back to that position where the House could vote to agree to any one of them, it would have been necessary to move a reconsideration. It was perfectly compatible with the House proceedings, after the House had disagreed to all the Senate amendments, for the gentleman from Illinois to move to instruct the conferees, but it was not within his province to move to agree to any of them with an amendment. I had made a point of order, but when I found from the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that his motion was not to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment but was a motion to instruct the conferees as to one of the amendments, I did not insist upon the point of order for that additional reason. I am making this suggestion so that the conferees will not be in a confused position when they get into conference. If the Journal stands as it is submitted to the House, when the conferees would get into conference the Senate conferees would say that the only question in conference, so far as Senate amendment No. 52 is concerned, is that part which relates to letter carriers, post-office clerks, and railway mail clerks; but I am assured by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] that he wants all the rest of the Senate amendment in conference, so that he can determine what should be the policy of the conferees and the policy of the House so far as voting $200 per year increase to all of the postal employees other than letter carriers, postal clerks, and railway mail clerks. I would not at this time submit this matter to the attention of the House were it not that I have the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee that he wishes to have in conference all of the remaining part of amendment No. 52, the part other than that which relates to railway mail clerks, post-office clerks, and letter carriers.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the gentleman is aware that the gentleman from Illinois, who made this motion, stated that he wanted all of Senate amendment No. 52 retained except what he moved to strike out.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not aware of that.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will refer to page 6743 of the RECORD he will find——

Mr. STAFFORD. What part?

Mr. WALSH. First column, toward the bottom of the column, where I said:

> The gentleman refers to the Senate amendment No. 52?
> Mr. MADDEN. That is it.
> Mr. WALSH. There is part of that amendment which he desires retained, is there not?
> Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I want all retained except what I have just asked should be stricken out.

Now, of course it makes no difference whatever what the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads may desire; it is the desire of the gentleman who offered the motion to strike out to instruct the conferees, and he made that motion upon suggestion from me incorporating the language that the conferees should be instructed to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment which is——

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I remember distinctly, and the RECORD will show, that the gentleman from Illinois in the debate stated that he only wished to have the conferees instructed, so far as railway mail clerks, postal clerks, and letter carriers were concerned. He was not insisting on agreeing to the rest of the Senate amendment. In the debate during the pendency of the point of order, if he had stated that his motion was to agree to the Senate amendment 52 with an amendment, then I would have argued the question, and the Chair would necessarily have been obliged to hold that after the House had voted to disagree to all Senate amendments that it was then too late to move to concur in a Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman did make that point, but did not argue it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, what is the parliamentary situation?

The SPEAKER. The parliamentary situation is that the Speaker announced that without objection the Journal would be approved, whereupon the gentleman from Wisconsin reserved the right to object to agreeing to the Journal. Now he is expounding the reasons why he objected. That is the parliamentary situation.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not correct that the Senate adopted the House bill except the amendment the gentleman from Illinois suggested to add to that amendment——

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not. The House bill contained no provision whatsoever for increase of the salaries of supervisory officials, and the Senate amendment is an entirely different proposition. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will read what the gentleman from Massachusetts said in this discussion. I read from page 6743. Here is what the gentleman said then:

> Mr. WALSH. The gentleman refers to the Senate amendment No. 52?
> Mr. MADDEN. That is it.
> Mr. WALSH. There is part of that amendment which he desires retained, is there not?
> Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I want all retained except what I have just asked should be stricken out.
> Mr. WALSH. Of course, the gentleman desires to agree to the Senate amendment No. 52 with an amendment?
> Mr. MADDEN. I wish to be certain of the retention of the classification feature of the bill H. R. 9414 as passed by the House.
> Mr. WALSH. That should be the instruction.
> Mr. MADDEN. I want to do whatever will accomplish the purpose.

Now, going through the RECORD there is no reference to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] other than the formal motion submitted by him and read by the Clerk. Now, on page 6742 this occurs:

> Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois in making his motion, I think, was in error in moving to instruct the conferees to strike out. It seems to me the proper thing is to move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.
> Mr. MADDEN. That is all right.
> The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the right to make a motion to instruct the conferees. What he may put in his instructions is another matter. What point does the gentleman from Massachusetts make?
> Mr. WALSH. My suggestion was that the gentleman from Illinois moves to instruct the conferees to strike out of the bill certain language and insert other language. Of course, the bill is in conference. This is a House provision, and there is a Senate amendment. It seems to me that the motion for instruction should be to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment.
> The SPEAKER. That is one way of getting at it.
> Mr. MOON. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken in this, that there is no House provision.
> Mr. WALSH. Is there not a House provision to which was an amendment?
> Mr. MOON. No; the gentleman is speaking of the provision that was in House bill 9414.

The SPEAKER. Where is the gentleman reading?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is in the beginning of the discussion immediately following the offering of the motion by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], first column, page 6742. The Speaker will remember that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

CANNON], before the motion was put, entered into discussion as to whether after a disagreement it was proper at the very beginning of the conference to instruct the conferees, so I think that it was the purpose of the House to move to instruct the conferees to insist on the Madden amendment to the Senate amendment No. 52 and disagree otherwise as to the entire amendment, and that the Journal should so state.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STAFFORD. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker will allow me, I think I can clear this thing up. I think I stated in the discussion which took place that there was no difference between the House and the Senate in respect to rural carriers, laborers, chauffeurs, and other employees of the Post Office Department; that the only difference which existed was in the matter of clerks in first and second class offices, carriers in the City Delivery Service, and railway mail clerks.

And what I wanted to do—and whether I did it or not I do not know—was to provide instructions to the conferees to insist upon the retention of the classification provided in the bill H. R. 9414 in the consideration of the question in conference, leaving the other items inserted in the appropriation bill by the Senate open to such conference as might be thought proper.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman wished to have in disagreement between the two Houses the increase of salary allowance of supervisory officials and all other post-office officials which are carried in the Senate amendment, but which were not embodied in the original Moon-Madden bill?

Mr. MADDEN. What I wanted to do, I will say frankly, was to provide instructions to the conferees to insist upon the insertion of the provisions of the bill H. R. 9414 as those provisions related to clerks in first and second class offices, carriers in City Delivery Service, and railway mail clerks.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, in response to a parliamentary inquiry on Saturday, propounded by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], which inquiry was as follows:

Will this motion instruct the conferees to agree to the balance of amendment 52 except this language which is stricken out and with the insertion?—

The Speaker replied:

The Chair thinks so.

Now, that is found on page 6745, at the bottom of the left-hand column, when the debate had been about concluded. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] rose to ask as to the motion and as to its effect, and the Chair's understanding of it was in conformity with the understanding that prevailed during the colloquy and the discussion of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, namely, that all he wanted to do was to strike out certain language and insert the classification plan which had been approved by this House in a former bill, and in reply to a question by me he stated that he wished the rest of the Senate amendment 52 retained. And I submit that his motion to agree to Senate amendment 52 with an amendment was in effect a disagreement, and it was not in conflict with the previous action of the House by unanimous consent disagreeing to the Senate amendment. I submit that the Journal as read states the action taken by the House and sets forth the effect of it as understood by both the Speaker and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What does the Journal actually show in this connection?

The SPEAKER. The Journal shows this, that Mr. MADDEN moved that the conferees be instructed to agree to Senate amendment No. 52 with the following amendment, and then recites the amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I gathered the attitude of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], from his statement, it was to the effect that the House, having disagreed to the Senate amendments, it was therefore not competent for this body to instruct the conference committee to do a certain thing which, in substance, would amount to an agreement in part, of the matter in dispute.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman misunderstands my position. That is the very point I am arguing, namely, that the Journal should state just what the gentleman from Illinois attempted to do, which was to instruct the conferees as to matters relating to letter carriers, post-office clerks, and railway-mail clerks.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman's contention was that having in general disagreed, the House could not promptly turn around and agree?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, my contention is that the gentleman who moved to disagree to the amendment, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], wished to have a disagreement to that portion of the Senate amendment which related to supervisory officials, post-office inspectors, and everybody else, and also that which related to city letter carriers, post-office clerks, and railway-mail clerks.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say in this connection that the proposition that having disagreed to the Senate amendments, we are unable to instruct the conference committee to take any action which in substance would be an agreement pro tanto, can not be sound, for the following reason, that the instructions of the House to a conference committee are not the equivalent of an agreement by the House to the matter to which the instructions relate. I think the gentleman has in mind the principle that when the House inserts matter it can not turn about and strike out the same matter or strike out matter which it has inserted. But that principle does not apply for the reason given.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In spite of the instructions the conference committee may disagree to matter to which the instructions commit it to agree, and vice versa. Hence instructions to a committee to agree to an amendment can not be regarded as the formal agreement of the House to that amendment—and that being so, the logic of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] fails.

The SPEAKER. The situation was this, and the thing that attracted the attention of the Chair was that during a long service here he had never seen the matter transacted in the way the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was trying to do. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] made a suggestion, with which the Chair agreed, that the effect of the Madden motion was really to agree to the Senate amendment No. 52 with an amendment. And that has been done repeatedly; and the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] is entirely correct. Now, even if the idea of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] was correct that the House, having just disagreed to all these Senate amendments, could not do the thing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was trying to do, he never made any such point in his argument, and it was rather an elaborate one, about the Madden motion, but he confined his objections to an entirely different thing. The Chair has read this thing over a half dozen times, and it seems to me that the effect of the Madden motion was simply to agree to Senate amendment No. 52 with an amendment which was embraced in his instructions. That is not an agreement to Senate amendment No. 52, and the Chair thinks that it has been journalized correctly. And the Journal as read will be adopted, without objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, we can not make a decision without a statement of the exact facts.

Now, there was at no time a motion by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to agree to the whole of Senate amendment No. 52 or to any part of it. The House had disagreed to the whole of it. Now, his proposition was not to agree to any part of it but to strike out a part of it, which, in effect, was an amendment to that extent only, and applicable to that part only—to strike out a certain part of it and insert other matter. It occurred to me that that does not have the legal effect of an agreement to the part of the matter that had been disagreed to heretofore, but simply applies to that particular portion of amendment No. 52 which Mr. Madden desired to correct by striking out and leaving the balance of the amendment disagreed to.

Inasmuch as there was no motion made at all to agree to any part of Senate amendment No. 52, it seems to me that the Journal of this House, in order to show the intent and purpose of the mover of that motion, and evidently the opinion of the House when it was passed, ought to show that the House insisted upon the amendment that Mr. MADDEN proposed, but maintained its disagreement as to the balance of Senate amendment No. 52.

It comes to us in a different shape from legislation usually. There was no provision in the original bill as it left the House on this question at all. It comes back now to us with an original Senate amendment. We disagreed to that amendment; want a certain portion of the amendment, or all of it, stricken out and new matter inserted. We expressed an opinion only as to a part of that amendment, which we desired removed and something substituted in its place.

Now, it occurs to me that the legal effect of that is not to affirmatively approve of the other part of that amendment. We are taking action simply on the part referred to by Mr. MADDEN in his amendment, and we leave the balance of it disagreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, affirming the position of the gentleman from Tennessee, may I be privileged to read to the Speaker and to the House, in confirmation of that position, just what took place after all these matters heretofore referred to and before the vote was taken? In the discussion between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the gentleman from Tennessee made this statement, which will be found on page 6745 at the bottom of the second column. I read:

Mr. CANNON. The House would accede to the request of the Senate and agree to the conference. That would be the ordinary course of procedure. Of course, the House might at any time instruct its conferees. What was the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]?

Mr. MOON. As I understand the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], it was to amend the Senate amendment by inserting the provisions on this question that was passed in H. R. 9414, the legislative bill on that proposition, which is a change of the existing law on the subject of classification.

Mr. CANNON. That would be perfectly proper, the Senate having proposed the legislation, to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Is that the motion?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Then, it does not involve any instructions at all. Of course, you could instruct, but ordinarily it is not done. Later on, if the House was willing——

Mr. MOON. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that simply to agree to a Senate amendment with an amendment, without stating what that amendment was, would give no information to the conferees.

Mr. CANNON. You propose to put in that amendment?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. When that goes in, that is all the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks for.

Mr. CANNON. It is the difference between agreeing with an amendment and instructing the conferees. I think the House has very rarely instructed its conferees in the first instance. I suppose it has the power to do it, but it is out of the ordinary course, and would not amount to anything more than to pursue the ordinary course, in my judgment, in the event that the Senate would not agree.

Now, here is the potential part of this discussion:

Mr. MOON. I think the idea probably was that it carries with it a suggestion from the House as to what the legislation ought to be on a subject on which the House has not legislated in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. But you can do that by concurring in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. MOON. I understand.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, the House has already disagreed to the Senate amendments.

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. MOON. This is a motion, after a disagreement to the Senate amendments, to instruct the conferees as to what action they shall take as to this particular amendment.

That is the last expression of the gentleman as to what he wished on this subject.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman from Tennessee was not making the motion. I suggest that.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to state that it certainly was not my intention to accept the Senate provisions of the salary legislation with an amendment. My sole intention was to strike out certain language in that part of the Senate amendment which provided for a $200 per annum increase in the compensation of the clerks in first and second class offices, the carriers in City Delivery Service, and the railway mail clerks, and to substitute for the language stricken out the language pertaining to that particular phase of the salary legislation embodied in the classification features of House bill 9414.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What did the gentleman mean, then, when he stated, in reply to a question, that he wanted Senate amendment 52 retained except what he had just asked to be stricken out?

Mr. MADDEN. What I mean was that I had personally no objection to language employed by the Senate as to the other features of the legislation, but I seriously objected to the language employed by the Senate as to that feature of the legislation which dealt with the clerks and carriers and railway mail clerks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the easiest way to settle this matter is to defer the adoption of Saturday's Journal, and let the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] retire to some quiet place and see if they can put that proposition in such shape that it will not get the House conferees into a tangle over in the Senate. I will ask that that be done. The Clerk will read Sunday's Journal.

The Journal of the proceeding of Sunday, May 19, 1918, was read and approved.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM A. JONES.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, some days since the House agreed to have the memorial exercises in relation to the late Representative JONES on next Sunday, May 26. Owing to the inability of several Members to participate in these exercises on this date and awaiting the memorial proceedings, official and semiofficial, from the Philippine Islands, I ask unanimous consent that that order be vacated. Subsequently I will ask that another date be fixed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to vacate the order for memorial services on May 26 for the late Representative JONES of Virginia. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by my colleague [Mr. JAMES] at a patriotic meeting on April 21 last.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech made by his colleague [Mr. JAMES] on a patriotic subject. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SOLDIERS' VOTE.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. On what subject?

Mr. ROGERS. I want to refer again to the matter of the soldiers voting.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts to address the House for three minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I think the House and the country have been a good deal mystified by the divergent and irreconcilable reports issued from the various branches of the War Department with reference to the policy to be pursued this fall by the War Department on the subject of the soldiers voting in France.

In the first place, the Acting Secretary of War gave to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts last month, while Secretary Baker was still in Europe, a long written opinion in which it was laid down as a positive rule that the taking of the soldiers' votes in France would not be tolerated by the department. In letters signed by The Adjutant General, addressed to me and to one of the Senators, which I printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a few days ago, practically the same thing was stated. Since then Mr. Baker has returned from France where, presumably, he looked into the whole matter and considered the feasibility of taking the overseas soldiers' votes. He has within a few hours given out a statement concerning the matter, which I think will be of interest to the House and which I ask to have read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

MAY 18, 1918.

The question of having the soldiers vote is a difficult one, but everybody is anxious to have it done if possible.

You know with the soldiers in this country we made a rule that wherever a State had provided the machinery for taking the vote of the soldiers we would help all we could to facilitate the operation of that machinery. The War Department obviously can not take the responsibility of taking, collecting, and returning the votes. If it is possible for us to work out a plan by which we can facilitate the States doing it through their own agencies, agencies of their own creation, we would be very happy to do it.

If States provide machinery which is practicable and can be worked we will do our utmost to enable them to work it. If some plans are practicable and some impracticable we will not punish those who are practicable because of the impracticability of others.

If it is possible to work out a plan it will apply to the American Expeditionary Force.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to express an opinion, I think the statement represents precisely the view which the War Department ought properly to adopt and which it apparently has now definitely decided to adopt. In the first place, military considerations must come first. In the second place, subject only to these military considerations, everything will be done to permit the soldiers in France to vote this fall. The statement makes it clear—what must be clear under the Constitution—that it is up to the States themselves; but that the War Department will cooperate in every way with the States in order to make possible the voting in France. Six or eight, possibly ten States have already submitted plans for soldiers voting in France. Massachusetts is one that has been working very hard on the question; Mississippi is another, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] discussed fully the other day; others are North Carolina, New Jersey, Connecticut, Kansas, and Nebraska. The War Department officials have told me this morning that they regard the Mississippi plan as entirely practicable, because it does not overburden the War Department officials in this country or in France. So it is squarely before the several States to decide what to do on this important matter. It rests with each to determine whether or not its over-seas citizen soldiers shall be disfranchised.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

CONTRIBUTION BY NATIONAL BANKS TO THE RED CROSS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that it might be well for Members to understand that there is a special order for 5 o'clock this afternoon. There was a special order made Saturday whereby the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] would be recognized to move a suspension of the rules for the purpose of passing a bill authorizing national banks to contribute to the Red Cross.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of a bill which I introduced to-day to punish those who are guilty of mob violence in attempting to execute the laws of the United States. I want to have the short bill printed with some remarks of my own.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it simply a bill which the gentleman wants to print?

Mr. MASON. A short bill, and my remarks in support of it, which bill goes to the Judiciary Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to incorporate the bill in his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FESS. Frequently within the last two weeks, and perhaps longer, there have been reports in the form of speeches of what has been said in the Senate by Senators, always complimentary, nothing critical except in a friendly way, as to the value or merit of a particular bill. My inquiry is whether it is in order for a Member to quote anything, favorable or unfavorable, that a Senator has said on the floor of the Senate

The SPEAKER. It is not. It is liable to provoke crimination and recrimination on the floor of the House, and also to get up crimination and recrimination between the House and the Senate.

FOOD PRODUCTION.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the bill H. R. 11945, relating to food production, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] has 37 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has 45 minutes remaining.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in respect to the time yet at the disposal of the gentleman from Iowa, on Saturday afternoon the gentleman from Mississippi asked how the time stood, and the Chair replied at that time that the gentleman from Iowa had still 67 minutes at his disposal. In the absence of the gentleman from Iowa, I yielded 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] and later extended his time two minutes. I then yielded five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON], and that was all the time used on this side out of the 67 minutes, with the exception of one minute by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD]. That makes 18 minutes of time that was consumed out of the 67 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, is merely stating what the memorandum of the Clerk shows. He has two other items of time which the gentleman from Michigan has not referred to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] was yielded 10 minutes and 1 minute, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] was yielded 5 minutes and the gentleman from Minnesota 1 minute. If they consumed more time, it was up to the Chair, and it should not be taken out of our time.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course not. The gentleman will get all the time he is entitled to. If the Chair's recollection is of any value, it is that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] had 2 minutes yielded him in addition to the 10.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think the gentleman asked for two and I yielded one.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, according to the gentleman's statement there is a difference of only 2 minutes, and according to him he is entitled to 50 minutes. Why not make it 50 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. That is what it will be. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to 50 minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to 37 minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the courtesy of being extended this privilege on this first Red Cross day, and I will show my appreciation by being as brief as I can. Let me say that the Red Cross bill that is coming up later to-day for the amendment of the national-banking act is a war measure and is a very important bill. Its purpose is to permit national banks to contribute to the Red Cross. I thought at one time that by consent of all of the stockholders of a bank it might make contributions to the Red Cross for war purposes, but something more is required. The depositors are interested in the security and management of the bank. We can not under the law by action of the board of directors or even with the consent of the stockholders themselves contribute this money. There is one other suggestion I wish to make in reference to that bill, and that is I hope there will be an amendment offered to it by which national banks may be permitted to contribute to the war Y. M. C. A., which is a counterpart, a running mate with the Red Cross.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If national banks, through directors not representing in many instances much stock, can contribute, what is to become of State banks that have gone into the Federal Reserve System? They are not authorized to contribute, and have we authority to authorize them to contribute? Have we authority to take the small holders who happen to be directors and permit them to dispose of the property of the big holders, or have we the right to permit the big holders to dispose of the property of the small holders, and then after that is done have a drive upon them as citizens in their particular localities to contribute to the Red Cross? Take the New York banks, for example. Their stock is distributed all over the country. The directors contribute personally. If you have any New York bank stock, do you want them to dispose of your property?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that the rule under which we are operating confines the discussion to the bill. I did not want to interrupt, but I have been advised that if I permit anyone to depart from the rule that a point of no quorum will be made and I shall be compelled to wait 45 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Permit me to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] by saying that Congress has nothing to do with State banks. In reference to this bill, it is an act to provide further for the national security and defense by promoting agriculture and by stimulating the distribution of agricultural products. And, it being a war measure, and all our legislation and the life and very existence of our Nation being at stake, makes the welfare of our Army and Navy always in order, and especially the Red Cross.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order with reference to the pending bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think I am in order when talking about the national security and the national defense which is contained in the title of the bill.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan be permitted to discuss the bill to which he has referred, the Red Cross bill,

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that his colleague may be permitted to discuss the Red Cross bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the Red Cross bill will come up later in the day. This bill was brought up under a special rule as to debate on the merits of this measure. Now, I have no objection, of course, to the gentleman discussing the Red Cross bill at the proper time, but if it is injected into the discussion upon this bill some of us gentlemen who are waiting to be advised of the merits of this proposition will not be advised. I do not think we ought to try to discuss the two measures under a special rule confining debate to one measure.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think there will be any opportunity of saying anything on the Red Cross bill when it comes up to-day, and I only want now to say that I think it is an important bill and ought to be allowed, but amended. That is all I care to say as to that.

If I may now be permitted, I wish to say something about food and fuel. Fuel is just as important to win the war as food, and it is just as bad to freeze to death as to starve to death. There is not much difference. A part of this money is to be used in the production of coal, or can be so used. We are told that mining coal is a mere matter of transportation. Dr. Garfield says that. Trains can be run almost continually upon all of the railroads. We have the trackage. It is a matter of trains, of hiring of men to dig the coal, putting it on the cars, and transportation. It is a question of having the coal mined, the cars, the engines, and the men to run them. It is a matter of cost, a matter of price. And we ought to begin to-day to get coal for next winter. We are advised that now is the time to order our coal. But when we order it we can not get it. A gentleman told me Saturday he had ordered his coal two months ago and he has not got it yet. He is told that the coal yard has not the coal. Coal dealers should fill up their coal yards and do it now.

I wish to speak about the food provisions of the bill. We were told when we were discussing the Agricultural bill a short time ago that the minimum price of wheat should be fixed at $2.20 a bushel.

The farmers are all urged now to raise more wheat. They are offered the inducement of $2.20 per bushel. Whether this is sufficient or not remains a question. The farmers are patriotic, and I am sure they would raise the wheat at a loss if necessary in order to support our armies and to feed our people during war time. From the list of States following there can not be much profit to the farmer in raising wheat at $2.20 per bushel. These figures are taken from the Agricultural Yearbook, prepared by the Agricultural Department of the Government for the year 1916, on page 575:

Yield of wheat crop, 1916.

	Bushels per acre.
Indiana	12
Illinois	11
Minnesota	7.4
Missouri	8.5
North Dakota	5.5
South Dakota	6.8
Kansas	12
Kentucky	9
North Carolina	10.5
South Carolina	10.6
Georgia	11.4
Tennessee	9.2
Alabama	9.5
Texas	11
Oklahoma	9.7
Arkansas	8
Average	10.13
Delaware	15
Virginia	12.5
West Virginia	14.5
Ohio	13.5
Iowa	15.8
Mississippi	15
Kansas	11
Average	13.9

Average yield per acre for whole United States.

[From Agricultural Yearbook, 1916, p. 67.]

1907 to 1916	14.7

The following I take as a fair average cost of raising an acre of wheat in Michigan. Of course, the cost will be slightly less than these figures where the soil is light and sandy or a tractor can be used. It will cost slightly more where the ground is rough or heavy and where a walking plow is used:

Cost per acre to produce wheat.

Plowing	$3.00
Rolling	1.00
Dragging	1.50
Fertilizer	3.00
Seed	4.00
Twine and cutting	2.00
Drawing in and stacking	1.00
Thrashing and help	2.00
Marketing	1.00
Interest on land and tools	5.00

Making a total cost of $24 per acre.

In making this estimate I might add that some seed wheat in the fall of 1917 cost as high as $3.80 per bushel and rye as high as $3 per bushel, while the price of fertilizer is estimated at $30 a ton.

There was only one State in the United States—Arizona—that produced an average yield of 29 bushels per acre, and that State raised only 1,600,000 bushels. The next highest yield was by Nevada, being 28.9 bushels, which raised only 1,593,000 bushels. Maine raised next highest, average yield of 27 bushels, which raised only 135,000 bushels.

All the other States were below those figures, and the total average for the United States in 1916 was only 12.1 bushels.

The yield for the year of 1917 I have not at hand, but it was slightly more than for the year 1916.

The estimate for the present year, 1918, in Michigan is around 57 per cent of an average crop, which may be increased by fair weather and conditions.

The estimate of the Agricultural Department for the whole United States for the year 1918 is 572,539,000 bushels of winter wheat, which, together with the planting of spring wheat, may bring the yield of both winter and spring wheat up to the 1,000,000,000-bushel mark. If so, this will be a bumper wheat crop for America. I included nothing in the above cost per acre for the wear and tear or use of tools.

Mr. BRITTEN. What is the total?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The total cost is $24 an acre.

Now, as to live stock, it takes a bushel of corn to put 5 pounds of meat on a grade steer. It will put 8 pounds on a hog and produce 5 pounds of mutton fed to a sheep or lamb. Corn costs $1.25 to $1.50 a bushel. Divide the cost of a bushel of corn by 5 and you get what it costs the farmer to fatten sheep and cattle. Talk about price fixing! I say the price of wheat should have been fixed at $2.50 a bushel, and I do not know how the President fixed it at $2.20. I do not know how the House fixes it at $2.20. I can see how the Senate fixed it at $2.50. The farmer is entitled to what it costs him and a fair, reasonable profit for his labor. Some have stated that $2.50 would make flour cost $18 a barrel and increase the cost of bread. Bread to-day costs the consumer practically the same price with wheat at $2.20 per bushel as it did in May, 1917, when wheat sold at $3.40 a bushel. I leave it to any man in the House if it is not as high to-day, or higher, with wheat at $2.20 than it was a year ago when wheat was $3.40 a bushel on the Chicago and St. Louis markets.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will.

Mr. PLATT. Has the gentleman seen any bread with wheat in it in the last six months?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I hope not.

Mr. PLATT. I have not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The American people ought not to eat a loaf of bread until we lick the king of tyranny, the lord of barbarity, the outrager of virtue, and the murderer of innocent women and children. Think of a command to murder four children out of a family of five, so that the mother would advocate, beg, and pray for peace! Talk about peace now, as I have seen in some speeches made——

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will.

Mr. REED. Is it not a fact that the administration claims that is the minimum price of wheat, that there is no maximum price?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The minimum price in this case is the maximum; it is the same thing. I have heard—it was stated here by some Member; I do not remember who it was—that if wheat was $2.50 a bushel, flour would be $18 a barrel. It takes 4½ bushels of wheat to make a barrel of flour in an up-to-date mill, and any mill can make a barrel of flour out of 5 bushels of wheat. There is not a mill in the United States but what will be glad to grind those 5 bushels for the middlings and the by-products, in which case the barrel of flour would cost $12.50 with wheat at $2.50 a bushel.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know whether the farmers had any representative on the board or committee that assisted in arriving at the minimum price for wheat?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not know of any, and I looked to see who was on that committee, but could not find it; but, anyhow, whether they were on or whether they were off——

Mr. WALSH. I was informed they had no representative.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would think that they had not.

Gentlemen, we want and must have wheat, and now is the time to prepare for putting in the fall crop of 1918. Planting time is only a little more than 90 days off.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I want to say that there were farmers on the committee that fixed the price at $2.20.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They did not fix it high enough, according to the record.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There were farmers on that board, but their wishes were utterly ignored in the matter of fixing the price of wheat.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield further time to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am pleased to have the statement of my colleague [Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan], and I thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE] for yielding me more time.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will.

Mr. FESS. We hear it constantly stated that the price was the minimum. Is it not true that if the Government becomes the buyer of an article that there is no competition later and the minimum price must be the maximum?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am very glad the gentleman asked me that question. That is a well-established fact. The Government now buys wool. No one else is buying wool. The price was fixed at the same price for which it sold on the 25th of April, 1917, but it is only purchased on Government account and when the Government wants it. If the farmer tried to sell his beans, the local buyers were not taking in beans, and also they were not buying hay, because they could not get the cars to load it in.

So I say these things about farming. I will put the figures in the RECORD. I shall approximate them, because some lands work easier than other lands and you can put in a crop for less. But I am talking about my own State, which is surely an average State for agriculture. And I would say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that I think he is right in that the minimum price is the maximum price, when the Government fixes it, in all things.

Mr. FESS. Whenever the Government becomes the purchaser of an article the maximum will be in unison with the minimum.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

And I am glad to see that this bill is reported as a war measure, because we can not whip Germany unless we have food. That is plain enough. Some put the limitation of an army at 5,000,000, some say 8,000,000, and some say we should remove the lid. I want to tell you now what I think about that. We are fighting the whole German nation. We are fighting 75,000,000 people, and I do not know whether or not we have fully comprehended it. But whether our Army is 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 or 5,000,000 men, every one of us here at home should do all we can to aid and support the Army and raise all the food we can to supply food and munitions to win this war. Until it is won we should not talk peace. We should talk about war.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In just a second. We should talk about war because we are engaged in it, and there can be no lasting peace without victory. When you see the peace cards put down on the table, look and see whether or not Belgium is to be restored; whether or not bleeding France is to be indemnified; and, above all, whether or not there is going to be any more wars and that there will be a lasting peace. We are fighting now for the welfare, safety, and the very existence of our Nation.

Mr. McKENZIE. I take it the gentleman has studied this bill, and although I do not suppose he will have time enough, if he does I would like to have him point out to me just any one way that this bill that we are now discussing will increase the output of the farms for this year and help us win this war.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will be very glad to do that right now. I have read the bill quite carefully, also the report, and would say that in September, 1918, we will put out our wheat crop. In Michigan the average wheat crop this year is estimated at about 9 bushels an acre, according to the reports; and it will take $24 an acre, my friends, to put that wheat out, harvest it, and put it on the market. If you can see how a man can get his money back when receiving $2.05 a bushel—and that is what the farmer gets, although they talk $2.20—I would like to know it. Of course the miller pays more; possibly $2.50. But now is the time to prepare for the next year's crop. The Thirty Years' War, the Napoleonic War of 10 years duration, and the Seven Years' War were all long ones. Let us prepare for a long, hard war; then if the end comes sooner we will all rejoice, but if not we will be ready to do our best. We will be fighting next year; we will be fighting, maybe, for 10 years. The Seven Years' War was successfully fought by Prussia with a population of 5,000,000 against an allied population of 100,000,000. We are a nation of 100,000,000 people and with our allies we are going to win this war. I am for coordinating every allied nation; I am for getting all the nations who have declared war against Germany together now. Let us get in all we can of South America as we have all of North America. Let us go down and see if we can not get Mexico in some way to come in. Let us take in Japan, let us take in China, and every South American Republic, and let us lick Germany decisively and have no more wars. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this measure, as I have supported every measure that appeared to me to be for the best interest of the Nation and that would help to further the interest of our country in this great conflict in which we are now engaged.

My colleague, Mr. CANDLER, has been a member of the Committee on Agriculture for a number of years. Knowing how great an interest he always displays in regard to everything affecting the agricultural interests of the country, and having seen such frequent evidence of the wide information on such subjects, and having such confidence in his judgment and integrity, I would feel justified in supporting this bill simply because it is reported by him and has his indorsement.

Having read the bill and given it some thought, my conclusion is that we should follow his lead on this matter and give it hearty support.

This is an act "to promote further the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products."

As I recall the debate, there have been only two or three criticisms of the measure. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] had a lot to say about the form of the bill. He says there are duplications, that many of the items in this bill are covered by similar items in the regular Agricultural appropriation bill.

That is true. But that is not a proper subject for criticism. Where the same item appears in both bills it is not provided twice for the same work. It is an extension of the work. It is no criticism of the committee to say that it did not make as full provision on many subjects in the regular bill as is proposed now. We are living now in abnormal times. New conditions are confronting us. Each rising sun brings with it new problems. Our vision is broadening. We realize that there must be expansion and extension along a great many lines, and it is the effort and intention of the committee in bringing out this bill to meet conditions as they exist at present and to anticipate the future as best it may.

Mr. QUIN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. QUIN. Six of the vital provisions of this measure, which are supplemental to the other bill, are worth more than any other legislation that Congress ever brought up, are they not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I agree that they are all matters of great importance even in normal times, and I believe that they may well be considered as matters of almost vital importance in the present circumstances.

Mr. QUIN. The Market Bureau has a large sum provided for, and there is a live-stock provision that is very valuable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. All those items are very important and very necessary. The Bureau of Markets, to which the gentleman refers, is exceedingly important. The distribution of agricultural products is a matter of great moment, both to the producer and the consumer.

Mr. QUIN. All the great American food products are cared for in this measure, are they not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes. I desire to commend the committee for being able to so thoroughly grasp the situation and to discern the present condition of the country in this regard.

As I was saying when interrupted, the gentleman from Iowa criticized the form of the bill. It is not "form" but substance in which we should be interested. We should inquire: Does it meet the conditions? Will it help to advance the interests of the Nation in this conflict? Will it stimulate agriculture as it is designed to do? Will it facilitate the distribution of agricultural products? Is the legislation necessary for the prosecution of the war?

If these questions are answered in the affirmative, then there should be no quibbling about matters of form.

All realize, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] stated a moment ago, that the production of food is a very important and necessary work at this time. A great army of men, a strong naval force, large guns, an immense fleet of aircraft, and all those things that go to make up a fighting force will avail nothing unless there is a supply of foodstuff.

Mr. QUIN. I know how ardent a friend the gentleman has always been in behalf of the farmers. It will aid the farmers, too, will it not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Indeed it will. There is no question about that.

Some gentlemen criticized the committee because the bill simply appropriated lump sums. Why, gentlemen, should we stop to quibble over a little matter of that kind? We have practically placed the entire power of the Nation into the hands of one man. We have said: "Here are the resources of the country, take them and use them as you deem best." Time after time, since the war began, we have appropriated many millions of money in lump sums to the various departments.

In this time of crisis it is proper to do this. We trust the honor, the integrity, and the judgment not only of the President but of the various men at the head of these great departments. The right to exercise their discretion in many matters should not be hampered. We have granted this right frequently, and there is no good reason for refusing it to the Secretary of Agriculture, who will undoubtedly expend this money in an effort to stimulate agriculture, help the farmer, and benefit the entire Nation.

This is a war measure. My friends, we are all of one mind, I am sure. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] said in this House only a few days ago:

Mr. Speaker, there were differences among us in the beginning of this war. But there is one proposition about which there is no division in this Chamber. Germany may as well understand that America will never submit to a peace dictated by Berlin. Americans know now, if they have not realized heretofore, that free America can not survive if Germany wins. I do not believe that there is a man in this Chamber who would hesitate to give all he has if it shall become necessary to give all in order to win.

He was stating the truth when he credited the membership with patriotic impulses and an earnest desire to see victory crown our efforts in this conflict. [Applause.]

There have been, of course, differences of opinion as to methods of procedure—some have preferred one plan and some another—but on the one great question of winning the war there has been no disagreement. The success of our country, the preservation of our institutions, the honor of our flag, are of interest to all alike, and all have been prompted to action by those things.

Because a man differs from me as to how to win the war does not mean that he is any less patriotic than I am or any more so. Dr. Frank Crane, a noted American writer, recently said:

Be patriotic but not hysterical. Don't accuse all who do not agree with you of being pro-German.

He is right. This is not a time for hysteria. What we want is cool, steady, earnest action. We are opposed by a cruel, determined enemy. All our intellect and energy must be used to the very best advantage. Nothing should be allowed to weaken the full force of our powers. We should hit hard and direct our blows well, so that they may have the desired effect.

Mr. Chairman, I do not doubt now—indeed, I have never doubted—the loyalty and patriotism of the American people. Naturally there was deep sorrow and regret that war came upon us. On April 2, 1917, when President Wilson addressed Congress in regard to a declaration of war, his countenance was grave, his appearance indicated how deeply he regretted that war should come to the Nation, and he said that he was performing "a distressing and oppressive duty."

To suffer physically and mentally; to sacrifice fond desires and cherished ambitions; to endure hardships and privation is, to use the language of the President, "a distressing and oppressive duty," but it is a duty and one that will be performed well and nobly by our people.

There is too much at stake to do otherwise. That we shall become the serfs of German government, to be ruled by the Kaiser, is too horrible a thought to be indulged in. Better, far better, to be blotted out as a race and a Nation and become only a name and a memory in the history of the world.

"Woe to the conquered" has always been the motto of the Prussian. Rapine, murder, and pillage blacken the annals of every campaign. Bloodthirstiness and lust and a mania for destruction are Prussian characteristics. They have written a record of infamy that can never be blotted out. Every humane heart in the wide world has been made to bleed by their atrocities and barbarism.

In the public forum, the pulpit, and the schoolroom the most pernicious, the foulest, doctrines have been announced. The people of that country have been taught most horrible precepts. They have been taught the "law of the jungle," of the lion and the tiger and the wolf; that might makes right; that war alone can bring true honor and glory; that "man is stunted by peaceful days"; that the Germans are the chosen people of God and that nothing, no matter how frightful or hideous or ghastly, should prevent them from overrunning the entire world.

One of them said:

Ye have heard men say, "Blessed are the peacemakers"; but I say unto you, "Blessed are the war makers," for they shall be called, if not the children of Jahve, the children of Odin, who is greater than Jahve.

Neitzsche, one of their greatest writers, said:

Life is essentially the appropriation, the injury, the subduing of the alien and weak. It is suppression, compulsion, the enforcing of its own forms. It is assimilation and, at the least and gentlest, exploitation.

The weak and crippled should go to the wall; that is the first principle of our philanthropy.

Do I counsel you to love your neighbor? Nay, I counsel you rather to shun your neighbor and to love those farthest away.

This great teacher of his people said, in discussing the doctrine of Jesus Christ enjoining brotherly love:

Believe me, my brethren, He died too early; He himself would have revoked His doctrine had He reached mine age—about 38 years.

They have been taught to harden themselves, so far as other people are concerned, against feelings of brotherhood, of compassion, of mercy and charity, and that war is necessary and normal, and that peace is a disease that insidiously saps the life of a nation, robbing it of honor, strength, and beauty.

They look upon the whole world as theirs to take if they desire it. Less than one year ago one of their statesmen said:

The whole history of the world is neither more nor less than a preparation for the time when it shall please God to allow the affairs of the universe to be in German hands.

Bismarck contemptuously referred to the United States as "a big, fat hog that we will stick some day." Germany has always objected to the Monroe doctrine and has felt aggrieved at us for it. During the Spanish-American War the Kaiser expressed himself as regretting that his Navy was not large enough to enable him to "take the United States by the scruff of the neck."

Mr. Chairman, it is unnecessary to multiply citations to prove the character of our enemy nor to show his feeling toward and his designs upon us. Hundreds of instances might be given.

We have been taught to love peace and abhor war. We regret deeply that our Nation is at war; but being in it, there is only one thing to do—give a good account of ourselves in it, with a firm and steady purpose that never while there is a man left to fight nor a dollar left to spend shall this cruel, barbarous enemy be able to say that our Nation has been conquered.

My sympathies from the very beginning of this war have been with the allies. The invasion of Belgium, the raping of women, the mutilation of children, the murder of old men, the horrible orgy of frightfulness inaugurated in the very beginning of the war prevented me from having the slightest feeling of sympathy with Germany.

Of course, since our entrance into the war every true American citizen, no matter on what side his sympathies may have been prior to that time, is wholeheartedly on the side of his country now. Every time the true American sees the Nation's flag he sees not merely a piece of cloth waving in the breeze, but he sees behind it his family and friends, his country's honor, and all that country can mean to a patriotic, liberty-loving man.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a tribute to the flag that is worthy of a place in the RECORD:

A TOAST TO THE FLAG.

Here's to the Red of it—
There's not a thread of it,
No; nor a shred of it
In all the spread of it,
From foot to head,
But heroes bled for it,
Faced steel and lead for it,
Precious blood shed for it,
Bathing it red.

Here's to the White of it—
Thrilled by the sight of it,
Who knows the right of it
But feels the might of it
Through day and night?
Womanhood's care for it
Made manhood dare for it;
Purity's prayer for it
Kept it so white.

Here's to the Blue of it—
Heavenly view of it,
Star-spangled hue of it,
Honesty's hue of it,
Constant and true.
Here's to the whole of it,
Stars, stripes, and pole of it;
Here's to the soul of it—
Red, White, and Blue.

—New Britain (Conn.) Herald.

In defense of that flag which symbolizes to us all life and liberty, home and country, honor and civilization, we will defend ourselves. Every true man will do his duty. All the responsibility does not rest upon the soldiers. Those in civil life must do their part. Not only must they pay taxes, buy bonds, subscribe to the Red Cross, but each one, man, woman, and child, has the duty of extending his cooperation toward putting in force the full power of the United States in its fight against Germany.

Let us do all the work that we can; let us pray that peace may come; let us make peace come by using every energy, every power, every resource in the Nation that will contribute to bring us victory. The war will be won. The greater the effort we put forth now, the sooner will be the end. Let us hasten the day of peace and victory by giving everything that is needed now. And let us hope that, at the end of this war, there shall come a more perfect peace, a firmer happiness, and a more splendid civilization than the world, in all its history, has ever known. [Applause.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDOW].

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HARRISON of Virginia). The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WALDOW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am in favor of this bill, although I voted against the adoption of the rule to bring it in, believing that three hours' time was not sufficient to enable the Members to discuss it.

I desire to make a few observations relative to the Food Administrator and some of the rules and regulations the people of the country are now subject to. These observations are made with a spirit of friendliness toward our Food Administrator, Mr. Hoover, and I hope some good may result therefrom. I understand that at the present time the people of this country are consuming but 35 per cent of our normal consumption of wheat flour, and I do not hesitate to submit the opinion that without regulations wheat flour would be selling to-day at three times its present price, and I know that the people of this country are ready to sacrifice and are willing to assist in the saving of all foods so as to enable us to assist in supplying our allies and our armies now fighting in France.

I submit, however, that if it is necessary for the people of the United States to continue to use substitutes and to continue to conserve our supply of wheat flour a better method than the one now in vogue would be to ration wheat to each person and then allow them to purchase other substitutes if they desire, and the kind of substitutes they desire. The present method compels the purchaser of a sack of flour to purchase many packages of substitutes, some of which he is unable to use, and in consequence the money paid for the substitutes and the substitutes themselves are wasted.

I notice in one of the local papers that the Food Administrator informed the retailers that they must sell cereals from 10 to 20 per cent less than wheat flour, but the compulsory purchasing of these cereals have made such a heavy demand upon the stock of the retailers that most of them cost the consumer a greater amount than wheat flour, and in many cases the consumer finds it impossible to secure the desired cereals he can use and is forced to purchase foodstuffs that are of no value to him. I have in mind a grocer's bill that a friend of mine submitted to me several weeks ago. He desired to purchase a sack of flour that cost $1.65. In order to do so he was compelled to purchase the following:

6 packages puffed corn	.90
6 packages puffed wheat	.90
3 packages puffed rice	.60
4 packages cornstarch	.48
4 packages oatmeal	.60
5 pounds corn meal	.35

Making a total purchase of $5.58. This man is working for a daily wage of $2.70, and he was forced to labor two days in order to secure enough money to buy a small sack of flour.

It seems to me that if this man and his family were allowed to purchase a sack of flour once a week or once a month, whatever his ration might be, and then permit him to use the balance of his money to purchase whatever edibles he desires, he would be undergoing less hardship and thousands of packages of cereals that are now being wasted would be conserved, and that, of course, would have a tendency to automatically lower the price of cereals.

I have had considerable complaint from the people I represent, as my district is in close proximity to Canada, and I have been informed upon numerous occasions that the residents of Canada have little difficulty in securing flour and sugar, and there is no compulsion by the food administrator of Canada for the purchase of substitutes when purchasing flour, and I understand they have little or no trouble in securing sugar in large quantities, while the people in my district are compelled to purchase it 1 pound at a time and very often are unable to secure even that small amount. If we intend to continue the conservation of wheat and sugar and other foods, I believe it will be necessary for a coordination in the activities of the Food Administrator of the United States and the food administrator of the Dominion of Canada.

I sincerely hope that Mr. Hoover will make some effort to create conditions more equal than those now existing in certain parts of the Dominion of Canada and the United States. The civilian population of both of these countries, I believe, are willing to assist in the conservation of all foods so as to enable our armies to have not only an abundance of food but the very best that can be obtained. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield one additional minute to the gentleman.

Mr. BAER. Can the gentleman explain why England and Ireland have got flour for $8 a barrel, made of American wheat, and over here we pay $14 and $15 a barrel for it?

Mr. WALDOW. I have just suggested that a closer coordination of the activities of the two food administrators might help the condition, but I do not know the reason for it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to myself.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 11945, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called under the rule and 278 Members answered to their names, and he presented a list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill in its present form, and opposed to many of its features in any form, particularly opposed to the very large sums which some of these items carry, put into the bill and attempted to be put through the House under the guise of a war measure.

I am a member of the committee that reported the bill, and the committee gave very careful consideration to it. A minority of the members urged very strongly the elimination of some of the provisions and a reduction of many of the amounts. There was some success attending their effort, but the bill as reported carries objectionable features and some amounts that are very much too high. I said an attempt is made to put the bill through the House under the guise of a war measure, and of that I have no doubt, nor has any member of the committee, although I should, I presume, speak only for myself and others who oppose the bill in its present form and as to sums that we think are extravagant.

Many of the departments of the Government are getting large amounts of money, large beyond comprehension, to be used in preparing for and carrying on the war, granted by Congress without question. Other departments, and the Department of Agriculture is one of them, seeing large sums of money appropriated for and made available for use of other departments, are asking large appropriations for themselves. Some of the bureaus in the Department of Agriculture, seeing other bureaus getting large sums of money, some of them properly, are demanding large sums and large increases for themselves. Of that there can be no doubt. Some of the work that is provided for in this bill is important and necessary work. Much of it, however, is provided for in the regular appropriation bill, and the appropriation of larger amounts is unnecessary and improper and a wasteful use of money. I am, and during my entire service have been, much interested in the work of the Department of Agriculture, and have favored liberal appropriations, and at this time there are certain lines of work that must be extended and improved; but appropriations ought not to be extravagant simply because the Congress during the war is dealing in large sums of money and is making previously unheard-of appropriations. On the contrary, that is reason for economy and retrenchment when economy can be properly exercised.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I notice that the appropriations contained in this bill are largely lump sums.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I wish to speak of that later; that is one of the things I shall speak of if I have time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We do not know from the bill what the money is going to be spent for.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Some of this work is going to be done by bureaus largely as extension of their regular work, and as to some of their work, while the heads of these bureaus were before our committee and talking about their work, how it was done, why it was not extended—I mean during normal times—the reply was that it could not be extended for lack of men, on account of the difficulty of finding suitable men, but now, upon their insistent demand, the majority of the committee, as appears by this bill, proposes to provide immense sums of money for the employment of additional men and for the extension of the work of these bureaus two, three, four, five, and as high as seven times over normal years.

An examination of the bill and comparison with former bills will prove what I say to be true.

The Department of Agriculture is employing a large number of young men who are of draft age and subject to military service. The records of the department show that already the Secretary of Agriculture has certified more than 2,000 of these young men for deferred classification under the draft law. I shall at the proper time offer an amendment, which, if agreed to, will not permit employment of men of draft age or will make it impossible to certify men employed under this law for deferred classification. I might go on and particularize, Mr. Chairman, and point out the different provisions of the bill where men are asked for, and money for salaries and expenses are asked for extension of work that was carried on to the limit before the war began, carried on to the limit because of the difficulty of getting trained, suitable men to do the work. But my time is limited and I shall speak of the feature of the bill referred to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I understood the gentleman to say that there was a substantial number of the committee who were opposed to the bill as it stands. There is no minority report, is there?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No minority report.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I observe that the majority report contains these words:

> After very careful consideration of all the various items, the bill herewith presented represents the judgment of the committee as to the provision that should be made for the emergency activities of the department during the next fiscal year.

Will the members of the committee who agree with the gentleman offer amendments as the items are reached reducing the amounts?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; some amendments will be offered.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So that the statement in the report then is misleading, in fact, as to the committee being united.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The report is accurate to the extent that it represents the action of the committee, a majority of the committee. Of course, it says nothing about the strenuous fight that was made, the most vigorous fight I know of being made in the Committee on Agriculture during the last 12 years.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will say to the gentleman that the bill was reported——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman will pardon me, but I do not like to yield for a statement. I thought he wished to ask a question. The gentleman has plenty of time at his disposal.

Mr. GILLETT. In addition to what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] says, would it not be impossible on the floor to offer amendments segregating these lump sums? You could not do that very well on the floor.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think amendments can be made segregating them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me again, the only reason I ask the question is that it seems to me if such a vigorous fight had been made and there was such objection to certain features of the bill, it was due to the House that it be made acquainted with some of these questions before the bill came up for consideration.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Perhaps that is true. Perhaps the minority of the committee should have made a report; but of course no one, none of the minority at least, had any idea that the bill would be presented in this form. We thought it would be itemized, as bills usually are, and as this House has always insistently demanded appropriation bills shall be itemized. These are lump sums, gathering together a lot of items, and it is hard to tell how they are gathered together to make the total carried in the items in the bill.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Was not the bill reported upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. RUBEY? He moved that the bill be favorably reported, and that it be reported in the form in which the food-production act was reported before, and this is in identically that form, and that motion was unanimously carried. There was not a vote against it at the time in committee.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that I was not present at the very last meeting, the meeting at which that action was taken. If it was taken, as the gentleman states, as I presume, of course, it was, the committee at its last meeting had reached a part of the bill where it seemed there was not much opportunity for reduction and others who had opposed it, just as I had, were tired of objecting without prospect of eliminating improper features or of reducing extravagant sums.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he had no idea that the bill would be presented in this form?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I had no idea it would be presented in this form.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Because in this form it is impossible for a Member of the House who has not been through the hearings to get any idea of how the items are made up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, of course this bill is going to pass. I have no doubt about that, but it ought not to pass. It ought to be defeated. There is no necessity for the legislation. It will not accomplish anything except add 11,000 additional men to the pay roll. What they will have to do after they get on the pay roll I do not know, but I am beginning to get pretty tired of appropriating millions of dollars in lump sums to add more men to the pay roll, without any specific duties to perform, and it is about time we were saying so. Of course, those who are going to have the men placed on the pay roll are enthusiastic for the legislation. It is proposed, or pretended to be proposed, to increase crops, to add to the output on the farms. Last year was the worst farm-crop year we have had in many years. If the present indications are followed to a logical conclusion, we will have the largest farm crop this year that we have ever had in the United States, and after we have supplied our own needs and the needs of the allies, we will have over 200,000,000 bushels of wheat that we will not know what to do with, for which we have no storage facilities. They are proposing now to build storage warehouses to take care of the surplus wheat that it is anticipated will be on the market in a very short time. There are over 200,000,000 bushels of wheat in Australia on the ground that is being rotted and eaten by rats, for lack of transportation facilities. It is not long since that the Agricultural Department or the Hoover department wanted to build warehouses to take care of potatoes in order that we might have potatoes to feed to the people when the time came, and men who had common sense told them that the only way to take care of potatoes was to let the farmer do it, to put them into storage on ;e farm, under the ground, and feed them out to the people as they were needed. But that is not what these men do who are at the heads of these departments. They do not use their heads, they use the Treasury of the United States. How much more convenient it is to have a lot of money in the Treasury of the United States where these fellows can shove their arms up to their elbows, than it is to exert the brains they are supposed to have when they are appointed to these important places. There is a greater crop of wheat growing to-day than we have ever had in the United States. The estimated return for the wheat crop this year is over 900,000,000 bushels. Last year it was less than 600,000,000 bushels, about 550,000,000 bushels. The Agricultural Department estimated 680,000,000 bushels. When a friend of mine who happens to know what crops are in the country was asked how much stock he took in the Government's crop reports, he said they were not worth the paper they are written on, that they overestimate and underestimate and do not estimate at all, but make figures, without respect to whether there is any definite justification for them or not. So, in order that we may have plenty of men to make figures, which they want to make, they add $6,000,000 to this bill to hire new men to go throughout the country to demonstrate the best methods of raising crops.

Why, the best method of raising of crops is through the tilling of the soil by the ordinary average farmer, who knows more about it than anybody else and who will continue to raise crops as long as he can get a price for the products which he raises. All you have got to do is to show him that there is something in it for him, he will do the rest. [Applause.] You do not have to hire some shoemaker or corn doctor to go on a farm and demonstrate to a farmer the need for raising crops, he knows how to do that himself. How can you get these men with all this agricultural intelligence this bill proposes——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. In a moment—for $6,100,000? You will probably take men who ought to be in the Army. These men are going to be taken out of the Army, made slackers——

Mr. DENISON. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. MADDEN. In a moment—in order to have a peaceful and easy job at a safe distance away from the guns and on the Government pay roll to instruct people who are already full of knowledge of how best to raise crops. Why, it is ridiculous. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. DENISON. Does not my colleague think there ought to be a provision in here that men employed by this act ought not to be put in the deferred classification?

Mr. MADDEN. There ought not to be any man put on this pay roll who is subject to Army service. There ought to be nobody put on who has no experience, either collegiate or otherwise, in agricultural matters.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did I understand the gentleman to say item 4, carrying $6,100,000, was only for increases of salaries?

Mr. MADDEN. Why, it is only for increased places; I do not know whether they increase salaries or not, but they just add new places, I take it, with this money. What else is it for?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Simply additional places?

Mr. MADDEN. What else could it be for?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know.

Mr. MADDEN. Every time anybody under Mr. Hoover gets authority to increase his activities, of course, the Agricultural Department wants to duplicate that. They want to increase theirs just like in the Army and Navy; if you increase the rank of a man in the Army, the man of the same rank in the Navy wants to have his rank increased. So with other departments of the Government they are competing with each other and seeing how much money they can take out of the Treasury and how much they can load as an additional burden on the backs of the taxpayers.

Oh, this is a beautiful record you are making; it will come back to plague you one of these days. But we are in war, and they say this is a war measure and an emergency measure. Yes; I suppose they do need a few more places for which there is an emergency for which otherwise no emergency exists. Why, here you are trying to compete with the Secretary of Labor. The Secretary of Labor was authorized to establish employment agencies in order that we might get labor for the farms. He has established those employment agencies. He was authorized to send men to the farms and pay their railroad fares. Now, what do we find? We find the Secretary of Agriculture wants to do that job, too. Which one of these men will do it? Will either of them do it, or will there be such a conflict of authority that neither will do it? What men can they get for the farm that will amount to anything? You can not put a dude on the farm and make him know anything about farming. You can not take a fellow off the street who is a loafer and send him to the farm and make him worth anything to the farmer. These bills do not accomplish anything in connection with increasing farm products, except if you call it accomplishing something when you are farming the Treasury of the United States. You are developing a good crop of expenses, and you are not afraid to sow the seed which will yield new jobs to the faithful.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Another emergency my friend forgot to mention is some of the employees want to get out of the draft very badly.

Mr. MADDEN. I said that. I said that the purpose of this legislation is, in a large measure, to take men away from military service and give them nice hiding places away from the thunder of the guns. They do not want to hear the noise or be disturbed by anything but bird notes. They do not want to hear the peltering of shots flying from the guns on the French front. I have all of my blood kindred who are able to fight on the west front in France, and I am proud to say so, and so are they. [Applause.] I do not want any money taken out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of protecting slackers in their efforts to keep away from the dangers when the rest of our people are fighting for the honor of America.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman think the gentleman in charge of the bill would object to an amendment providing that none of this money should be expended for the employment of men within the draft age?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know whether he would object, but let us try and see.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Does not the gentleman understand it is important we shall have a few Federal employees to aid in making the country safe for Democratic candidates toward the ides of November?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, it is natural that that should be true, and if you confine it to a few I would not object; but when you make a war emergency the means, an excuse for adding millions of dollars to the payment of loafers who have no knowledge of the duties they are employed to perform, I am opposed to it. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I voice practically everything which my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] says [applause on the Republican side], though I may vote for this bill. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Illinois says he will, too. I am a firm believer in the conservation of food. I think it is one of the essential necessities to our success in this war. I voted for the bill which passed Congress some time last year giving the Secretary of Agriculture power to take a census of the various food products of the United States.

I want to briefly touch upon that proposition at this time. It is within the power of the Government at the end of each month to locate exactly the amount of food commodities there are in the country, upon the farms, in the elevators, in the warehouses, the cold-storage houses, or wherever it may be. We have forty-three thousand and some odd rural-route carriers in this country who reach practically 90 per cent of all the rural districts where food is actually produced. If I recall correctly, we have something like 8,000 star-route carriers in this country performing substantially the same, identical service that a rural-route carrier performs, inasmuch as they reach the farmers and put the farmers' mail in the box.

Now, my ideas may not be sound; they may be illogical; but it has occurred to me time and time again that if the Agricultural Department or the Bureau of Census, working through the Agricultural Department, would prepare a little card and place these cards in the hands of postmasters at the offices where the rural routes originate, and have the route carriers deposit those cards in the farmers' boxes, calling upon the farmer to state how many bushels of wheat, rye, and oats that he thrashed, and the number of tons of hay and the number of bushels of potatoes and corn that he raised, and how many head of live stock he has upon the farm, that that would be a complete scientific census of the foodstuffs and supplies on hand in this country, and easily available, without any extra cost or charge whatever. [Applause.] And those cards should be frankable, so that the farmer would not be at any trouble or expense in sending them back to the Department of Agriculture.

That would give that department the point of view as to the food produced in the country and the supplies that are actually on hand. It would be able to locate where the food commodities were, and by that means they could easily trace the sum total of the amount of grain or other commodities at the warehouses or storage plants, and so forth. Believing that, I am unable to see why we should spend millions upon millions of dollars in taking a food survey of the country, when we already have the organization, working six days out of every week, and reaching probably 95 or 98 per cent of the men in this country who actually produce food. But for some reason or other—I do not know why—the Agricultural Department has not seen fit to adopt it, unless it be, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said, they desire to make places for a large number of employees, traveling over this country and trying to tell men, men of practical experience, how to farm. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. FESS. As I remember, the gentleman urged this method of getting this very data when the Agricultural bill was up.

Mr. COX. I did.

We are soon to have a census bill in the midst of this war. I had occasion a few years ago to look up the way other nations took their census. I found that some of the European Governments took their census through their mail facilities. We are about to spend many millions for the purpose of taking a census, when by utilization of the mail facilities we could cut it out and save the money, so much needed, to prosecute the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX. I may vote for this bill, but it will mean the stacking up of jobs here; and that is all it is. In my judgment, it will not produce an extra bushel of wheat or an extra bushel of corn or raise an extra pound of pork. I think the time has come—although I recognize that a man almost takes his political life in his hands to get up on the floor here and say anything against appropriations; we have got to accept it——

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman does not have to vote for this bill if he does not wish to do so.

Mr. COX. I know I do not. I will exercise my spirit of independence when my name is called. But I do think the time has come when we ought to cut these appropriations to the very marrow, unless it be an appropriation designed exclusively for the Army or the Navy.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How can we cut appropriations when they are brought in here in a lump sum, so that we do not know how the money is to be spent or what it is to be used for?

Mr. COX. I do not know about that. We might strike out some of the items.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Fourteen minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think it was Madame Roland who, agonized by the excesses of the French Revolution, exclaimed, "O Liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!" The time is coming, if it is not already here, when every good patriot will feel like exclaiming, "O Slogan of the winning of the war, what useless, senseless, wicked, wasteful extravagances are proposed in thy name!"

This bill has a compelling title: "To provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products." What patriot in these times of stress and war can vote against purposes thus expressed? And yet there is not a man on this floor, in my opinion, who in his heart of hearts believes that all or a large proportion of this $11,000,000 of appropriation will accomplish beyond question considerable results toward the winning of the war or largely increasing the agricultural products of the country. We do not know yet, although we would like to know, just what force of motive power is to be developed by the Liberty motor. We hope that it will be all and more than we expect of it, and we hope that it will develop its claimed 400 horsepower under the most trying and difficult circumstances and conditions. But however powerful it may prove to be, as an instrument of propulsion it will not be a circumstance to the compelling power of the $6,000,000 item contained in this bill. For what? For the purpose of employing busybodies to go around over the country and take the time of busy farmers and farmers' wives and tell them what they ought to do. It is not a far cry to November, and $6,000,000 will go a long way toward hiring folks to travel hither and yon throughout the country, making the land safe for Democratic candidates. That is to a large extent the compelling force behind this legislation, and it is well that some one should state it plainly.

I am going to vote for this bill if it is trimmed as I hope it will be trimmed, and as it ought to be trimmed, and not because I approve all of its items even as they are likely to be after some trimming, but because there are needed and useful activities provided for in the bill and because, having followed the policy of resolving every doubt in favor of the request of the administration's departments in their request for funds, I deem it my duty after having made every effort to perfect legislation and reduce appropriations clearly unnecessarily large to vote for the legislation and appropriations after getting them in the best form and amount possible. If the items in this bill which provide for agents, inspectors, investigators, and demonstrators are not reduced, and if the items which duplicate the activities of other bureaus are not stricken out on the amendments that will be offered, the fault will not rest on this side and you gentlemen on the Democratic side and the administration must take the blame. I shall vote for the bill in the best form we can get. The Agricultural Department has done good work. It will continue to do good work. But the Agricultural Department does not need any such funds as these in addition to its regular appropriations in order to do all that is necessary and all that can be wisely and properly done to stimulate the agricultural production of the country.

We have reached a point when every department of the Government comes before appropriating committees trying to get their share of the swag of war. That is what it amounts to. One department sees another augmenting its appropriation and extending its activities, and they just hanker, not to do something that is necessary, but to get "their share" of the big appropriations that are made even if they must occupy the same identical field of some other department or bureau. They want to "git" while the "gittin" is good. We have just completed a hearing in a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations where the representatives of the Department of Labor came before us and outlined an organization which has been carefully, completely, and, in my opinion, wisely perfected in that department for the purpose of supplying the industries and the agriculture of the country with labor. No doubt the story of that organization has come to the Department of Agriculture and they want half a million dollars to cover the same ground and for the same purpose.

The Department of Labor has and will have abundant funds for all necessary purposes in securing and distributing labor, including funds to advance where necessary to pay for transportation. They have a fine organization; they can cover the field without confusion or conflict of plan or purpose, but the Agricultural Department can not tolerate the idea of anybody having anything to do with farm labor but themselves.

The county farm agents are doing a fine work. I took occasion to refer to it approvingly quite recently on this floor. There are further activities along this and other lines we are taking up and may well pursue during the war, but the sums carried in this bill for these purposes are scandalous when we think that the taxpayers and bond buyers must furnish the money. It becomes almost criminal—these excessive sums in addition to the large regular appropriations—when we reflect that they are to pay for the personal services of an army of several thousand men who ought to be either on the firing line or engaged in productive enterprises.

These days, when we need farm help as we never did before, is no time to take men from production and possibly exempt them from the draft, as 2,000 of the employees of the Agriculture Department have been, and pay them the money we are supposed to be raising to carry on the war, to gad about, teaching farmers what they already know much better than the majority of these hurriedly selected instructors do. The whole scheme and plan is forced, overdone, and, to a large extent, ridiculous—from the brilliant plan to send patriots seeking bullet-proof jobs around to tell farmers' wives how to make cottage cheese to the almost inspired announced purpose of sending spies out to locate supplies of spuds. When will the Committee on Agriculture do its duty in protecting the country against Treasury raids of this sort?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CARAWAY). The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, it was not my intention to say a word in relation to this bill, but I do not believe that in the seven or nearly eight years in which I have been a Member of this House I have listened to as much misrepresentation as I have listened to within the last 15 or 20 minutes. Gentlemen have gotten up on the floor of this House and talked about this bill and made assertions concerning it that are absolutely incorrect, that are absolutely untrue, and why they do it I do not know, unless it be that they simply do not know any better, that they are not informed as to work of the Department of Agriculture under the provisions of this act.

This identical bill was passed by this very Congress a year ago. We provided for these appropriations for the purpose of stimulating agriculture from one end of this country to the other. That work is being done now. The men have been employed and they are now in the field.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. No; I can not yield in five minutes. Every one of those men has been employed under the regulations of the civil service, every one of them, and to-day they are in the employment of the Department of Agriculture under civil-service regulations.

The proposition here before us to-day is whether or not we shall continue this same work and permit those men who have been employed under the former bill to continue their work. The appropriations made under that bill expire on the 30th of June. The term of every man who is now in the field, who is now employed in the Department of Agriculture under the provisions of that bill, will expire on the 30th day of June.

This bill is to continue that work. If you thought a year ago that it was an important work to be done, if you passed the bill then and said to the people, "We are going to increase agriculture, we are going to promote agriculture in every line from one end of the country to the other," and if you voted for it then do you want to stop that work or do you want to continue that work?

Much has been said here about these men being exempt from military service. In the Department of Agriculture there are, including the men employed under this act, something like 22,000 men. Before the war began we had between sixteen and seventeen thousand men in the service of the Department of Agriculture. There have now been placed in deferred classes, upon the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, as men especially qualified for agricultural work, about 2,000 men, and no other man in the Department of Agriculture within the limits of 21 to 31 years of age has been in any way exempted from the call to arms.

These men who are now in the field, except those 2,000 that I have mentioned, who are within the age limit, are within the call and are not exempted. And even these men were not exempted; they were simply put in a deferred class. The Secretary of Agriculture puts these men, or rather he recommends that they be put, in a deferred class, and then it is up to the local boards to say, after examining into the conditions surrounding them, whether or not the request of the Secretary of Agriculture shall be granted. It is up to the local boards to determine that question on the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, and they can put them in a deferred class if they want to or they can refuse to put them in a deferred class.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. No; I must decline to yield. I have only six minutes.

Much has been said about the large number of men running around through the country, and about the expenditure of this $6,000,000 appropriation that we recommend. Some years ago we passed the Smith-Lever bill; I prefer to call it the Lever bill. [Applause.] Practically every man then in this House voted for that bill, to put farm demonstrators at work in all parts of the country. In that bill it was provided that the appropriation be increased year by year until, by and by, we would get enough money, in cooperation with the States, to put a county agent of high character in every county in the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. RUBEY. When this war broke out we decided that we would not wait for that, but we would put a farm demonstrator in every county in the United States. This $6,000,000 is to accomplish that purpose, to place a farm demonstrator in every county in the State of Illinois, whence comes the gentleman who spoke a moment ago against this bill. These men are going to be placed in every county in Illinois and in every county in every other State of the Union for farm-demonstration work.

If this bill is so bad as gentlemen have stated who have spoken against it this afternoon, why do they not vote against it? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for four minutes. The gentleman does not seem to be present.

Mr. HAUGEN. He has temporarily stepped out.

Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to call the gentleman's attention to the number of people proposed to be employed outside of the classified service. I desire to say that on page 35 the gentleman will find that 3,707 are suggested in the extension work in the Northern and Western States and 2,110 in the Southern States. Those together would make 5,817 who are outside of the classified service.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. In just a minute. I call the gentleman's attention to the 2,938 county agents, every one of them outside of the classified service. That makes the number 8,755, and yet the gentleman gets up here before this House and says that misrepresentation has been made. There are at least 8,000 of those outside the classified service. I have not had time to go over the list carefully, but I think I can find a thousand or two more. According to the estimates of the department, in all, 11,907 would be employed.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman knows how those farm demonstrators are appointed. He knows how they are appointed by the States themselves.

Mr. HAUGEN. They are outside the classified service.

Mr. RUBEY. I understand that, but in those cases they are not appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture. All of those appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture are in the classified service, appointed under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. HAUGEN. They do not come in under the civil-service examinations by any means.

Mr. RUBEY. Those appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; but these are not appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. RUBEY. They are appointed by the State authorities.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am speaking of the number of people outside the classified service.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, is the time exhausted on the other side?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is not there more than one county agent in each county?

Mr. HAUGEN. There are 5,400 of them, about two to a county, and it is proposed to increase the number.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is there any necessity for having two to each county?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is what the bill calls for. For the information of the House, let me give the gentleman the number. The total number estimated is 11,907. Under the same bill a year ago there were 6,280. The total increase over 1918 is 5,627. The total number estimated for 1919 was temporary 690, permanent 11,309. The total number employed in the department is about 20,000, and in the extension and demonstration field service from 5,500 to 6,000 people.

Mr. MONDELL. And none of these people are under the civil service?

Mr. HAUGEN. Not in the extension service or the county agents estimating crops, and there are 8,000 of them.

Mr. MONDELL. Then the gentleman from Missouri was mistaken.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman from Missouri was not mistaken; the gentleman from Missouri stated that the men appointed under this bill by the Secretary of Agriculture are under the civil service. These other gentlemen that the gentleman from Iowa is talking about are men in the service appointed by the various States upon their recommendation alone.

Mr. HAUGEN. The majority of the people provided for in this bill are appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and every one of them outside of the classified service. Besides there are others appointed without examination as provided for by the civil-service laws.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining to this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I fully agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] a moment ago that I have never in my service seen a bill on the floor of this House—and I have been here a longer time than the gentleman from Missouri—that has been so persistently and energetically misrepresented as the bill now before us. The gentlemen who have made these statements evidently have not read the bill and evidently do not know its provisions or they certainly would not make the broadside statements of condemnation which they do make, which are totally at variance with the provisions of the bill or anything authorized in the bill.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] in his speech the other day, which I have read in the RECORD, stated that I admitted on the floor of the House that we provided for 11,000 additional employees outside of the civil service. I did not make that admission; I do not make it now, because that is not in accordance with the information I have and I am sure is incorrect.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman desires to be fair, I know. Will he yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes. I not only want to be fair, but I will be fair.

Mr. HAUGEN. I said that practically all of them were outside of the classified service.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. What I am complaining about is the statement in the gentleman's speech that I admitted the proposition, which I did not. The question was asked me by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and I disagreed with him. I not only did not admit it, but I denied it at the time and deny it now.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman will admit that there are 8,000 outside the classified service.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. No; I will not. The Lever bill provided for the appointment of many of those men. It passed a number of years ago, practically by unanimous consent on the floor of this House. Nobody objected to it, and it provided for the appointment of these men throughout the country, and it provides the manner in which they shall be appointed and the manner of their appointment is not changed in this bill or any other; they are continued to be appointed under that bill up to the present time.

There are employed in the Department of Agriculture 22,683 people. Of this number 15,679 are employed under the regular appropriations of the agricultural bill. There are 4,508 people employed under the cooperative plan. Under the legislation of Congress, the people employed under the cooperative plan are permitted to be selected by the local communities in which they live. They are selected by the counties, by the municipalities, or by the boards of supervisors, or by the county boards of administration, and they pay a part of their salaries and the Government pays a part and therefore it is impossible for them to be placed under the civil service. In deed and in truth they are not strictly speaking employees of the Department of Agriculture or employees of the Government of the United States, but they are cooperative employees on the part of the Government of the United States and the local communities in which they perform the services in which they are engaged. Therefore 4,508 people employed in that way are not under the civil service. But every employee in the Department of Agriculture that is appointed as an employee of the department under the provisions of this bill and the last bill that passed, which was just like this, and under the annual appropriation bill, are under the civil service and will remain under the civil service.

Gentlemen have tried to bring in propositions about the draft. They have said that this bill is an effort to keep people out of the war. I did not know there was any political matter in this bill. If they want to make that charge let them make it and be responsible for it. But the man who makes the charge charges the Secretary of Agriculture and the officials of the Agricultural Department with willfully making an effort to keep people out of the war by putting them in bomb-proof positions and shielding them from going forth to fight the battles of their country. I would not make that statement anywhere, and I would certainly not make it on the floor of this House, because I do not believe the statement is true. I do not believe the Secretary of Agriculture or any official of the Department of Agriculture or any official of this Government is guilty of anything of that kind. They are as loyal and patriotic as you are and have no more desire to keep people out of the Army than you have.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I have not the time; I have but a few minutes. There has been, as was stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], about 2,000 scientists, experts, and specially qualified and useful men in the department who have been put in the deferred classes, upon the certification of the Secretary of Agriculture, by the local boards. All of them have not been even placed in deferred classes by the local boards. A young gentleman came into my office the other day who had been certified. The local board refused to exempt him or place him in a deferred class. He wanted me to try to help him out. I told him the local boards had absolute authority in the matter, and that the Secretary of Agriculture or the Department of Agriculture or any other department could merely furnish the certificate or the evidence on which to act, but that the local boards are the ones who pass upon it, and that if they had denied him exemption he would have to shoulder a gun and go to the front. He smiled like a good American and went out of my office, and went into the training camp where he had been ordered to go. Therefore it will be very readily seen that they have not all been put in deferred classes; but those have been deferred who have been necessary for carrying on the work of the Government, and you will practically destroy the Agricultural Department if you take the people out of there whom the Secretary said were absolutely necessary and who, because of their qualifications, were required to remain there in order to continue this work. Twelve or fifteen hundred have been taken out of the Department of Agriculture and have gone under the draft into the Army. All of these people outside, who are in the service away from here, who are subject to the draft, must go before the local board, and if they can not furnish justification within the provisions of the law as passed by Congress, they will be denied exemption or deferred classification and will have to shoulder a gun like the rest of the boys, and ought to do so. [Applause.]

There has been a great deal of talk about this money going for the employment of additional employees in the department simply to do political work throughout the country, to build up the Democratic cause. There is no foundation in fact for any such statement. No unnecessary employees will be employed. The Department of Agriculture does not play politics and no such statement ought to be made. There were some additional employees required. They have been employed under the provision of the former bill, 7,004 people. Because there is necessity to employ additional men is no reason why the provisions of this bill are not good. You need men to do work. You can not do work without men. You can not cultivate a farm unless you provide men on the farm. If you have 100 acres it will take so many men, and if you have 500 acres you will have to have so many more men. The United States is simply a great farm, under the supervision of the Agricultural Department, in which we are producing products to feed our Army and our own people and to sustain our allies. Do you not want to help do that? If so, quit criticizing and obstructing this bill, for that is its sole purpose, and when it becomes law it will secure that result. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," approved August 10, 1917 (40 Stats., p. 273), there is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums for the purposes indicated.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, at the end of line 2, add the following:

culture or by any other official of the Department of Agriculture for deferred classification, or by action of any other Federal official or authority has been or may hereafter be placed in a deferred class under act No. 12, Sixty-fifth Congress, entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917, or under any act amendatory thereof that has been or shall hereafter be enacted."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been referred to, and I gather from what has been said on both sides of the Chamber there will be little opposition to the amendment. As has been stated, the Secretary of Agriculture has himself certified for deferred classification more than 2,000 of the young men employed in one capacity and another in the Department of Agriculture, and no one knows how many of the young men throughout the country employed in the kind of work provided for in this bill or engaged in other work for the Department of Agriculture have been placed in deferred classes by local or district boards on account of such employment, and so classified without the knowledge of the Secretary. This amendment is designed to remove from all of the young men of the country the opportunity of entering the service of the Department of Agriculture under the provisions of this act and thereby having or giving reason for deferred classification under the draft law. It seems to me there ought to be no objection to this amendment. The draft act, as it is called, authorizes the exemption of men on account of employment in certain of the industries of the country, including agriculture. The words "including agriculture" were added to the bill while it was under consideration on the floor on the motion of the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. It was supposed that some attention would be paid to that provision, and for a time there was as far as it related to farm labor; but it is learned now that few, if any, of the young men of the country actually employed on farms and needed there are excused from a place in class 1 on account of their employment; and the boards throughout the country are becoming more and more strict and are refusing to grant deferred classification to farm laborers. That is, men who are actually employed on farms are denied deferred classification.

They are refused the privilege which the draft act was intended to give them. Thus men on the farms, real farmers, are taken from the farms and put into the Army, while young men just like them, who get jobs with the Secretary of Agriculture to go out and try to tell farmers how to farm, will on their own application or by action of the Secretary be placed in a deferred class and be able to draw good salaries and escape military service; that is, they will if my amendment is not adopted.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I can not now. Under this bill, without amendment, and in the Department of Agriculture thousands and thousands of young men are employed and will be employed and opportunity will be given for them to plead that employment in order to receive a deferred classification. It ought to be impossible. But this bill is necessary, much of it, although, as I have said when speaking a few minutes ago, much money is asked for simply because other departments are getting it. It is a grab, and many men will be employed. It will be easy enough to get men beyond the draft age, men who are exempt from military service on account of age or for disability. They ought to be employed. There is need of soldiers. We ought not to take 2,000, as we have—and perhaps 2,000 more if this bill shall become law—and give them a chance, practically invite them, to evade military service. The gentleman from Missouri says only scientists have been exempted. Two thousand scientists! Everybody knows there are not 2,000 scientists in the department unless we adopt the definition of a scientist sometimes given, "a man who discovers something that everybody knew before and writes about it in language that nobody can understand." [Laughter and applause.] Here is an opportunity for the employment of some 6,000 men more than are now employed. It seems to me it would be only proper, plain justice to require them to be taken from a class of men not subject to military service. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted for the primary reason that this is certainly not the place to enact law in reference to the draft. If the provisions suggested by the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan are proper provisions and ought to be placed in the law, then he should introduce a bill to that effect, and have it referred to the proper committee of this House, which is the Committee on Military Affairs, because that committee is absolutely conversant with what the law now is and could sift it out and determine after a full investigation of it as to whether or not it is such an amendment as should be placed in the draft law governing the selection of those to enter the Army.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. I judge from what the gentleman is now saying that he is not as anxious to have the slacker excluded from this force as he seemed to be a few moments ago when defending the bill.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. If the gentleman intimates I am in favor of having slackers exempted, he misrepresents me.

Mr. MONDELL. Why does the gentleman object to an amendment which will make that impossible?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I object to this amendment because it ought not to be placed in a bill of this character that has nothing on earth to do with the selection of soldiers and nothing on earth to do with the organization of the Army, but it ought to be passed, if passed at all, by regular process of legislation, coming from the committee which ought to consider it, and consider it in connection with the law as it stands to-day. Now, I can not yield further. I think it would be a dangerous thing, Mr. Chairman, to attempt upon the floor of the House, simply upon an amendment introduced without consideration by a committee and without time to know exactly the full force and effect of the language that is contained in the amendment offered, to adopt it.

It is not only amending the fundamental law under which the Army has been selected up to the present time, but under which it is proposed to select the remainder of the Army which shall be called in the future. I could not tell, and I doubt whether the gentleman from Michigan himself could tell, exactly how far this amendment would go or exactly to what extent it might be applied when construed in its full force and effect, because it is impossible, unless you have the other law before you, to see exactly the words in the law that it would strike out or what language it would modify or it would change, and you would have to know all that before it would be possible for you to know the effect of this amendment. Therefore I say it would be a very dangerous proposition to undertake upon such an amendment and without consideration and without investigation and without full knowledge of all the legislation as it exists at the present time to amend it in this way. Now, the gentleman says we need soldiers. Yes; we need them, and they are going from all over the country, and they will continue to go under the law as it is to-day. There are plenty of them going courageously to fight for their flag and for their country and resent the insults which have been offered to it, thereby proving themselves genuine patriots. The patriotism of this country is not to be questioned anywhere. There may be a few possible exceptions of disloyalty, but they are rare and few, indeed, and becoming more so, and, as the gentleman said a moment ago, the local exemption boards are becoming more careful than they were in the past, and they are not granting exemptions or deferred classifications at the present time in instances where they granted them at the outset. They will grow more strict as the days go by, because public opinion will grow more intense and patriotism grow to fever heat and will require that the man who secures exemption or deferred classification will have to come not only within the spirit but within the letter of the law before he can be granted any full or partial exemption. That being the case, I think it is best to leave the law as it is and not amend it in a manner in which you could not know what the effect of the amendment would be.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What probable effect can this amendment have upon the draft law, which simply provides that salaries should not be paid to men subject to the draft? It does not amend the law in any respect.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It does amend it, because it says that nobody shall be employed or put in deferred classes or exempted. If the amendment does not change the existing law what is the necessity to adopt it? They are not exempt now upon the certificate of the Secretary of Agriculture unless exemption or deferred classification is granted by the exemption board. This would amend the draft law, and this is no place to amend it, on a bill which provides for the production of food and has nothing to do with the Army, except to produce food to feed the soldiers who are patriotically fighting for our country.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume the gentleman is acquainted with the amendments offered on several occasions by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] limiting appropriations, to the effect that they should not be used to employ persons to exempt them from the draft?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I would not have any objection to an amendment of that kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. This amendment is along the same line.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It may be along the same line, but it goes much further than that. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to say, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I understand the Provost Marshal General has just issued an order rescinding a previous order made by him, under which it was declared to be the policy of the Provost Marshal General's office in administering the draft, when men actually engaged in agricultural production in class 1 were reached in the regular call of the quota, to place those men at the foot of the quota instead of calling them immediately. That means that hundreds, perhaps thousands, of men who are actually engaged in agriculture, who have put in crops, will be taken from their farms, and those farms left idle and the operators sent to training camps. I do not know of any reason, when men actually engaged in farming, in the raising of crops, are taken from their farms, with resultant financial loss to them and a loss of food to the Government, and sent to training camps, why we should exempt men in the Department of Agriculture who are doing no more than to talk about raising crops. And I will therefore support the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

We are fast arriving at the time, if we have not already reached it, Mr. Chairman, when we must make a survey of our situation with a view of determining the relative importance of agricultural and industrial production and military participation. We must determine just what the necessities of the occasion are, just what limitations we can put upon production, and, having determined it, we must apply the draft with reference to those determinations. In my opinion we have almost, if we have not actually, reached the irreducible minimum of the men who can be actually taken from the farm and placed in the trenches, if we are to produce anything like the amount of food necessary in order to maintain those armies.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will yield.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Does the gentleman know whether the resolution passed by Congress several weeks ago to furlough soldiers who want to work on the farms went into effect or not, and whether or not they are furloughing soldiers who desire to work on the farms?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know definitely to what extent that provision has been taken advantage of, but it is my impression that very, very few men have been furloughed, largely because of the limitation of the department under which men who are in contemplation of being sent abroad are not furloughed, and under existing circumstances practically everybody in the Army is in that situation at the moment.

This bill proposes to increase the supply of agricultural products by reducing the losses resulting from plant and animal diseases and insects and by direct propaganda to stimulate agricultural production and to produce the highest and most efficient uses of our agricultural resources.

In my opinion, this propaganda will be of little avail unless it is accompanied with a policy both more definite and more equitable than now exists in the regulation of the prices of farm products and the prices of the materials and machinery necessary for their production, and also in respect to agricultural labor. It is my intention to discuss only that part of the production equation which is represented by the labor situation.

It has been announced, doubtless with some official sanction, that it is the desire and the purpose of the Government to increase our military forces in France to 3,000,000 and perhaps to 4,000,000 men. With this purpose I am in entire accord, but it must be apparent to anyone who is at all conversant with the labor situation in the country that the increased number of men can not and ought not to be taken from the industry of the country without definite information as to the effect of taking them upon that industry or without careful prevision of the policy which is to characterize their translation from industry to the Army.

The number of men who can be placed on the fighting line in France will be determined by other factors than the provisions of any legislation creating an army on paper which the Congress may adopt. It will be limited by training, transportation, and port facilities abroad, by the amount of shipping available both for transport and cargo, and also by possible available training facilities on this side of the water.

It would be the utmost folly to take men more or less indiscriminately and more or less uniformly from industry in the country generally and put them into training in this country without reckoning on the possibility of transporting and supplying those men as fast as they are trained. Ordinary common sense would seem to dictate that men should not be taken from industry and trained faster than our transportation facilities, both here and abroad, can carry them to and supply them at the front.

We have in the United States to-day in the different cantonments some thousands of troops, perhaps hundreds of thousands, who have been in training in this country more than nine months and who, I am convinced, have long since reached the limit of the training which it is feasible to give them on this side. Further drafts of men from industry ought to be made with reference to proper calculations of the amount of time required for training here and available transportation facilities here and abroad.

These preliminary observations bring me to the suggestion that if we are soon to transfer the large number of men contemplated from industry to the military forces we are face to face with the problem of determining the relative importance in our participation in the war of agricultural production, industrial production, and military participation. We must determine whether the necessities of our military participation in the war are now so great as to justify limitations upon agricultural or industrial production and just where these limitations shall begin and how far they shall proceed.

With the exception of England, whose agricultural production is in the whole scheme of agricultural production rather insignificant, the agricultural production of every country abroad engaged in the war has been and will continue to be materially decreased; and it will be decreased in the United States unless it is determined in advance that agricultural production is of so great importance in our participation in the war that it must not be limited under any circumstances.

In my opinion, the labor available for agriculture will soon be, if it has not already been, reduced by volunteering and the operations of the draft to a point where further reductions can not be accomplished without decreasing production.

In this connection it must be remembered that a large amount of the labor on industrial production is nominally drawn from the farm and that the stupendous increases of industrial production due to the war, coupled with the high wages offered by governmental as well as by private industrial enterprises engaged upon war work, have still further depleted the supply of agricultural labor, and that these high wages will serve in a measure, at least, to recruit from the farm-labor supply the men taken out of industry by the draft. Thus the whole force of the draft, as well as increased industrial production and high wages, implements itself against the farm-labor supply.

If agricultural production is to be maintained at a normal level, to say nothing of increasing it, and a normal supply, at least, is imperatively necessary in the prosecution of the war, we shall be obliged to abandon the application of the draft which heretofore has operated with practically uniform results against all of the industry of the country, agriculture included. In its place we must adopt a policy which will permit of an operation of the draft with relation to the different industries of the country corresponding to their importance and necessity in our participation in the war.

The adoption of this policy will necessitate a classification of industry with relation to its importance and essentiality to the conduct of the war as a basis for determining where the weight of the effective operation of the draft ought to fall first. This basis having been determined, the larger effect of the draft would seem naturally to operate first against those employed in nonessential industries, and, secondly, against those industries where the labor of women can be most conveniently substituted for the labor of men, including the industries directly engaged in the manufacture of war munitions.

The farming industry is not generally susceptible to the employment of women. In large part, particularly in those sections of the country where diversified farming is carried on, farm labor is essentially skilled labor, but even assuming that skilled labor is available for farming, it would be folly to take from the farms the skilled farm owner or tenant and to supplant him with skilled farm labor drawn from some other source.

The application of the draft has already served in many places to take from the farm the farm owner or tenant, leaving the farm itself unoperated.

If the total number of troops now contemplated should be drawn from class 1, thousands of farm owners and farm tenants, as well as thousands of men engaged in farm labor, will be withdrawn from the farm and thousands of acres now planted will be unharvested as a result.

The farmers of the country seek no exemption from the military burdens of the war. Many of them, with far-seeing vision, however, believe that their services on the farm are of much greater value to the Government in the prosecution of the war than their services in the trenches could possibly be. If the military necessity of the country requires it the young farmers will willingly abandon their farms for the trenches, but surely such abandonment ought not to be required of them until a careful and comprehensive review of our participation in the war in all of its phases compels us to the conclusion that our military necessity requires it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if it is not out of order I should like to be recognized again.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] says it is not right to adopt this amendment, because it is not thoroughly understood. The gentleman himself has not taken the trouble to read it. If he will read it, he will find it is easily understood. It is plain and simple. It does no more than this, namely, to refuse deferred classification to any man on account of employment under the provisions of this act. It does not interfere with the ordinary operations of the Department of Agriculture or with the thousands and thousands of men now employed in that department under other laws—the scientists and the others that we talk about—and all others who are not employed under the provisions of this act.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, the gentleman's amendment would not prevent the department from employing any man who was not within the draft age, but if they can not get men outside the draft ages they ought not to take the men who are in the draft ages.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is true.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It is a fact that none of the departments at the present time, so far as I am informed, are taking anybody into the employment that are within the draft age. They are excluded.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield there?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Not in my time.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. If that be true, why is it that the Secretary of Agriculture has recommended the exemption of 2,000 men in his department?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is true. And if we permit it, many men to be employed under the provisions of this act will take the deferred classification on account of the employment that this act will give them. We ought to forbid that, and it is no reflection upon the Secretary of Agriculture or anybody else. I am tired of hearing this talk about reflection on the President if we question the advisability of giving him unlimited authority. I am tired of hearing this talk about reflecton upon the Secretary of Agriculture if we suggest a limitation upon his authority. The fact is that gentlemen in high official places are now so burdened with work that it is positively impossible for them to give personal consideration even to a small part of the duties that Congress imposes upon them, and the result is that they leave a large part of such work to their subordinates. The heads of the departments have not even time to look over carefully the recommendations made by the subordinates. The result is that subordinates do much of the work and exercise much of the authority, while we try to make ourselves believe the high officials do it. The amendment proposed by me will be no reflection upon the Secretary of Agriculture.

And the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] speaks about the very, very strong sentiment in this country against exempting anyone who is fit for military service or permitting him to be placed in a deferred classification. Then, why can not Congress respond to that sentiment and pass an act in accordance with it?

This amendment of mine is easily understood. It was not drawn for the purpose of deceiving anyone or embarrassing the Department of Agriculture in any of its activities. It is as plain as words can make it. It simply would prevent any man who is to be employed under this act from claiming exemption or deferred classification on account of the employment under this act. Could anything be more simple? Could there be more justice in any proposition relating to the employment of labor or the enlistment of soldiers? [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment. I want to say just a word or two in answer to the statements made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN]. The Secretary of Agriculture, as I said a moment ago, has certified about 2,000 experts and men of experience in the Department of Agriculture, men who are already in the Department of Agriculture, asking that they be placed in deferred classes. I am informed that the Secretary of Agriculture has given his personal attention to every single, solitary application that has come into his office asking for a deferred classification, and that he has absolutely refused to be guided by the recommendations of anybody else or refer this matter to anybody else, but has acted upon each case himself personally.

I say that this proposed amendment is a reflection on the Secretary of Agriculture, and I say it advisedly. This amendment here would have been clearly subject to a point of order if the point had been made at the proper time. You are asked here to amend another act which has no relation to this whatever. If the point of order had been made, it would have clearly been subject to a point of order, but it was not made. We preferred to leave the matter to the House.

Now, then, when we passed the draft act we said to the Secretary of Labor, as we said to the Secretary of Agriculture, and to the head of every other department of this Government, "You shall have authority to certify to the local board men who are within the draft age and whom you absolutely need in your department, men who are absolutely essential to the work of your department." We said that to every department of the Government, and now here to-day you are seeking to amend that act by taking that authority away from the Secretary of Agriculture alone. It can not be taken otherwise than as a reflection on the Secretary of Agriculture, and I am opposed to it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is doubtless aware of the fact that in two, and I think in three, bills we have already inserted similar provisions. Was that an insult to the heads of those particular departments that had to do with those appointments?

Mr. RUBEY. As I said a moment ago, the Secretary of Agriculture has not the authority to place those men in a deferred class. The only possible thing he can do is to say to the various local boards, "We need this man; he is essential to our work." If he does that that local board looks into the situation locally and passes upon it. It is not within the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to place any individual in a deferred class.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. It would be in the power of the Secretary of Agriculture, however, to refuse to take a man into this service who was not in a deferred class, would it not?

Mr. RUBEY. I think not.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it would be. They would not be appointed.

Mr. RUBEY. You mean it is not in the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to appoint a man who is not in a deferred class?

Mr. MADDEN. No. I say this would take away from the Secretary of Agriculture the power to appoint to one of these positions a man who was not in a deferred class or who is of draft age. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. RUBEY. It applies to every man who has heretofore been appointed under the provisions of this act. There are only a few men who have been placed in a deferred class under this law and who will be exempted for a time by this law.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. COX. In a general way, what are these 2,000 men doing who have been given exemption?

Mr. RUBEY. In a general way they are specialists, men employed in the Department of Agriculture, many of them who have been there a number of years.

Mr. COX. But they are not men engaged in plowing and sowing and mowing and reaping?

Mr. RUBEY. Oh, I will say to the gentleman that in the Department of Labor there are very few men who are absolutely using the shovel and the hoe and the pick and the ax. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. And many of them ought to be put to that work. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUBEY. And it is the same way in the Department of Agriculture. Everybody knows that the men employed in the Department of Agriculture are not the men who actually till the soil.

Mr. COX. They will be.

Mr. RUBEY. If we are going to put those men on the farm and have them go out to work, we had better get ready to change the entire plan and aim of the Department of Agriculture, not only of the Nation but of every State in the Union.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be just as well for us to read the amendment again. It reads:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 2, at the end of line 2, add the following:

"Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used in paying salary or expenses of any man who on account of employment in which he is or may be engaged under the provisions of this act has been or shall hereafter be certified by the Secretary of Agriculture or by any other official of the Department of Agriculture for deferred classification, or by action of any other Federal official or authority has been or may hereafter be placed in a deferred class under act No. 12, Sixty-fifth Congress, entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917, or under any act amendatory thereof that has been or shall hereafter be enacted.'

That does not affect the military law of this country one iota. It affects nothing but this act.

It does two things. In the first place it absolutely closes the doors of hope for the would-be slacker who is looking to this place as a haven of refuge. I no not think that any man in this House would object to that. In the second place it will be very, very salutary in establishing a policy at the outset respecting the putting in of men above the draft age, so that they will not be constantly changing to put in men of the draft age and then let them out when called by the board, and then take them out and put older men in or take other men subject to the draft. There is such a constant change going on in all these departments as keeps a constant stream of newcomers entering the department. But if this amendment goes in we know that from the very outset they will not have any men in here who will be removed in a few weeks or months and thereby cripple the department.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEEKER. I will.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. No department of the Government is appointing anybody as a clerk or to any position of that character who is within the draft age under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. MEEKER. Does the gentleman mean between 21 and 31?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Then why the opposition to this amendment?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The order has been already issued.

Mr. MEEKER. Then I can not understand the opposition to the amendment if that is the fact. It looks as if the department would welcome the legislation.

Mr. WASON. Will the gentleman yield for me to ask the chairman a question?

Mr. MEEKER. Yes.

Mr. WASON. Does the gentleman contend that a man already in the department should be treated differently from the man that is to be called in?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not think there should be any difference between them—all should stand alike. But I am opposed to the amendment to the draft law of this kind being put in this bill without any consideration.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEEKER. I will.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman say that the department refuses to take men under the civil service of draft age?

Mr. MEEKER. That is what the gentleman from Mississippi says.

Mr. PLATT. I know that I have received several letters indicating that that is not the fact.

Mr. MEEKER. The gentleman from New York uses a shorter word than I would myself, but I think the chairman of the committee is mistaken. Now, it seems to me that we might as well be frank about this matter. They talk about there being no slacker sentiment in this country. That is bunk. There are thousands of men who are trying to find bullet-proof jobs, and we all know it. Every time one of these men can worm his way into a place the minute he gets in he begins to try to build up a wall behind himself so they can not pull him out. The thing that Congress will do by this amendment, as far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned, will be to stop the putting of men in who will be there only a short time before they are taken out, and then putting in men beyond the draft age. Men that will be put in will be beyond the draft age, and this will only give us one school of development, whereas by the present system there are continual changes. The first six months of this work, as you all know, is practically given to the man until he learns it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, let us see how much more debate is wanted. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close at the expiration of 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close at the expiration of 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this amendment. I was surprised, if not dumfounded, when the statement was made here that the Secretary of Agriculture had asked for 2,000 exemptions in his department. Two thousand exemptions in his department! Now, there is but one way, as far as we possibly can, to play this war game, and that is to play it on the absolute square. [Applause.]

When the Secretary of Agriculture, or any other Secretary, goes on record asking for 2,000 exemptions in his department, pray, tell us what his department would do if that 2,000 should fall dead overnight? Would it go to pieces like a rag? This is unfair; manifestly so. No one man's services are indispensable to a success in the war, and no 2,000 men's services in any branch of the Government are indispensable; and it is unfair to ask for their exemption.

I have not much confidence, anyhow, in these men traipsing around over the country, but I will tell you who I have got confidence in, and that is the practical farmer—the man that knows how to plant and when to plant; how to plow and when to plow; how to sow and when to sow; how to reap and when to mow. There is a young farmer in my district who lives close to me. I know him, I know his father, and I know his family. I have been upon his farm twenty times or more. He is the only boy on that farm, and the local board put him in class 4. Then the district board put him in E class 1. It is nothing to me. The fact that he was improperly placed or reclassified was brought to my attention. I went to see Gen. Crowder and was informed that there was not one chance in a thousand to have that boy put back in class 4. It is nothing to me, but the result will be that that farmer will have a public sale in a few days, because he can not hire labor. He can not get it for love or money. It is not a question of price, and so the result will be a public sale. I am not complaining, I am not criticizing anybody, but that is the condition and not a theory. There is a boy that has raised oceans of stuff—wheat, rye, corn, barley, hogs, cattle, everything that grows in my country. He was put in class 4 by the local board, reclassified by the district board, and now he is up against the call soon to go into the service. He could not get exemption; his classification was even changed. He is a practical man; a farmer from the ground up; a graduate of the school of farming experience; and yet the Secretary of Agriculture has asked, according to the statement made here to-day, for the exemption of 2,000 persons in his department. I take it that the vast majority of them are theoretical men, men that never plowed in their lives, never put up a shock of wheat, never stood on a straw stack and stacked straw, but men that are supposed to go out and tell the farmer how to produce more crops; how to make his farm a success. Here is a farmer who has made his farm a success, and here is the statement that the Secretary of Agriculture has made, that 2,000 of these men going around over the country telling the old farmer how to produce more stuff should be exempted. Why does not the Agricultural Committee accept this amendment without debate? Every man on it should vote for it to go on this bill. I propose to vote for it myself. [Applause.] Some of the departments are taking in men of draft age to-day. A young man found his way into my office last week who, 22 years of age and in class 1, a single man, got in the civil service and got a job here——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

By unanimous consent Mr. Cox was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, there are 20,000 men and women employed in the Agricultural Department. I do not know how many of those are women, but assuming that they are all men we have here the recoord of the statement to the effect that the Secretary of Agriculture has asked for the exemption of 1 man out of every 10 in his department from military service. Do you believe in this sort of practice? If not, then here is a remedy. The adoption of this amendment simply means that the Secretary of Agriculture shall not employ in these activities any man who is within the draft age. Are there men beyond the draft age who are qualified to perform this kind of work? I would hate to think there are not. Then, if there are, why not employ them? Why give the Secretary of Agriculture or any other man the power to employ men and thereby relieve them from military service? We are engaged in a great war in which every man, woman, and child in America is interested. Shall we say that those who are employed in the Agricultural Department are to be exempt from military duty? I hope not. There can be no question about the wisdom of the adoption of the amendment that is pending. What does it do? It simply directs the Secretary of Agriculture that under no circumstances must he employ and thereby relieve from military duty anybody within the draft age. It serves notice upon him that for every man needed in these activities he must find a man beyond the draft age. Is that any evidence of distrust of the Secretary of Agriculture? Not at all.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. COX. Is not this the fact: That in the recent draft bill which the House passed we put all of the students of divinity and medicine hereafter in the Army and prevented them from stacking up in medical and divinity schools?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and the House was most emphatic upon that question.

Mr. COX. Absolutely.

Mr. MADDEN. Why place the Secretary of Agriculture upon a pedestal above criticism? Why say that he alone shall have the power to exempt men from military service? Why compel the widow whose only boy, is needed at home to send him to the front to fight for America, to send that boy and then permit the Secretary of Agriculture to employ men whom he can exempt from military service? Why not say to the Secretary of Agriculture that no man under 31 years of age shall be given employment under this act? Why not say that no person under 31 years of age shall be paid from this appropriation? That is what the amendment says. That is what it does. It seeks not to amend the draft act, not at all. It simply places a limitation on the expenditure of this $6,100,000. Is it just to place such a limitation upon it? Shall we say to the widows of America your boy is without influence and shall be sent to the front to fight, while boys within the draft age who have influence enough to get upon the Agricultural pay rolls shall be hidden away in a safe place beyond the danger of the firing line? Gentlemen, do it if you will; but you can not do it with my vote. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, one of the principles upon which our Government was established and founded, at the very threshold, was that all men are created equal in the eyes of the law. I look around this Chamber, and I see your boy, and yours, and your two boys in the Army, and I think they are just as good as those boys who would be exempt from the draft under this bill providing they secured employment in the Agricultural Department. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, making everyone within the draft age liable for military duty ought to prevail and not allow exemption because employed in any department.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman not remember that when the food-control bill was under consideration last year the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who had charge of it, accepted an amendment almost identical in language with this?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think that is true, and I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. If we are going to raise an army, let us have an army of enlisted men ready for military duty. If it is generally understood that there is to be a haven where men can get civil employment from the Government and be exempted from military duty, it will have a bad effect upon the morale not only of the Army, but of the people at home. It will cause ridicule, and it will have a bad effect on the boys now in the service. This bill is all right, but it needs a few amendments. I wish they could amend the report of the committee where it says that certain thousands of dollars are to be employed in locating Irish potatoes. That should be amended by adding the words "in Michigan" after the word potatoes, because there is such a superabundance of Irish potatoes from last year's crop up in Michigan that it has all Ireland staggered.

Mr. MADDEN. The farmers are selling potatoes now at 60 cents a bushel on the market and have to pay the freight out of that 60 cents.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is true. This whole country should prepare for fighting first, last, and all the time. If they are looking for more men to do the harvesting with this $500,000, they might step over to the Labor Department and take a peep at the list of 300,000 laborers that is there, and they may find them in that institution, which is employing the activities of the Post Office in getting laborers and workmen. There are 10,000,000 men in this country within the draft age. That leaves 90,000,000 outside. Is anyone going to say that there can not be procured enough men from the 90,000,000 to run the Agricultural Department for the farmers? Why, of course, they can get them. The Government takes the best experts in the country—all kinds of engineers, college men, mechanics, machinists, architects, bankers, and I was going to say lawyers—and puts them in the Army, and I think Government employees ought not to be exempted. [Applause.] Let us not exempt them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

First. For the prevention, control, and eradication of the diseases and pests of live stock; the enlargement of live-stock production, and the conservation and utilization of meat, poultry, dairy, and other animal products, $1,058,975.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "first," strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert the following:

"For the prevention, control, and eradication of cattle ticks, $61,610; of hog cholera, $202,965; of abortion, influenza, strangles, etc., $175,000; for the production of beef cattle, $105,000; for live-stock production in the great plains region, $100,000; for the production of pork, $150,000; for the production of poultry, $129,600; for the production of sheep, $60,000; for the making of cottage cheese on the farms, $52,950; for the utilization of creamery by-products, $21,850."

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has exactly the same aggregate as the section provided in the bill. The object of the amendment is to itemize it. The committee spent a considerable time, and on four items in this section there was a reduction of $210,680. The first was the eradication of cattle ticks, and the estimate asked was $191,190, and we reduced it to $61,610. The next was the production of poultry, and the estimate was $168,000, and we reduced it to $129,600. The third was making of cottage cheese on the farm, $80,000, and we reduced it to $52,950. The fourth was $37,500, and we reduced it to $21,850. The total, as I said, is the same amount as in the bill. My object in introducing the amendment is to itemize it. This gives power to the Secretary of Agriculture to spend all of this amount on any one item. My idea of it is that our work is useless if they can spend it all on one item, and it ought to be specified, so that each item would get their proper share. One item, for instance, the making of cottage cheese on the farm, $80,000, an article in common use, was cut down to $52,950, one of the most useless things that the Department of Agriculture can do, because the average woman on the farm knows how to make cottage cheese. In fact, I could give in four or five words the recipe that will do the work which this $52,950 will do. This bill, I think, ought to be itemized in this section and all the others, so that we will know what we are voting for. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. COX. If I understood the gentleman's amendment, it strikes out all of paragraph 1, which carries an appropriation of $1,058,975, and inserts in lieu thereof——

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Ten items, amounting to the same amount.

Mr. COX. I have not had time to foot up the appropriation carried in the gentleman's amendment, but does it foot up the same thing?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Exactly the same amount. It is only itemized.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey, it purposes to carry out the conclusion of the committee in the amount of money that they should award for the respective purposes enumerated in this item, which is lumped in one amount under general phraseology in the bill reported by the committee. If there is one thing for which the Congress has been contending for a long time it is to try and have control of the expenditures of the respective activities in the departments, but the proposal of the committee would grant the head of a department carte blanche to use any amount that he saw fit up to $1,058,000. For instance, the full amount could be used for what I regard as a foolish and fantastic experimentation with respect to the making of cottage cheese on the farm; especially in these times is it rather fantastic, as any person who knows anything about schmierkase ought to know that there is no necessity even to spend $52,950.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Another advantage of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey is that if the House wishes to eliminate and strike out some of these appropriations for these respective items it would be privileged to do so, but when you read the general item reported by the majority of the committee no one can find there such a scientific investigation as the making of cottage cheese on the farm——

Mr. COX. Can the gentleman inform the committee in all seriousness how that item of $52,950 is to be expended—by employing people to travel over the country or publication of pamphlets or what?

Mr. HAUGEN. They are going to send men to each county, in each State, to teach the farm wife how to make cottage cheese.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa and let him explain what this really scientific work consists of in these stressful times of war.

Mr. COX. The first thing I ever knew was of my mother making cottage cheese.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman can go ahead in his own time, and I will take time later.

Mr. STAFFORD. At the request of the gentleman from Iowa, I shall proceed. Mr. Chairman, especially in these times when we are pressed for revenue, especially in these times when we should scrutinize with care the expenditures of the departments which are not engaged in war activities, should this Congress adopt a policy of segregation of items rather than the policy of lump-sum proposals, especially as reported in this bill when the amounts run up into the millions of dollars.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Is it not true that with all of these items covered in one lump sum there is no way of getting at any indefensible item like the making of cottage cheese, and that is probably why it is put in that way?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not know what the motive of the members of the committee may have been in recommending it in this omnibus form, but certainly the House can not determine as to whether it should exercise its prerogative in allowing certain activities to continue or not. We have the right to determine how much should be expended for these various activities. If we want to increase the appropriation for the eradication of cattle tick, we should do it. If we wish to strike out the appropriation for that fanciful latter-day creation of a survey and investigation of cottage cheese on the farm, we should do it. Then there is the other provision, which was included in the omnibus bill, of utilization of dairy products, $21,050. That may be an activity which the members of the committee can inform the House as to whether it is desired or not. In the form submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] it is left to the House to determine whether the respective appropriations for these segregated items should continue or not.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, in response to the question of the gentleman from Ohio, I desire to read from Mr. Rawl's statement before the committee, which appears on page 27. It says:

> The CHAIRMAN. Your first item, Mr. Rawl, is No. 9, on page 8, "Making cottage cheese on the farm." The allotment for 1918 was $52,950, and the estimate in this bill is $80,000, which is an increase of $27,500.

And he says, among other things:

> The experience of the department during the present fiscal year clearly indicates the desirability of carrying on an active campaign for the purpose of encouraging the making and consuming of cottage cheese. With the emergency funds available this year an agent will be assigned to each State to demonstrate proper methods of making cottage cheese and to give definite information regarding its use.

I would like to read the gentleman's testimony given a year ago, as follows:

> I believe if you go into a county and teach the domestic-science agent how to make cottage cheese, and how to make it on the farm—

Experts are to be sent into the States to teach the Government employees how to make cottage cheese, they in turn to teach the farmer's wife. Now, I believe it is safe to say that there is hardly a 12-year-old girl on a farm that does not know how to make cottage cheese. All there is to it is to put a little clabbered milk in a cheese cloth, hang it up overnight, and add a little salt to it in the morning; and if butter and cream is added it improves its quality. That is all there is to it. And we are here proposing to send men out at the rate of $2,500 a year to show Government employees in the country how to make cottage cheese—$80,000 was suggested in addition to the appropriation made in the annual appropriation bill. Here is the process, and it is an interesting one. Dr. Rawl said:

> And if that agent goes back the next week and gives two or three more demonstrations, and the next week does the same thing—

And so on.

He believes the farmer's wife can be taught to make and made to eat cottage cheese.

What a wonderful process, gentlemen!

Mr. COX. Are these agents who are trooping around for this purpose, men or women?

Mr. HAUGEN. I presume both; I do not know what they are.

Mr. COX. What salaries do they draw?

Mr. HAUGEN. They draw from $100 to $300 a month. There is no limitation in many salaries fixed by the Department of Agriculture. Many are scientists, and the only limitation is the $3,500.

Mr. COX. If there is a woman on the farm in all this broad land who does not know how to make cottage cheese, could not that information be carried to her in a bulletin?

Mr. HAUGEN. It does not have to be carried in a bulletin. Every housewife knows how to make cottage cheese.

Mr. COX. They had better move to the cities.

Mr. HAUGEN. Well, everybody in the cities knows how to make cottage cheese, as well as those on the farm. It is a very useful food product.

Now, Mr. Chairman, all I desire to say, and I believe it is clear to everybody, is that this bill should not be passed in the form in which it is drawn, and the only practical way of doing business would be to send it back to the committee with instructions to have this bill reported as the bill should be reported and as committees have been instructed from time to time to report bills, and that is, that every item should be segregated in order that Congress may know something about how this money is to be appropriated.

Mr. RUBEY. I want to ask the gentleman and also the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] why it is that that suggestion was not made by you or by him in the committee? There was no man in the committee that made any suggestion of that kind whatever, to my knowledge.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WASON. I would like to know if it is proper in here to bring in the doings of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The question of what passed in the committee properly ought not to be brought in here. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute more?

Mr. RUBEY. Are you ashamed of what occurred in the committee?

Mr. WASON. It is not a question of whether I am ashamed of the gentleman from Missouri or not. It is a question of keeping within the rules.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. As stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], if there ever was a bill contested in that committee it was this bill, from beginning to end; but, as the gentleman knows, the bill was reported; that there was an effort made to cut down many of the amounts carried in the bill and to have it reported in a regular way in which appropriation bills are generally reported. It is a matter that ought to be sent back to the committee and the items segregated. The department and the Congress ought to know just how and where this money is to be expended. Under the present form the whole amount, $1,058,975, can be used for the purpose of encouraging the making and consuming of cottage cheese, for the employment of agents, which seems an absurd and unbusinesslike way of making appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto shall terminate in 15 minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I modify the motion and ask for 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman modifies the request and instead of 15 minutes asks for 25 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That includes five minutes for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Somebody told me just now that we were to vote at 5 o'clock. Do you expect to use all the time up to then?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The vote at 5 o'clock is on another bill. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Now, will the gentleman from Mississippi indicate the gentlemen who are to occupy this time?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] asks for five minutes, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] five minutes, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX] five minutes, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] five, and I want five.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BURNETT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries announced that the President had, on May 20, 1918, approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 11245. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto, approved October 6, 1917;

S. 3771. An act authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government; and

S. J. Res. 124. Joint resolution providing for the registration for military service of all male persons citizens of the United States or residing in the United States who have since the 5th day of June, 1917, and on or before the day set for the registration by proclamation by the President, attained the age of 21 years, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe under the terms of the act approval May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

FOOD PRODUCTION.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is recognized.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this bill in its present form is utterly and absolutely indefensible. There is not any defense that can be made for bringing in a bill carrying over $11,000,000 in lump sums, the intention of which, it is admitted, is to scatter it around among a large number of items, as to which not a man in the House has any information except what has been given by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON].

It is not alone this absurd and ridiculous proposition of appropriating $80,000 for disseminating information as to making cottage cheese. And right here I want to warn any agents who propose giving information on that subject from going into the houses of any Iowa farmers and attempting to give instruction to the housewives along that line. They will probably be instructed in something themselves, if they undertake it. [Laughter.]

There are others of these items that ought to be cut down or entirely eliminated. But there is no way by which it can be done, because of the peculiar manner in which this bill is brought in. The last Agricultural appropriation bill carried an item of $460,000 for the elimination of hog cholera. Now, they want $200,000 or $300,000 more, as we are informed by the gentleman from New Jersey, for the elimination of hog cholera, when they would have to search in order to find the hog cholera existing in this country at this time, because hog cholera, as everyone conversant with that disease knows, goes by cycles. This is one of the particular times when it is not prevalent and it is not necessary to have so large appropriations to use at present.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not true that the appropriations heretofore for that purpose have been well used and that the disease has been stamped out?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it likely. At all events, the disease is not very prevalent at this time.

No showing can be made as to why the amount should be increased at this time, or why we should have a larger sum now for the extermination of the cattle tick. Has not the sum heretofore appropriated been found sufficient?

Why, in Heaven's name, should we be appropriating money for the distribution of laborers or obtaining farm labor when the Department of Labor has a complete plan on an elaborate scale to distribute and supply laborers? Why should we duplicate this? I find from the tables presented by the gentleman from New Jersey that they even want something like $20,000 or $30,000 for promoting the culture of the castor bean. Gentlemen of the House, we have learned about the failure of the airplane program; we have learned from the voluminous report that they had submitted that they had made no fighting airplanes, but they made much of the fact that they had provided for the culture of castor beans. Now, it seems it was not in such a way but that the Department of Agriculture finds it necessary to spend more money for the same purpose. [Laughter.] You can go into every supposed item included in this bill and find some reason why it should be cut down or entirely eliminated.

What do we want with two county agents in each county? Why is not one enough? Of course, some gentleman will say, "You do not know that this is for two county agents." That is just the trouble. We do not know how this money is going to be expended, or what it is going to be expended for. We have no justification whatever for the bill in its present form. We do not know where to cut it; we do not know how to reach the objectionable items. In short, we know nothing about the bill, except that it ought to be recommitted to the committee and brought forth in proper form, so that we can tell something about it.

Mr. Chairman, how long are we to go along in this way, facing a situation where we are expected to raise $30,000,000,000 for the next year, and when we come in with a bill carrying $18,000,000 have some one say, "We do not know what these items are, but we think they are all right. The Secretary of Agriculture wants the money." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, may I have a minute more, or does the limitation of time prevent?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma). The time has been allotted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Otherwise I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The time was allotted by unanimous consent. The gentleman was given 5 minutes out of the 25.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can get time by unanimous consent.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, to strike out $52,950 and insert in lieu thereof $25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COX to the amendment offered by Mr. HUTCHINSON: Strike out the figures "$52,950" and insert in lieu thereof "$25,000."

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], adopted a little while ago, materially strengthened the bill, in my opinion, and makes it a much better bill than it was when it was brought into the House. The amendment now before us, offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON], ought to be adopted. It ought to have the unanimous support of every member of the committee.

This bill, gentlemen, furnishes an unanswerable argument as to the necessity of a budget committee in the House. One department is duplicating another. One department is asking an appropriation for a certain kind of work, and another department is asking an appropriation for the same kind of work. I think before we get through with this war we shall certainly get a budget committee, a Committee on Appropriations combined with a revenue committee, the two going hand in hand to raise the revenue and make the appropriations.

Now, unless the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey is adopted, as the argument has been well made here, there will be no limitation on the amount that can be expended on any one item in this bill; not at all. They can spend the entire $11,000,000 for any item they want.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman think this entire appropriation could be used for the cottage-cheese investigation?

Mr. COX. I am going to discuss that in a moment.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Has the gentleman any idea in the world that it would be used for any such purpose?

Mr. COX. I have no idea, but I would just as soon trust the judgment of Congress as to trust the judgment of any Cabinet officer when it comes to spending money.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Does the gentleman believe that the Secretary of Agriculture would squander the money in that way?

Mr. COX. No; I do not think he would recklessly squander the money. I presume he would be economical in its expenditure, although I would prefer the judgment of this Congress to limit his ability and permit him to spend only so much on each item. But the idea of spending $52,000 to teach the women of this country how to make cottage cheese is astounding; the idea of appropriating $52,000 to employ men and women to travel about through the rural communities telling farmers' wives how to make cottage cheese is absurd, preposterous, unbelievable, if not unthinkable, in time of war or in time of peace. Why, the first food commodity that I distinctly recollect my mother having made was cottage cheese. Forty-five or forty-eight years ago, I remember it well, and that was almost before we even had the Agricultural Department or even a bureau of it. Now, there might be some sense is using this money in some sections of the country where farmers' wives do not know how to make cottage cheese, but I do not know where those sections are. You will find the wives of the farmers in the North that can throw a ring around these people who go out and try to teach them how to make cottage cheese. You can find farmers' wives in the North who can make these people look like 30 cents with a hole in it in this line of work. I do not care if these people who go out are college graduates, because the old woman on the farm is a graduate, too, although she has not worn out her back in sitting in colleges, but she has worn it out in the school of experience in learning how to produce things.

Mr. HERSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Not just now. It may be that the department might need a little appropriation here for the publication of bulletins or circulars or something of that kind that could be sent through the mails, distributed among the women, if there be any in the country that do not know how to make cottage cheese, and tell them all about it. I think my amendment ought to carry. It only saves, it is true, $25,000.

Mr. HERSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I will yield for a question.

Mr. HERSEY. Has the gentleman understood that it was the purpose to ship cottage cheese to the soldiers in France?

Mr. COX. I do not know anything about that. If it is, this thing would not tell the farmers' wives anything more than they already know about it. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, one of the peculiarities in this body is that whenever a bill is brought before the committee recommending a comparatively small appropriation for anything touching agriculture there is always raised a tremendous howl against it. I have seen pension bills carrying $150,000,000 pass this body without 10 minutes of debate. I have seen the Post Office appropriation bill, carrying over $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 pass practically without discussion. I have seen the great naval bill take the same course. I suspect that in a few days we will have the Army appropriation bill, carrying not millions but billions; and there will not be a single little chirp about it from those gentlemen who are so solicitous of the funds in the Treasury. It is only when the Agricultural Committee comes in that the watchdogs from certain large committees in this House who would like to control all the appropriations that Congress makes get into action and get busy. I have seen it take place here for many, many years. I see the evidences of it again this afternoon. I assume that we shall see more evidences of it on to-morrow and the next day, and as long as this bill is under consideration.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I have only five minutes which was graciously yielded to me by the gentleman from Mississippi. This bill prepared by the Committee on Agriculture now in charge of the energetic and active gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] is not an unsual piece of legislation. It is following the exact lines verbatim of the food-production act which passed this body last year and became an act of Congress by the signature of the President on the 10th of August, 1917.

It might have been better to have segregated these items. It has been the policy of the Committee on Agriculture, in dealing with the regular appropriation bill, to segregate the items as far as possible. This committee in making up this bill, however, has followed the dictates of Congress itself in lumping the funds into several general items.

My friend from Indiana [Mr. Cox] raised a good deal of smoke about that fact, that we are appropriating a small fund here for the encourgement and the production of cottage cheese. I want to say to the gentleman that my old grandmother—my mother having died when I was a baby—also knew how to make cottage cheese. We called it clabber cheese in my country. There are thousands and thousands of women in this country to-day, country women, who know how to make it. I agree with the gentleman from Indiana on that, but they have not had impressed upon them the importance of making cottage cheese to use as a substitute for meat. That is the purpose of this appropriation. There is hardly a rural woman in the United States who does not know how to make cottage cheese, but there are tens of thousands who have not had it brought to their attention that by utilizing the milk, much of which is wasted on the farm, they can save meat that can be sent to our boys who are dying in the trenches across the water. That is the purpose of the $52,000 appropriated in this bill. Is that good work?

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is it not a fact that the appropriation of $52,000 was to stimulate the commercial production of cottage cheese and to utilize the by-products of the creamery?

Mr. LEVER. Both. One is to encourage production of cottage cheese among the rural women and the other is to encourage utilization of by-products of the creamery in order that we may save meat; and it is a better proposition than gentlemen think it is, after all. [Applause.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think this item in the bill should be separated into its proper parts by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey. If this bill should pass in its present form, the Secretary of Agriculture will not know how much money has been appropriated for the several lines of work, because the bill carries no information. He will be permitted to expend it all for one thing to the exclusion of all others. It will only be by going and looking over the minutes of the Committee on Agriculture that he can determine how much money was intended for each of the several items. We reduced one item $129,000. We have reduced others. We increased some. What information has the Secretary of Agriculture as to how much money was allowed for any particular thing? What would he do in spending the money? How much would he know had been allowed by Congress?

The will of Congress should control the Secretary of Agriculture, although, if we take the word of the gentleman from Mississippi, a suggestion from Congress to the Secretary is a reflection upon him. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] asks why it was necessary to employ two county agents in a county. Under this bill, if it should be enacted into law, provision is made for sending not alone two, but four or five or a half-dozen agents into a county. Over and over again I have asked gentlemen representing the department appearing before the committee why it is necessary to have one man go to talk with a farmer about his beef cattle, and another to go to talk about poultry, and still another go and talk about sheep production, and a fourth man go and talk about diseases of hogs or about the increase in the production of them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. On dairy work also.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And as to dairy work, yes; and the reply of each one of these gentlemen was that each man was an expert in his line, that it takes an expert, and that a man can be an expert in only one line of work. The result is that these automobiles we are supplying will be filled with a half dozen of these agents and representatives of the Department of Agriculture going to and fro, going in a bunch to a farm, each "expert" to talk to the farmer about a particular line of work. That is a legitimate criticism of this bill and of some of the work it provides for. That objection has been made in committee over and over again, and argument made against the employment of so many men, but the argument fell upon deaf ears, and this bill comes in its present form. My statement respecting these matters is not overdrawn; it is in no respect a misstatement or an exaggeration. I have made that objection, and I have called it to the attention of the heads of the bureaus and of the Secretary of Agriculture himself more than once. Time and time again when they came before the committee I asked why it was necessary to have two, three, four, and five men employed to go to a farm, each one to talk about a particular line of work, all work that one man, if he is fit to hold the humblest of these positions, ought to know all about, and the answer is that it is expert work, and that therefore all of these men must be employed.

In case there is danger of these "experts" crowding the inhabitants or themselves in small towns, or if their joint visit to a farm is liable to interfere with the farmer or inconvenience the men themselves they are advised, I presume, to hold a convention before entering the town and arrange a schedule of operations.

Mr. LA FOLLETE. Was any suggestion ever made that they go in the wintertime so as to give the farmer a little chance to do some real work?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There is a suggestion by some one that they go in war time, when they can be exempt from active military service, but this House in its wisdom has prevented that. It is absolutely necessary, if we are to give any direction whatever to the Secretary of Agriculture as to the expenditure of a sum of more than $2,000,000, if the will of Congress is to be expressed in any form as to the manner in which this fund shall be used, that the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] be adopted.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order on this amendment, and I ask the Chairman to rule upon it. This bill is in the language of the food-production act passed at the last session of Congress. This item is in identically the language of that bill. The item reads as follows:

For the prevention, control, and eradication of the diseases and pests of live stock; the enlargement of live-stock production, and the conservation and utilization of meat, poultry, dairy, and other animal products, $1,058,975.

This bill is simply making an appropriation to carry on that work. That was the work that was authorized at the last session by that law. To divide it up, to itemize it, and chop it to pieces would be a change of that law, and it seems to me that it is subject to a point of order on the ground that it changes existing law. Furthermore, the amendment offered by the gentleman in the form in which he offers it is not germane to this section. I submit that to the Chairman.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is not the effect of the amendment in the nature of a limitation as to how much of the appropriation may be used for certain specified purposes, all of which are within the purview of the act?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. No; I do not think it would be a limitation. It is a specific direction as to how it shall be expended—that he shall expend so many dollars, no more and no less, for a specific purpose.

Mr. WALSH. If it says $52,000 for cottage cheese, it certainly limits the amount that can be used for that purpose.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It limits the amount to that particular item, but it is a direction that not one cent more can be expended for this or that.

Mr. WALSH. And the gentleman is opposed to that?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am in favor of giving the Secretary of Agriculture the discretion in reference to the expenditure of sums for various items, just like was given under the food-production act a year ago.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, unless the Chair is ready to rule, I desire to say a word or two.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. The logic of the position of the gentleman having the bill in charge is that the House must appropriate for every item of expenditure as carried in general language in the food act of August 10, 1917. I grant that the language of the paragraph under consideration, which the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey seeks to strike out, is in the identic language carried in the original food act, but I do not grant that Congress has not the right in voting the appropriation to determine how much money shall be voted for the respective purposes. Congress has the authority to refuse to vote the money for these respective purposes. If it has authority to refuse to appropriate, it also has authority to segregate and designate the respective character and the extent of service which come within the generic language as included in the original food-survey law. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that the language of the substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey does not contain one item of activity that can not be included within the general phraseology of the bill as reported from the committee. Certainly this Congress is not limited to the phraseology of the act of a year ago. It may be limited as to the purposes which were included in the general language in that authority of a year ago. Congress has the right at all times to appropriate or to refuse to appropriate, and it has the further right now, without changing the existing law, to designate specifically the activities and functions for which these appropriations will be made. If the Chair will study the substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey he will see that there is not an item there included that is not covered under the general phraseology of the item as reported by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been looking over this amendment pending the debate. I believe it is agreed that the language of the paragraph proposed to be replaced is the language of existing law, and that it provides in a large way, and in general terms for extensive activities on the part of the Agricultural Department. Looking to the proposed amendment the Chair does not note that in its enumeration of activities there is a single one that is not possible for the Agricultural Department to set on foot and pursue under the general authority of the existing law. A fixed amount is proposed by the amendment for each of the enumerated activities. Whatever Congress is empowered to appropriate for, it can refuse to appropriate for, and in the exercise of this power to deny any appropriation whatsoever, it can appropriate for a limited extent only. This being so, it can fix this limited appropriation at whatever amount it deems to be fair and just. Its judgment on that matter is final and conclusive. This amendment enumerates certain activities which the Agricultural Department is empowered to set in motion, as and with respect to these activities, it fixes the amounts that may be expended thereon. If the amendment is adopted, it is in substance a declaration by Congress that, under this particular head, the activities indicated, are the only activities for which it is willing to appropriate. Should Congress choose to exercise its authority to award, or deny an appropriation, for an authorized purpose, by appropriating for one, or more items falling within that purpose, and refusing it to others, who is there to say it nay, and in fact in principle who should say it nay? It is a reasonable exercise of a power that belongs to, and ought to belong to, and remain with the Congress. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I think I have five minutes remaining. I desire to call attention to the fact that this bill as reported by the committee is exactly in accordance with the food-production bill which was reported a year ago, which was approved by Congress by a vote that was almost unanimous. There were 365 votes for that bill and only 5 votes against the bill in identically the same language that you will find in this bill making lump-sum appropriations just exactly as made in this bill, and without any change whatever from the language of that bill this bill was reported by the direct authority and under the direction of the Committee on Agriculture. There was no objection expressed in committee to reporting the bill in this form, but on the contrary I was directed by a unanimous vote of those present and voting in committee to report it in this form.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I have but five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. For just a question.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. All right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact that last year this was the initial legislation along this line. Congress did not put a restriction upon the department's activities, but now there are specific recommendations that have been made, so why should it not limit the authority in the way proposed by the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It was new legislation at the last session of Congress, and Congress passed the law in this identical form and put the fund in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, and thereby charged him with the responsibility of administering it, and the Secretary of Agriculture has kept it absolutely under his own personal control. None of it has been expended and none has been allotted to a single bureau or a single division of the Department of Agriculture except by the Secretary himself, and the bureau chiefs or division chiefs or the other employees in the Agricultural Department who have expended any part of it have had to go to him every time and submit their proposition to him and secure his approval of it and then get from him an allotment out of the fund for the activities they proposed to undertake.

Now, that having been the policy before, the Secretary of Agriculture is better qualified now by experience, and his department is better qualified by experience and investigations which they have made, to carry out the provisions of this law under the lump-sum appropriation and general legislation as provided in this bill than they were a year ago. Why change the whole plan of legislation and take the discretion away from the Secretary of Agriculture in these war times when emergencies frequently arise and say to him, "You can spend a thousand dollars on this matter and a thousand dollars on that, but you shall not spend $999 for this and you shall not spend $1,001 for the other." I have absolute confidence in the Secretary, in his good judgment and patriotism, to give him this discretion to spend this money to get the best results, and therefore I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey. Pass the law as it is, and put the money in the hands of the Secretary. It is true that the department says this is the manner in which they propose to use it, specifying the items; and each item was fully considered by the committee and a full hearing was had. Then after the full hearing was completed, then each and every item was taken up, each and every item was considered by the full committee—not a subcommittee—and each and every item was passed by the committee, and the total amount included in each and every section in the bill as reported by the committee by the specific direction of the committee is the total amount of the items passed upon and approved by the members of the committee to make up the several amounts in each section of the bill as reported to the House.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There was a reduction of $210,680 from the estimate of the Secretary. If this bill passes in its present form, how will he know from which items the deductions were made?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The report shows the reductions made.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The Secretary will have to look at the report?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Each item shows for itself.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman admits it will be necessary for the Secretary of Agriculture to go to the report of the committee, does he?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It will not be necessary for him to go to the report of the committee. When he is given the lump sum he might not allot the same amount; he might reduce or increase it to meet emergencies, and I favor giving him that discretion. He will know the amount available and he will allot it to secure best results.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman did proceed on the theory he was not recommending an amount beyond what he should use——

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The gentleman is proceeding upon the theory that the amount which the committee approved was a sufficient amount to be used for the purposes indicated in the provisions of the bill. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported by the Clerk.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Also the amendment to the amendment was read.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MADDEN. To oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MEEKER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 35, noes 40.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey demands tellers.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the request for tellers.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 40.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey demands tellers. All who are in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted.

The Chair proceeded to count.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-six Members are present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 11945, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, and that he presented therewith the names of the absentees for insertion in the Journal and the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and sixty-three Members, a quorum, are present.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. WALSH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The House having by previous order decided that at 5 o'clock the committee should rise and proceed to a matter under the suspension of the rules, I desire to ask that if the hour of 5 o'clock arrives while the Members are passing through the tellers, the committee would have to rise before completing the vote; or would it be completed?

The CHAIRMAN. If the point is insisted on now, the Chair will rule on it.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point that the hour of 5 o'clock has arrived.

Mr. LEVER. I make the point that it has not, by this clock over here.

Mr. WINGO. As a matter of fact, the House did not make any order at all. They agreed it would be in order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I believe that by consulting the RECORD of Saturday it will be found that in the discussion it depended on when the committee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. It is purely a technical proposition.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] will take their places as tellers. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 102.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONTRIBUTIONS BY NATIONAL BANKS TO THE AMERICAN RED CROSS.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to take from the Speaker's desk Senate bill 3911, authorizing the national banks to subscribe to the American National Red Cross, and move to suspend the rules and pass it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the Senate bill 3911 be taken from the Speaker's stand and the rules suspended and the bill passed, and the gentleman from Illinois demands a second.

Mr. GLASS. I ask that the second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois 20.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent, the motion having been made, to see if we can not get more than 20 minutes to a side. It is a very important proposition. I think we ought to have at least 40 minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent that the debate shall be 40 minutes to a side. Is there objection?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, this is a self-evident proposition. It does not require a great deal of explanation, if any at all. The Members may very definitely or quickly determine whether they want to vote for it or against it, and I hope the gentleman will not suggest an extension of the time. Twenty minutes on a side, it seems to me, will be ample. Twenty minutes is more than I shall want on this side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GLASS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 20 minutes. The Clerk will report the bill.

The clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3911) authorizing national banks to subscribe to the American National Red Cross.

Be it enacted, etc., That during the continuance of the state of war now existing it shall be lawful for any national banking association to contribute to the American National Red Cross, out of any net profits otherwise available under the law for the declaration of dividends, such sum or sums as the directors of said association shall deem expedient. Each association shall report to the Comptroller of the Currency within 10 days after the making of any such contribution the amount of such contribution and the amount of net earnings in excess of such contribution. Such report shall be attested by the president or cashier of the association in like manner as the report of the declaration of any dividend.

SEC. 2. That all sums so contributed shall be utilized by the American National Red Cross in furnishing volunteer aid to the sick and wounded of the combatant armies, the voluntary relief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and the relief and mitigation of the suffering caused by the war to people of the United States and their allied nations.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is identical with the bill reported from the House Committee on Banking and Currency, now on the calendar. It is a perfectly self-evident proposition and requires scarcely any explanation. Ordinarily I would not favor such a bill; but in the circumstances it is a war measure, if there ever was a war measure. The bill explicitly provides that the permission granted to national banks to subscribe to the American Red Cross fund shall be only for the duration of the war.

It is needless to remind the House that the Red Cross is a nonsectarian organization. It recognizes no creed, no religion. It is merciful and humanitarian altogether in its conceptions, its functions, and activities. Anybody may belong to it; anybody may contribute to its funds and help in its work, Jew or Gentile, Protestant or Catholic, white or black, Christian or pagan. It is universal in its purpose, its scope, and activities.

I would like to draw the attention of the House for a moment to an extract from a letter by Mr. Henry P. Davison, written on the day before yesterday. Mr. Davison has just returned from the battle front, and he says:

The outstanding feature of the German method at the present time is the effort to terrorize the women, children, and old men at home. While the German troops are making their drive on the front airplanes are bombing, nearly every night, towns behind the lines, with the deliberate and declared purpose of terrorizing civilians.

The purpose of the fight behind the line is to break down the morale of the civilian population to such a point that they will importune their governments for peace. It is the most dastardly, unrighteous, cruel, devilish plan which could be conceived. It is based upon the theory that the killing of four children out of five will induce the mother to implore her government to have the war stopped, that her fifth child may live. It is carried on from the English Channel to the Swiss border and from the Swiss border to the Adriatic, and has resulted in the murder and maiming of thousands of women and children and the driving of hundreds of thousands of terror-stricken from their homes to wherever they might seek refuge.

The people in Europe were simply astounded at the news of the American Red Cross having attained a membership of 23,000,000 adults. We shall need money, and we shall need workers, more and more; and we need always to let it be known to our soldiers and the soldiers of our allies and the peoples behind their lines over in the war zone itself, that the American people are with them heart and soul.

It is to help relieve frightful conditions like that that this measure is presented. Until within the last 10 years national banks were not inhibited from contributing to any cause. The reason why we have a statute on the subject is that some banks inaugurated the reprehensible practice of contributing to party campaign funds, which did not appeal to the sense of propriety or the spirit of American fair play. The situation now is that some of the States, notably New York, Massachusetts, and other large States, have passed laws permitting State banks and trust companies to contribute to Red Cross funds. Other States do not prohibit benevolent contributions by corporations.

National banks, because of the circumstances I have cited, are expressly prohibited from making contributions. That law is founded on good sense and was prompted by a just spirit. Ordinarily I would not be in favor of its modification in any particular. But now there is justification of the proposal. The Red Cross is not only nonsectarian, but is a quasi governmental institution. It has for its president the President of the United States. It has on its board of governors a representative from the State, War, and Navy Departments and from the Treasury and the Department of Justice. Its funds are expended under the strictest scrutiny of representatives of the United States Government, and I think I may confidently appeal to the spirit of this House and to its desire to aid any institution which is an essential and an indispensable part of the effort to win this war to suspend the rules and vote for this bill.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves 14 minutes.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield for a question; yes.

Mr. MEEKER. Is it the opinion of the gentleman that the Red Cross fund can not be raised without this assistance?

Mr. GLASS. I have been assured by officials of the Red Cross that the passage of this bill will, in their judgment, mean as much as $5,000,000 to the total of the fund that will be raised.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Does that mean that contributions to the amount of $5,000,000 will be enforced from the persons who otherwise would not contribute?

Mr. GLASS. I do not think contributions will be "enforced," since this is a permissive proposition. If the stockholders do not desire the directors of banks to make the contribution, they have it in their power to prevent the contribution.

Mr. GORDON. How would they prevent it?

Mr. GLASS. By prohibiting the board of directors from making it.

Mr. GORDON. How can a minority stockholder prevent the directors from making the contribution?

Mr. GLASS. A minority stockholder could not. A minority stockholder in this, as in all matters covering banking business, would have to submit to the majority.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What is meant by this language in the bill, pages 1 and 2:

Each association shall report to the Comptroller of the Currency within 10 days after the making of any such contribution the amount of such contribution and the amount of net earnings in excess of such contribution. Such report shall be attested by the president or cashier of the association in like manner as the report of the declaration of any dividend.

Mr. GLASS. That means additional Government scrutiny, that is all. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MADDEN. So the Comptroller of the Currency is going to direct the contributions of the banks. Mr. Speaker, I yield the 20 minutes I am entitled to to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. DALE], a member of the committee.

Mr. DALE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I think there is no Member within the sound of my voice who does not desire to do everything that can be properly done to carry on this war. In the first place we can by law tax without limit; we can tax corporations, national banks, State banks, trust companies, and all corporations, State and National, without limit. It is a political power that we can use. Now, I would cheerfully vote at this time, or at any future time, to support the Red Cross by direct contributions or appropriations from the Treasury, and that would cover 110,000,000 of people to fill the Treasury of the United States.

I know it is not a gracious thing; it is not a thing that I care to do, get up and oppose this bill without full consideration. But let us analyze it a little bit. I have had recourse to the report of the Comptroller of the Currency. The number of shareholders in national banks is 459,610. That was the number in the last report that was made. Of those there are 138,204 women. I call your attention to the fact that there are many small and large stockholders across the water in the United States Army on the other side.

The national banks have a capital of something over $1,000,000,000. The State banks have a larger capital than have the national banks. I mean the State banks, trust companies, and loan companies. This legislation does not touch them. The gentleman from Virginia says that some of the States have authorized such contributions.

Now, what does this bill do. The national banks are scattered all over the country, but the great banks are in the cities. There are some shares of stock in cities held by individuals in other cities and elsewhere in the United States.

I want to say that the five directors on the average in the country banks own a very small minority of the stock. They are selected because they are generally men of influence in the little town or city, and they come in contact with people, and are supposed to know how to run a bank.

The gentleman from Virginia said it was not prohibited to make contributions for political purposes or church purposes before the amendment to the law.

Mr. GLASS. I did not catch what the gentleman said.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Virginia said it was not prohibited prior to the amendment of the national banking act to make contributions for political purposes or for other purposes if they saw fit. Now, while that is true, they were not prohibited by express law; there never was a contribution made for political purposes by a national bank or for religious purposes but what the people who paid the money could be compelled to pay it back, because it was illegal all the time.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Does the gentleman limit it to national banks? Is not that true with reference to State banks?

Mr. CANNON. I understand it is true. It is true in the State of Illinois. But there are a great many stockholders, nearly half a million in the national banks alone—widows, small trust funds, scattered here and there, farmers, little shopkeepers—and, of course, they did not do much suing to recover the amounts that were illegally given for political, religious, or other purposes not connected with the bank; they did not want to go through the litigation, and, perhaps, go to the Supreme Court of the United States. It became a scandal, and it was from a political standpoint very largely that that scandal was cut out by the roots. I just want to add this: Take it to yourselves, take your little banks, your farmers, representing what is called substantial rural parts of the country——

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman, out of the length of his years of service and wisdom, says that this was a great scandal. Would he mind stating in what campaign the greatest scandal——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I do not recollect what it was, and I do not care. If it was the gentleman's party, his party participated, and if it was my party, the criticism would apply just the same. Let me say to the gentleman that is a little peanutty. [Laughter.] I want to see to it that the widow, the small trust fund, the small fellow, can not be legally deprived of his property by putting it into the power of a board of directors, owning themselves less than the majority of the stock, to spend his property, without his consent.

Mr. GORDON. Or give it away.

Mr. CANNON. Or give it away. When I have stated that I think I have stated substantially the whole thing. I might talk an hour about it, but I wanted to put it to you. If you want money, why do not you let Ford, with his great holdings in banks, as I am told; why do not you let Rockefeller and his great holdings in banks and in corporations; why do not you let the great holdings in the United States Steel be contributed by authorizing the board of directors in these great corporations throughout the United States, with their ten—yes; twenty and thirty—billions of dollars, contribute from their earnings? All of the great holdings and the small holdings in corporations, States or United States, can be reached by law to get revenue for the Treasury of the United States to carry on the war, including the support of the Red Cross.

Mr. GLASS. Because Congress has no authority, I may say, to authorize them, but as a matter of fact they have made these contributions, and Mr. Justice Hughes and Judge Morgan J. O'Brien said they are perfectly legal.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, Mr. Justice Hughes—and who is the other gentleman?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Justice Hughes is sufficient.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know whether Mr. Justice Hughes said it or not. He never said it on the bench. [Applause.]

Mr. GLASS. Does the gentleman mean to intimate that Mr. Justice Hughes said one thing on the bench and another off it?

Mr. CANNON. I am neither defending nor attacking Mr. ex-Justice Hughes, but I say it is not fair to let five directors in a little bank or in a considerable bank, with all of the national banks having a half million stockholders—it is not fair to say that those directors can use the money that belongs to the trust fund, to the widows, and contribute it to any purpose. I believe in protecting the smaller holder.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Give me half a minute more.

Mr. DALE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. One minute more. I understand we are to have a revenue bill yet this session, and if this contribution is not made freely in the United States up to $100,000,000 or to $200,000,000, or any other sum, for the Red Cross, that it needs in performing its function during this war, then I stand ready to vote the money directly from the Treasury. Having said this much, I shall resume my seat, because my time is up. [Applause.]

Mr. DALE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, patriotic? Yes. No more patriotic work is done by any people in all the world than is done by the Red Cross; but why not let the individual citizens of America contribute to the funds of the Red Cross? Why not let the men and women of America, who are willing to contribute, contribute their own funds? Why authorize the national banks of America to contribute the funds of the individuals who own these banks? Why should the Comptroller of the Currency require a report of contributions by national banks to the Red Cross? I do not hold myself responsible for the statement, but I understand that the Comptroller of the Currency requested the national banks of America to contribute to the Red Cross fund, and that many of these banks refused because they were not permitted to do so under the law, and now a law is proposed, coming from the Comptroller of the Currency, to require the banks to do the thing which they refused to do on his request. Every patriotic American is proud if he is able to contribute to the Red Cross fund. Then, why take the right away from him and hand it over to a board of directors who are elected to manage his business? Do you want to give the individual stockholders of the banks an opportunity to say that they have already contributed through their banks and therefore ought not to be called upon for further contributions? That is what this law will do. Instead of increasing the contributions to the Red Cross, the enactment of this law will prevent contributions to the fund, because it will give to every man who is a stockholder in a national bank the excuse that his bank has already made the contribution. [Applause.] I am willing to contribute to the Red Cross fund every time I can, but I do not want to give the powers to the directors of the banks in which I am interested to contribute of the funds that belong to me in their banks. You are making a mistake. You have no right to give Government sanction to a thing of that sort, and you are doing harm instead of good and preventing the collection of a large fund for a patriotic work by preventing patriotic citizens from doing the thing which they want to do and which you by this legislation prevent them from doing.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not the time. All I have to say is that this legislation is uncalled for, unjustified by the facts. Everybody in America is glad to help the Red Cross. Why not give them the opportunity; why not depend upon their patriotic fervor to make the contributions which the Red Cross needs? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am not arguing against the collection of money to aid the Red Cross, but for the Congress of the United States to attempt to authorize the directors of a corporation to give other people's money away is bad legislation. [Applause.] There is no occasion for it; there is no justification for it. No matter whether this bill becomes a law or not, as a director in a national bank I would not vote away the stockholders' money without being authorized by every stockholder of that bank. I do not think any other man has any justification in voting other people's money away. If you by legislation can authorize the directors of a national bank to vote away the fund of that bank by donation, you can give authority to any set of directors representing any corporate organization of this country. The Federal Government has no control over the funds of a national bank further than to see to it that the funds of that bank are used to protect the depositors in that bank. That is all the authority the Federal Government has over those things.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, briefly; I have only three minutes.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. I will be brief. I want to state how my city has paid its quota by the citizens voluntarily organizing a war-chest fund, where 95,000 people subscribed $3,000,000 in five days, and the day we got the report of what the quota was we sent a check in full. I propose to present our plan to the House at the first opportunity——

Mr. FORDNEY. That is too long a question; I have only three minutes, and I could not answer that in my time. But let me tell you, I am ready to give my share to the aid of the Red Cross. I have been aiding it, and I will continue to do so, but I do not want you to authorize a board of directors to give my money away without my consent. Another matter, whether you pass this law or not, if you do pass this law I firmly believe—I am not a lawyer, but that, to me, is but horse sense—that any stockholder in a bank could restrain by injunction the directors of the bank from giving away their money. Why, it is the biggest piece of folly, in my opinion, that has been presented to the Congress of the United States. Nobody refuses to give to the Red Cross who can afford it, but, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] well said, if you pass this law, and a national bank does subscribe to the Red Cross fund, you have given the stockholders an argument to say, "I have given through a national bank, I am a stockholder, and I will give no more." I am opposed to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has only two minutes remaining. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to relieve from criminal responsibility directors in national banks who give away the funds of the bank. It does not, in my judgment, legally authorize the directors to do that thing. It is proposed to authorize these bank directors to levy upon unwilling men, or upon men who have already donated toward a very worthy purpose all the money they feel they are able to donate, to coerce and compel them to pay more. It is either that or it is nothing. In legal effect it does relieve the directors from Federal prosecution under the law which was passed some years ago by Congress making it a crime for men in the capacity of directors to give away the funds of the stockholders for whom they are trustees. I wholly disagree with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] in his statement that every banking corporation or any other private corporation can give to any purpose, however worthy, the funds of the stockholders. It is an ultra vires act; it is unlawful; and the money so donated can be recovered back by a private suit of an objecting stockholder. The fact that he can not afford to bring that suit, because he would be penalized in expenses for lawyers' fees a great deal more than his share of the enforced contribution, will illustrate the injustice of such a statute as this. Widows and orphans who have stock in these banking corporations can be forced by the directors to contribute. Imbeciles, idiots, and lunatics who are under guardianship where the guardian is the holder in trust of stock that came by gift or descent, perhaps, to his wards are forced to contribute, and that guardian would be subject to removal and his accounts would be corrected and his bond held liable if he made a donation of his ward's funds for any purpose, however worthy. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his courtesy. I do not believe anybody is more interested in the Red Cross than I am. I was one of the original incorporators of that corporation. I have been one ever since. I am always eager, as every man here is, to do everything we can for the magnificent work it is accomplishing; but, Mr. Speaker, I do not like to see the great popularity of that superb organization used to break down one of the most wholesome principles which has been established in recent years in the United States. [Applause.]

I think one of the healthiest growths in the public conscience of recent years has been that the directors of corporations are trustees and that they have no right to give away their stockholders' money; and I am unwilling, even for such a splendid purpose as this, that the bank directors should be given the right to give away money which does not belong to them, and that they should have the glory and the credit of a generosity which belongs to their stockholders.

The gentleman says that certain States have authorized such acts. My State of Massachusetts has authorized corporations to give away funds for war purposes. But the bill provides that any stockholder can, by writing, express his opposition to such an act, and then it shall not apply to him. That preserves the rights of individuals. Why not insert such a provision here? But for Congress to come forward and suddenly contradict the policy which has been settled and growing among the people for so many years, and use the glorious work of the Red Cross to excuse it, is, I think, a mistaken and an injurious policy. Let us vote the money directly from the Treasury, if it is necessary as a war measure, but let us not permit officers of corporations to give away what does not belong to them. It is very hard to vote against such a bill. The fear of being accused of lukewarmness toward the Red Cross will compel many to vote for it who thoroughly disapprove the principle. Disagreeable as the duty is, I shall not shirk it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I ought not to say so, but I take leave to observe that no reason has been presented in the discussion that has at all altered my view of the proposition. I have no doubt the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] is a sound constitutional lawyer. Certainly he knows better than I, who am not a lawyer at all, whether it is "criminal" or wise to pass this bill; but I have, within the past two days, read an exceedingly well-considered opinion by former Justice Hughes on the subject, and likewise a clear, cogent argument by Judge Morgan J. O'Brien, of the Supreme Court of New York State, and I venture, at least, to agree with them in the belief that it would be legal, if Congress shall pass an act to make it so, for national banks, as it is now for corporations generally, to aid an essential enterprise in a great war which has put at stake the Nation's very existence. It is not as if we were permitting banks to contribute their funds merely to "a worthy cause," but to an indispensable arm of the military service, potentially effective as a part of the scheme to win a war that involves the life of these very corporations and the value of their property.

I have in the files of the Banking and Currency Committee, received within the last 10 days, scores of letters from national and State banks protesting against the proposition to insure, in a limited way, the deposits of those who put money in the banks. I have letters from hundreds of State banks and trust companies protesting against the so-called Phelan bill, which this House has passed, giving national banks fiduciary powers and trust functions, but I have not in the files of the committee a single protest from a single stockholder in a single national bank in the United States against this proposition to permit national banks to contribute to the Red Cross fund. That is, as it seems to me, conclusive as to the feeling on the subject.

Mr. GORDON. Maybe they have contributed all they are able to.

Mr. GLASS. Maybe they are like some others who have contributed individually, but are willing to contribute collectively, also. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said that he had contributed already and was willing to contribute all that he could, but protested against the contribution of banks in which he has an interest.

May I be permitted to say that I have contributed not all I can contribute, perhaps; I doubt if any of us ever contribute all we really can. But I am willing for the banks in which I am interested to contribute every farthing of my profits in them to the Red Cross fund, or any other fund that seems essential to win this war. And if the stockholders or the widows and orphans or imbeciles have not protested——

Mr. GORDON. They could not. They are under guardianship.

Mr. GLASS. Why should gentlemen here protest for them?

Mr. Speaker, the American Red Cross for the effective purposes of this war is an essential institution. It ought to be supported in every conceivable way. The banks, and I say it confidently, because there has been no protest from any banking source, are willing to do this thing, and Congress, therefore, should not object to its being done. The only bank officials, the only bank stockholders, that I know anything of, who have protested, have been the gentlemen who have spoken against the bill here to-day.

Mr. GORDON. I will say to the gentleman that I am not a stockholder in any national bank. I do not own a cent of stock.

Mr. GLASS. Well, I am; and I am willing that every dollar of my profits should be appropriated to the Red Cross, if it is essential, aside from my individual subscription. When men are giving their sons to fight and, perhaps, die for their country, it seems to me unfortunate that gentlemen should get up here and protest against a bank being permitted to make a contribution to the Red Cross.

I hope it will be the judgment of this body, as it was of the other body, that banks, for the period of the war, shall be authorized, if they please to do so—because there is no compulsion about it—to subscribe to this fund out of the profits of the institutions. And then if there is any stockholder who wants to split hairs, or whose greed or penchant for technical dispute shall lead him to protest, let him go to the officers of the bank——

Mr. PURNELL. Does the gentleman believe the success of the Red Cross drive depends upon contributions from these banks?

Mr. GLASS. I have stated to the House that officials of the Red Cross Society have said to me that the passage of this bill to-day involves, in their judgment, $5,000,000 to the general fund of the Red Cross.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. I will.

Mr. MEEKER. He does not mean to say that the people will not put up the $5,000,000 if it is not procured in this way?

Mr. GLASS. I have said that there will possibly be a difference of $5,000,000 in the funds of the Red Cross if this bill does not pass. The American people are generous. The stockholders of the national banks are generous. I do not believe you could get 3 per cent of them to petition Congress not to pass this bill.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Why would not the gentleman then put in an amendment such as was put in the Massachusetts statute, saying that if the stockholder objects his money shall not be given away by the directors?

Mr. GLASS. If there is any stockholder of a bank who is close-fisted enough to object to the paltry contribution which his percentage would represent, when the majority of the stockholders feel it is essential to make the contribution, I would not take the trouble to relieve that fellow by law.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But suppose the share of stock held by this fellow you had the slight opinion of was that of a poor woman, and that it was her only estate in life?

Mr. GLASS. What would be the percentage of any poor woman who owned $100 in a national bank? It would be 10 cents.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is not a question of percentage. It is a question of principle. [Applause.]

Mr. GLASS. It is "a question of principle" that never was put into statutory law until 40 years after national banks were established, and only then because of scandalous abuses by politicians on banking boards. It was not such a great "principle" during that long period as to be regarded with deep concern or apprehension, and all this talk about "widows and orphans" is to prop a lame case. A widow with $100 in a national bank would have to pay about 10 cents, and she would pay it, too, with as much cheerfulness as some of the gentlemen who are protesting in behalf of the widows. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired. All time has expired. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair——

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a roll call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands a roll call. Those who desire a roll call on this bill will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Evidently a sufficient number have risen. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of suspending the rules and passing the bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 194, nays 70, answered "present" 2, not voting 164, as follows:

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4193. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 4194. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3935. An act to prohibit the sale, manufacture, and importation of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii during the period of the war, except as hereinafter provided.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, the following Members were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD: Mr. GLASS, Mr. CALDWELL, Mr. MADDEN, Mr. BELL, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, Mr. CANNON, Mr. SIEGEL, and Mr. GORDON.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move to correct the Journal of Saturday's proceedings on page 6742 by striking out the language and inserting other language which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MADDEN moved that, notwithstanding the disagreement of the House to all Senate amendments, the conferees be instructed to urge the elimination of the following language from the amendment of the Senate No. 52: "the annual salaries fixed by law for clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service, railway postal clerks of grade 1 to grade 10, inclusive, shall be increased $200 per annum"; and to insist upon the insertion in lieu thereof of the following language:

"That clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $1,000; second grade, salary $1,100; third grade, salary $1,200; fourth grade, salary $1,300; fifth grade, salary $1,400; sixth grade, salary $1,500. Clerks and carriers shall be promoted successively to the sixth grade: Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service who are in grades 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, under the act of March 2, 1907, as amended, shall pass automatically from such grades and the salaries they receive thereunder to the new grades 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, with the salaries provided for such grades in this act.

"That the salaries of railway postal clerks shall be graded as follows: Grade 1 at $1,100, grade 2 at $1,200, grade 3 at $1,300, grade 4 at $1,400, grade 5 at $1,500, grade 6 at $1,600, grade 7 at $1,700, grade 8 at $1,800, grade 9 at $1,900, grade 10 at $2,000.

"The Postmaster General shall classify and fix salaries of railway postal clerks, under such regulations as he may prescribe, in the grades provided by law; and for the purpose of organization and of establishing maximum grades to which promotions may be made successively, as hereinafter provided, he shall classify railway post offices, terminal railway post offices, and transfer offices with reference to their character and importance in three classes, with salary grades as follows:

"Class A, $1,100 to $1,400; class B, $1,100 to $1,500; and Class C, $1,100 to $1,700. He may assign to the offices of division superintendents and chief clerks such railway postal clerks as may be necessary, and fix their salaries within the grades provided by law without regard to the classification of railway post offices: Provided, That railway postal clerks shall pass automatically from the grades they are in and the salaries they receive under the act of August 24, 1912, to the corresponding grade, with salaries provided for in this act."

during their consideration of said Senate amendment No. 52, to all of which the House disagreed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on making the correction as stated.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings as amended was approved.

On motion of Mr. GLASS, the bill (H. R. 9457) authorizing national banks to make contributions to the American National Red Cross was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 21, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission submitting estimate of appropriation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1113); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Sterling Basin, at Greenport, N. Y., with a view to securing adequate width and depth (H. Doc. No. 1114); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SHERWOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 3799) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 579), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MASON: A bill (H. R. 12190) to punish mob violence directed against persons charged with violation of the laws of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 12191) to provide for free carriage of first-class mail matter to and from persons in the Army and Navy of the United States; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. NORTON: A bill (H. R. 12192) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals, to determine the practicability of their utilization as a fuel and in producing commercial products; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 21, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we bless Thee that in all the long and weary and tragic months through which we have come, as we have pressed forward in the performance of our high mission, we have had no question about the pureness of Thy motive, the unselfishness of our design, and the full and free committal of ourselves to the rights of men. We believe that Thou hast been leading us on. We pray that Thou wilt continue to lead us. Bless those who represent us on the bloody field of battle, and those who guide in the affairs of nations, and those who are delivering their strength of means and life to the great end of establishing peace and righteousness among men. Bless us this day in the performance of our duty. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore assumed the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, May 17, 1918, was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced his signature to the following enrolled bills which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House:

S. 2123. An act to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia;

S. 4409. An act to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes";

H. R. 8696. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919; and

H. R. 11628. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia," approved September 25, 1914.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, a few days ago I received and had read into the RECORD an editorial from a newspaper in a neighboring State to that of South Dakota relative to the subscriptions of the State for the third liberty loan. I now send to the desk a telegram with reference to the subscriptions to the second Red Cross war fund, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK., May 20, 1918.

Hon. THOMAS STERLING,
Washington, D. C.:

With every city, village, and township under perfect organization, drive for second Red Cross war fund was begun this morning at 8 o'clock in every community in South Dakota. At 6 o'clock to-night the State campaign is concluded with a subscription of 170 per cent of our allotment. Our home county (Minnehaha) wins the honor with more than 300 per cent subscription of its allotment. South Dakota is the first State to go over the top.

GEO. R. DOUTHIT,
Vice Chairman for South Dakota.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Spokane, Wash., with reference to the zone system. I wish to read an extract from the letter of the secretary transmitting it:

You will notice that it is a protest against the zone system of postage as applied to periodicals. I want to say for your information that this action was not taken hastily by the chamber of commerce, but after the most careful consideration.

Then he names the committee who had charge of it. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I also present a resolution of the Board of County Commissioners of Skamania County, State of Washington, urging the importance of the survey and the construction of national military roads as a matter of national preparedness. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I yesterday received a letter, which is signed by Ed Gammons, publicity director of the International Workers' Defense League, of San Francisco, Cal. This gentleman seems to think that I have recently done an injustice to an organization called the I. W. W. in some remarks I made upon the floor of the Senate concerning that association. I have no wish to do injustice to anyone, even to that organization, and therefore ask leave to print in the RECORD without reading the criticisms which this gentleman makes of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL WORKERS' DEFENSE LEAGUE,
San Francisco, Cal., May 1, 1.

DEAR MR. SENATOR: I notice in my copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, containing the report of the discussion in the Senate on the punishment of unlawful associations' bill, that you stated that an I. W. W. organizer stated before the Federal commission appointed by President Wilson to investigate the Mooney case said that murder and destruction of property was justified. You further stated that he went before the commission to protest that Mooney had not been convicted according to the forms of the Constitution and the law.

You inadvertently have done us an injustice. The I. W. W. have never been identified with the Mooney case here. None of them appeared before the commission. The incident you referred to occurred in one of the sittings of the Commission on Industrial Relations, of which Mr. Frank P. Walsh was chairman. The organizer in question was Vincent St. John. You will find the portion of the evidence you referred to on page 1452 of the report of that commission. As you will see by our letterhead, the unions defending Mr. Mooney are all identified with the American Federation of Labor.

I hope you will correct this, as it is liable to prejudice other Congressmen against us who are unacquainted with the facts.

Respectfully,

ED GAMMONS, Publicity Director.

Mr. NUGENT. I send to the desk resolutions adopted by the Council of Defense of Shoshone County, Idaho, which I ask may be read and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

Whereas our country is engaged in a great war in which every ideal of government and social life we hold dear is threatened with destruction and our national life as the world's great Republic is at stake; and

Whereas the shortage of labor in shipyards and factories, mills and mines, forests and farms, is appalling; and

Whereas interned aliens are living in idleness at public expense and thousands of able-bodied Americans of all classes and conditions are spending their time aimlessly and without serious purpose; and

Whereas the vagrancy laws of the States generally are not sufficiently drastic to meet the crisis; and

Whereas the flower of our young men are being conscripted to endure the hardships of war and face death upon the battle fields of Europe in order that government of the people, for the people, and by the people shall not perish from the earth. Be it

Resolved by the Council of Defense of Shoshone County, State of Idaho, in regular session assembled:

First. That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to at once enact a uniform law, applicable to all the States, sufficiently comprehensible and drastic to control and perfect the labor situation; that all interned aliens be compelled to work and labor, under armed guard if necessary, in lumber camps, in mills and mines, and on farms, under such conditions as may be humane, receiving such wages as may be just.

Second. That in like manner it be enacted that our own idle people, rich and poor alike, be compelled to work at least five days weekly in some useful occupation, the results of which will help us win the war by adding to our stores of food and fuel, munitions of war, and supplies of every kind necessary for the well-being of our soldiers in trench or battle field, fighting in the air, or wherever duty calls; that this work may be done, and well done, in order that unlimited streams of our great abundance may steadily flow overseas to cheer and comfort and sustain our soldiers and the equally brave men and women of our magnificent Red Cross army; be it further

Resolved, That during the period of war all "red-light districts" in the United States be closed; that the inmates be interned in camps over the country; that under proper supervision and control they be employed in making clothing and other supplies for Army use and in producing anything that may be useful, permitting them to live under humane conditions and allowing them just compensation, at the same time protecting them from vicious influences; and in this connection we suggest that if some such plan be adopted and executed not only will labor conditions be helped but the general health will be better protected and humanity uplifted, and after three, or even two, years, if the war lasts so long, it is more than probable that a large percentage of these unfortunate creatures will be fitted for and return to the decent life; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded at once to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and that they be requested to use their best endeavors to secure the desired congressional legislation.

Mr. OWEN presented a petition of Local Branch, National Woman's Party, of Tulsa, Okla., and a petition of sundry citizens of Tulsa, Okla., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have been necessarily absent from the city for a week, and this morning I received in the mail a very important letter, which I desire to present as a petition and ask that it be published in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OPPOSED TO WOMAN SUFFRAGE,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1918.

Senator BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TILLMAN: Instead of allowing the Susan B. Anthony suffrage amendment to be voted upon by the Senate last Friday, as they agreed, the advocates of this force bill submitted a table, cleverly designed to properly impress the Senate with the number of alleged suffrage "victories" scored in 1917.

This table was introduced into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and is on page 6306. We sincerely hope that you will consider it carefully and observe the following facts:

1. There are 32 alleged "victories" listed.

2. Every one of them, with the single exception of New York, was a legislative victory.

3. The State of Ohio is credited with three of these "victories"—in the legislature—yet nothing whatever is said of the fact that the voters of Ohio by a majority of 146,120 defeated and repealed these "victories" on November 6.

4. The State of Maine is credited with two legislative victories, submitting suffrage to the voters, but not a word is said of the fact that the voters of Maine on September 10 defeated woman suffrage at the polls by 2 to 1.

5. The State of Indiana is credited for three of these alleged "victories"—in the legislature—but not a word is said of the fact that the Supreme Court of Indiana has declared these "victories" unconstitutional.

The table was prepared by the official suffrage organ and was introduced into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the express purpose of influencing the United States Senate. It is a fair sample of the "purified politics" being used to forward the Susan B. Anthony force bill, in that it deliberately suppresses every unfavorable fact about these alleged "victories."

Moreover, why was the United States Senate told nothing in this table about the greatest suffrage victory in 1917—the enfranchisement of 26,000,000 women in Russia—the socialist-suffragist Republic that has deserted America and the allies in this war?

In view of the suffrage table we feel that you will be interested in the facts on this question and therefore inclose a table of all the victories and defeats of woman suffrage at the polls.

It shows that woman suffrage in 25 years won but 11 times at the polls, by an aggregate majority of only 199,214.

On the other hand, in five years woman suffrage has been defeated 18 times at the polls, by an aggregate majority of 1,346,597.

There is no mathematical fact more certain than that the majority of the voters of the United States are opposed to woman suffrage, and the sole object of the Susan B. Anthony amendment is to disfranchise these voters on this question.

The advocates of this bill believe that it will enable them to subject the members of 36 legislatures to so much lobbying and political nagging that the will of the majority of the women and the verdict of the voters at the polls will be ignored.

The suffrage table itself is the best confirmation of this fact, showing as it does that these legislative "victories" upon which they base their greatest claims by no means represent popular sentiment and that when submitted to popular vote these "victories" are emphatically repudiated by the voters at the polls in the vast majority of cases.

Respectfully,

ALICE H. WADSWORTH, President.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 130) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as the "Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 449) thereon.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 4108) to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits of arts, sciences, and industries, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3264) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Harrison H. Frain, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3267) to correct the military record of William Harman, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4404) repealing that portion of the Indian appropriation act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. L., pp. 1015, 1035), which relates to the disposal of the surplus unallotted lands within the Blackfeet Reservation, in Montana, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 451) thereon.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. TILLMAN. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 10854) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 448) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the report accompanying the bill be printed in the RECORD so that Senators may examine it, as I expect to call up the bill to-morrow and put it on its passage.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. TILLMAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10854) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, reports the same to the Senate with various amendments and as amended recommend its passage.

The amount recommended in this bill is $1,587,656,540.84, or $202,840,124 more than carried by the bill as passed by the House of Representatives.

The naval appropriation act approved March 4, 1917, carried appropriations totaling $516,698,802.08, and that has been supplemented by three deficiency bills, bringing the total current year appropriations up to $1,650,709,668.70. This bill falls $63,053,127.86 short of that sum.

The increase of $202,840,124 over the House bill is accounted for as follows:

Aviation	$32,340,150
State marine schools	25,000
Transportation, Bureau of Navigation	6,900,000

BARTHOLOMEW BAYOU BRIDGE, ARKANSAS (S. REPT. NO. 450).

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9715) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew in Ashley County, Wilmot Township, State of Arkansas. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ILLINOIS MEMORIAL COIN.

Mr. OWEN. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 8764) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 14, to strike out the word "minor" before the word "coins" and insert in lieu thereof "subsidiary silver," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, as soon as practicable, and in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union as a State, there shall be coined at the mints of the United States, silver 50-cent pieces to the number of 100,000, such 50-cent pieces to be of the standard troy weight, composition, diameter, device, and design, as shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and said 50-cent pieces shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value.

SEC. 2. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purpose, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized: Provided, That the Government shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. LEWIS subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senate has just passed a proposed act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union. My colleague [Mr. SHERMAN] and myself jointly moved for its passage. I want now to thank the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], chairman of the Banking Committee, who presented this matter, for the haste and promptitude with which the measure was presented, and to thank the whole Senate for unanimously allowing it at this time to go through, when it could, of course, have been postponed by a single objection.

Mr. President, this act of legislation has for its object the striking off of an appropriate coin to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union. I think that I may be permitted at this time to invite the attention of the Senate to the propriety of this tribute to that illustrious State.

At this day, sir, more than a hundred thousand of her sons are moving to the fields of conflict in foreign lands. Thousands of others are encamping at home territory, preparatory to crossing the seas to offer all that they have for the cause which this Republic represents. Her women are yielding their hearts' love—their children—and giving the full of woman's sacrifice. It is history to every Senator sitting here that of all States in the Union that were torn in body and shattered in heart Illinois was not exceeded by any in her endurances at the time of the Civil War. The question of the day, misunderstood by all, over which we spent so much of blood and sacrificed so greatly of everything, finally culminated, sir, into the present concrete union of love and united loyalty. Sir, however much those who were led by Douglas or those who followed Lincoln might have severed State and home in their differences in that hour, the sons of those men, forgetful of the past, have now joined in one great union of every labor and of every offering to the common cause of our Republic for which we went to war. Mr. President, we of Illinois now celebrate the admission of that State into the Union and its living for 100 years the renowned life of its history. The Senate has paid its tribute by allowing this bill to be passed. This act is a certification by the Congress of the United States, among other things, that Illinois has been loyal in every hour of every test. At this particular time I could not allow this measure to pass, carrying as it does the tribute of the Senate to the State, without also calling the attention of the Senate to the sacrifice the State has made, the credit it reflects upon the Union, the honor it is to the Republic, and the glory it is to the world.

Mr. President, we cast no reflection upon any State by comparisons; but I express my feeling that when the present cataclysm is ended and the world shall look into the new sky for some guiding star to light the course of those who will remold the future, the prophets of the coming day will turn their eyes to America and behold in the distance, among other planets, the great State of Illinois and, flaming by her side, the inspiring image of her immortal Lincoln.

I want to thank the Senate for the passing of this measure, and to express my appreciation of its tribute.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. From the Committee on Education and Labor I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4557) to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

This bill was introduced by me on yesterday, having been prepared by the Committee on Education and Labor really, and is a substitute for Senate bill 4284, each bill being a bill to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States. As the original bill, 4284, will need no further consideration, I ask that the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from its further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that Senate bill 4284 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3911) authorizing national banks to subscribe to the American National Red Cross.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MOON, Mr. BELL, Mr. ROUSE, Mr. STEENERSON, and Mr. MADDEN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7634) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERWOOD, Mr. RUSSELL, and Mr. LANGLEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the life and public services of the Hon. John H. Capstick, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3935) to prohibit the sale, manufacture, and importation of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii during the period of the war, except as hereinafter provided, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ATROCITIES ON WEST COAST OF MEXICO.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have here a clipping from the Oakland (Cal.) Tribune of May 14 in relation to Mexican horrors on the Pacific coast and what the Germans are alleged to be doing. I should like to have the Secretary read it—it is very short—with a view of calling it to the attention of the proper department of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

MEXICAN HORRORS HUN BORN—REFUGEES TELL OF CRUELTIES.

A PACIFIC PORT, May 14.

Terrible and ghastly accounts of atrocities on the west coast of Mexico, instigated by German resident agents there, were authorized to-day by naval officers here, coincident with the arrival of the British steamer Violet, under the escort of an American warship, after a thrilling experience by the crew at Mazatlan, where efforts were made to prevent its departure.

A Federal account of the plight that the American mining men are in comes vouched for by reliable authorities. The men are held by the State troops of Tepic, south of Mazatlan, for tribute, and reminders that tribute is wanted are sent every little while to the American authorities. They consist of fingers purporting to be those of the captives.

The first demand called for a ransom of $5,000, which was paid. The second demand was met by the friends of the prisoners, and then another demand for $10,000 came, with another ghastly memento. The State Department at Washington now has this case in hand. The Tepic troops are reported in revolt and only this week have seized the important Tepic State ports of San Blas and Las Penas.

German raider reports are received at Mazatlan daily through the Mexican radio stations, the Government subsidized press there given daily accounts of the war, it is reported. The German papers inform the people of Mexico that the allies are struggling, fighting among each other, torn with anarchy, and that the victory of Germany can be expected at any time. The Germans also are said to make every possible use of the blacklist, inciting the Mexican people against this country by misrepresenting the blacklist laws.

A formidable warship, equipped with full sea stores and armed with 4.7-inch guns, is reported at Mazatlan awaiting for a dash to the open sea. The ship is the old Mexican gunboat Morelos, sunk by rebels in 1914, that recently was floated and overhauled at great cost. The German firm of Metcher & Co. is said to have taken a leading part in salvaging the ship. Nominally the Morelos is under Mexican control, but the American authorities are watching it constantly in the fear that it may dart to sea at the first opportunity and begin privateering work for the German cause.

The Americans say that the Germans at Mazatlan constantly brag of their knowledge of the warships on the Pacific.

Heavy fighting at Acapulco, the most severely important place on the Mexican west coast, is reported continuing. A recent disturbance there resulted in 100 casualties among the natives, the Americans and British there barely escaping to the protection of the warships. American consul at that port reported the situation safe for his charges.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has had this item read and that the attention of Senators is to be called to the situation on our southern border and on the Pacific coast as well. There is no question at all that the most dangerous propaganda is now being circulated to the south of us. It is the hiding place for conspirators, anarchists, propagandists, and sympathizers with the enemies of our country. While on the Pacific coast I was told by a prominent official of this Government that he suspected that every wireless message which was sent by him to Washington or up and down the coast was caught up in Mexico. For what purpose Senators may conjecture.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Just one moment, Senator, and I will yield. Men whom I have personally known to be intriguers in Mexican revolutionary movements are on our border and are said to be visiting the so-called Mexican Republic in the interest of German propaganda and German usefulness to our enemies. I simply desire publicly to thank the Senator from Connecticut for calling the attention of the Senate through these representations to a condition of affairs on our southern border that demands and should receive the attention of the American Government. The border of Mexico is the hotbed of anarchy and disorder, and the rights of our citizens are ruthlessly trampled upon.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I hope the Senator from Colorado will pardon me. I had intended to yield when he first addressed the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I merely wish to add to what the Senator from Michigan has said, that there is a relieving feature to the situation to which he has referred in the fact that the representatives of our Government also catch and utilize all wireless messages from Mexico.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; that is probably true; but it is nevertheless a most distressing thing to think that a wireless message may be sent out by our officials only to be caught up and turned over to the enemies of our country now in Mexico. Why we should not give our attention to the disorder upon our southern border, and just across the border in Mexico, is beyond my comprehension. Perhaps this is being done, and I would not willingly add to the burdens now so heavily resting on the shoulders of the President. I know that intriguers are there at work. The money of our enemies is being used freely in Mexico, and it will takes lives and blood and money to pay for the tolerance which we are now showing.

I sincerely hope that something more may come of the suggestion made in this article which has been read from the Secretary's desk and from what little I may have said than a mere passing thought.

RENTAL OF PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia, which were, on page 1, lines 3 and 4, to strike out "adjournment sine die of the present session of the Congress" and insert: "expiration of one year after a treaty of peace shall have been definitely concluded between the United States and the Imperial German Government"; on page 1, line 4, after "order," to insert: ", decree, or judgment"; on page 1, line 5, after "estate," to insert: "in the District of Columbia"; on page 1, line 5, after "oral," to insert: "or written"; on page 1, in lines 10 and 11, to strike out ", except on the ground that" and insert: "which are not inconsistent herewith, unless"; on page 1, in line 11, and in line 1, page 2, to strike out "has failed to take reasonable care of the premises, or"; on page 2, line 1, after "guilty," to insert: "on the premises"; on page 2, line 2, to strike out "is" and insert: "constitutes"; on page 2, line 2, to strike out "amounts to"; on page 2, line 2, to strike out "disturbance" and insert: "breach"; on page 2, in lines 3 and 4, to strike out "of adjoining or neighboring occupiers or a violation of law" and insert: ", or other misdemeanor or crime"; on page 2, line 4, to strike out "reasonably" and insert: "necessarily"; on page 2, line 5, after "occupation," to insert: "either"; on page 2, line 6, to strike out "family" and insert: "wife, children, or dependents"; on page 2, line 6, after "while," to insert: "he is"; on page 2, line 6, after "with," to insert: "any branch of"; on page 2, line 7, to strike out "disposed of" and insert: "sold"; on page 2, line 9, after "order," to insert: ", decree, or judgment"; on page 2, line 10, after "order," to insert: ", decree, or judgment"; on page 2, line 10, to strike out "may" and insert: "shall"; on page 2, line 11, after "order," to insert: ", decree, or judgment"; on page 2, line 13, after "order," where it first occurs, to insert: ", decree, or judgment"; on page 2, line 13, after "order," where it occurs the second time, to insert: ", decree, or judgment"; on page 2, line 15, to strike out ": Provided, That" and insert: "; and"; on page 2, line 15, to strike out "judicial"; on page 2, line 15, after "remedies," to insert: ", at law or in equity,"; on page 2, line 16, after "oral," to insert: "or written"; on page 2, after line 21, to insert: "That the term 'real estate' as herein used shall be construed to include any and all land, any building, any part of any building, house, or dwelling, any apartment, room, suite of rooms, and every other improvement or structure whatsoever on land situated and being in the District of Columbia."

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution as just reported by the Secretary. I may say that the amendments proposed are merely formal, I think, except in one case, and that is the first amendment to the joint resolution by which the House of Representatives proposes to extend the operation of the joint resolution during the period of the war and one year thereafter, while the joint resolution as passed by the Senate provided only for its operation during the present session of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there was so much confusion in the Chamber that I could not distinctly hear what the Senator from Delaware said; but as I caught it, the only change proposed to the joint resolution by the House of Representatives, outside of a mere change of verbiage, is in relation to the length of time of its operation. As I understand, the joint resolution as it passed the Senate was to remain in force only until the close of this session of Congress.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is quite correct.

Mr. SMOOT. While the House has amended it so that it will remain in force for one year after the close of the war.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the passage of the joint resolution in that form conflict with the bill which has been passed by both Houses covering this same subject and which it is expected will be enacted into law at this session?

Mr. SAULSBURY. By no means, Mr. President. The effect of the House amendment will be, as I construe it, to continue the provisions of this joint resolution until such time as they are superseded by the more general legislation which is proposed in the House bill which was sent to the Senate and which the Senate passed in a radically amended form. Of course, the provisions of that bill, which cover practically all cases of rent profiteering and deal comprehensively with the subject will supersede the provisions of this joint resolution when that legislation shall have been finally enacted.

I see no objection to the amendment of the House, assuming that the legislation now under consideration by the conference committee will be passed, and I rather think that the joint resolution in its present form is somewhat preferable to the joint resolution as it passed the Senate.

The matter has been considered this morning by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and they concurred in this view and authorized me to move the concurrence of the Senate in the amendments of the House.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator one question. I gave no particular consideration to the joint resolution which was passed by the Senate, but, if I comprehend it as just stated by the Senator, it continues against the will of a landlord an existing lease upon a residence until a year after the war.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It maintains the status of the landlord and tenant on the same terms as now exist.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It really attempts to force upon the landlord a contract which he himself has not voluntarily made, does it not?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator may possibly construe it in that way. It really suspends the landlord's remedy for ouster and dispossessing the tenant where the tenant pays his rent regularly and performs the duties of a good tenant.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I give no consideration as to whether it is within the power of Congress to do that; but, if it is done, it seems to me that provision ought to be made for a state of facts where, for instance, a landlord has made a lease for a year, say, and there is a mortgage on the property which falls due at the end of that year, and the landlord's only hope of saving his property is to sell it in the market in order to pay the mortgage and prevent the foreclosure of the mortgage. Unless a provision to cover such a case is put in this joint resolution or is provided for in a subsequent resolution we will be putting the landlord in the position where he has no remedy at all; the tenant continues the existing lease at the existing price; the man who holds the mortgage on the property forecloses the mortgage while it is in the hands of the tenant, and the landlord loses the whole thing; he is deprived of his market to sell his property and pay his mortgage, as it seems to me. I have, however, given the subject no particular consideration.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hope so.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is no interference with the right of sale at all, except that the tenure of the present tenant is continued pending the adoption of more comprehensive legislation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; but why does not that to a large extent deprive the landlord of a market for the sale of his property, because it can only be sold subject to a future year's lease and the new purchaser can not get possession of it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is a special provision, I may say, in the joint resolution allowing a bona fide purchaser to buy for his own occupancy.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And then the tenant can be evicted?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The tenant can be evicted under those circumstances.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

Mr. SAULSBURY. We tried to provide for cases which seemed somewhat along the line indicated by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator as to the status of the general bill, and why it is necessary, inasmuch as that bill has passed both Houses and is now in conference, as I understand, to take up this joint resolution, which is merely temporary?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The necessity for this temporary legislation is to preserve the status of the tenants in the District who have been practically brought into a condition of panic by the notices which they have received that they will be evicted, and by the efforts of so-called rent profiteers to compel tenants to buy, if they can buy, and to raise the rent if the tenants remain on the property.

Mr. McCUMBER. Could we not get the general law through about as quickly as we could get this joint resolution through?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I may call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the only thing we need in order to get this legislation through is the agreement of the Senate to the motion which I have made, which is to concur in the House amendments.

The reason for doing it is possibly obvious. The House bill and the Senate bill to cure this condition, which all admit must be cured, proceed along entirely different lines in their methods of curing the evil. It will require, doubtless, a very great effort on the part of the conferees to agree on a bill, and in the meantime the condition of tenants in this city appeals to the sympathies of one from the testimony which has been adduced.

Mr. McCUMBER. In a nutshell, then, the necessity for immediate action upon this joint resolution is due to the fact that there will probably be considerable delay in arriving at an agreement by the conferees on the general measure.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There will doubtless be considerable delay, but the necessity is due to the present condition of tenants in the District.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator, in regard to the joint resolution, if, so far as its legality is concerned, there is the slightest difference between this case and the power of Congress to pass a law saying that A shall rent his property to B for a certain price, whether he wants to do so or not?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not think so.

Mr. KELLOGG. And if the Senator considers that the Congress has any power to pass such legislation?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, my belief is that Congress can pass this act, particularly under the war power. I also think that Congress might suspend civil remedies—of course, not taking property. The only thing that this joint resolution proposes to do is, pending the consideration of comprehensive legislation, to preserve a condition in the District so that possibly, if one were to speak broadly, the operations of the Government may proceed. I think the court might base the necessity of this proposed act on the idea that it was necessary to so control the property in the District that employees of the Government might be comfortably housed while performing their duties.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is, of course, then, perfectly evident that Congress can simply take the property of A and give it to B; there is not any doubt about that, is there?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I myself am not a believer in the commandeering of property unless it is absolutely necessary, but I do not think this goes that far.

Mr. KELLOGG. This does not propose to pay any compensation at all for the taking, except whatever rent may have been heretofore paid.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SAULSBURY. With pleasure.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think this joint resolution, if adopted, may work a great hardship on some people in the District; and why not let it remain unacted upon until it can be determined whether the general bill to which reference has been made can be enacted into law? A man came to me this morning who said he would be seriously affected by this joint resolution. There is a mortgage held on his property, which he has rented to a tenant. He is a poor man, and since this joint resolution passed he has been trying to sell the property to get his money back, but the tenant refuses to let anybody go in to see the property. The tenant is going to hold on under this proposed legislation and will not let anybody see it, and says that she will fight the owner and fight everybody else. So if he attempts to sell it there will be no market for it, because nobody will buy it under the circumstances, and really this man's property will go to waste.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. There is no question but that a measure of this kind in its operations will work hardships. Bills of this kind necessarily work hardships, but they are designed to prevent greater hardships, and a greater number of hardships, which men and women have been experiencing and are now experiencing.

I do not pretend to defend my vote for this joint resolution except upon the theory that the District of Columbia having been set aside for the exclusive uses of the Government of the United States, and this great congested population being brought here for that purpose, we must take care of them; and, of course, if these occasional hardships occur, I am satisfied that the ordinary sense of justice, not only in Congress but outside, will take care of them in due season.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado has expressed much better than I could have done the thought that was in my mind in attempting to answer the inquiry of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I was not through, although I yielded to the Senator. I understand that when the other bill, which is now pending, passes both Houses and becomes a law this one will be superseded.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes; the provisions of this joint resolution will necessarily be superseded by any bill or joint resolution that may be passed subsequently dealing with the same subject.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why not let this joint resolution await the passage of that bill, then? It has passed the Senate and promises to pass the House, and then it will go to conference. I can see great hardships that this legislation may work upon some of the people in this District. Of course, I am as much against profiteering as anybody, but I can see what great hardships will be worked on some of the people.

If the Senator would let this await the action of the Senate and the House, which certainly will be taken in two or three weeks, I see no reason for hurrying along this joint resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I can only say that during that period of two or three weeks the conditions of the landlords and tenants in this District will become such that I think anyone who now suggests delay will be sorry for having suggested it. As a matter of fact, the mere pendency of this joint resolution has quieted down the situation to such an extent that there is not the same outcry since it became known that this joint resolution had passed both Houses; but if it is known that this joint resolution is going to be held up until the general legislation passes you will have in a few weeks a condition of notifying tenants in this District to move and of ousting them such as you have never seen, in my judgment, in any community before.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if I understand this joint resolution—I had not seen it until this morning—it maintains the present status quo.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Precisely.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And if a man has bargained to buy a piece of property, and the contract of purchase matures, and is in default, the present occupant of the property, even if he is in default on his contract, may maintain his occupancy of that property until a year after the war.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The joint resolution does not attempt to deal with questions relating to defaulted contracts for purchase or sale. It deals only with the matter of landlords and tenants.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the language is open to that construction. It says that until the expiration of the war, and so forth—

> No judicial order, decree, or judgment for the recovery of possession of any real estate in the District of Columbia now or hereafter held or acquired by oral or written agreement or written lease for one month or any longer period—

And so forth.

A written agreement might mean that contracts of sale were included.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I may say that that phraseology was adopted on request of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who thought it should go to that extent to show that an oral agreement was a lease. The House afterwards put in one or two words; but in my judgment it refers only to leases of property.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Of course, I am glad to have the Senator's judgment upon it, although I think that a purchaser of a piece of property upon condition that he could go into possession of it and occupy it until his contract had been fulfilled gets an absolute stay of proceedings against ouster under this rule.

I want to say further, if I am not trespassing, that the whole theory of rent regulation in the District of Columbia, in my opinion, is wrong. I do not think there is any justification for it.

I think a property owner should make money out of his investment, in which event he will continue to build houses and to build apartments, and if he is stripped of any profit there will be no new building in the District. There are plenty of unemployed carpenters in the District of Columbia and adjoining States who would like work of that kind.

I do not think this measure is going to accomplish its purpose. I think it will tend to arrest the further building of houses for rent, apartment houses and private residences, in the District of Columbia, and that it will circumscribe the opportunities of the transient or the permanent residents here very much. On general principle I am opposed to it; but to pass a joint resolution arresting proceedings to oust a defaulting tenant or a defaulting purchaser under contract is high-handed, confiscatory, and outrageous from my point of view, and I will not vote for it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator is entirely in error. A defaulting tenant can be ousted under the terms of this joint resolution. It preserves the status only in case a tenant has conformed to all the terms of his lease, has paid the rent regularly, and has conducted himself properly as a tenant in the premises. There is no possibility of a defaulting tenant, or a tenant conducting himself improperly as such, holding property against the will of his landlord. All the rights of the landlord remain under this joint resolution, except the single one of obtaining possession of his property where the tenant has properly conducted himself and paid the rent.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will permit me, while I do not like to take issue with him, I want to ask him a question: Suppose that a landlord sells a house on a contract, with condition that the purchaser of the property shall go into immediate possession and occupy it, continuing to pay monthly payments therefor until the purchase is completed; does the Senator say that this resolution does not prevent such landlord from dispossessing the tenant of his home if he is in default?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator has confused questions of purchase with questions of lease. I am unable myself to distinguish them, but I can only say to him, in reply, that a bona fide purchaser can obtain possession of a property which he desires for his own occupancy. If he is an employee in the Government service, there are special provisions relating to him. A landlord, for his own necessary occupancy, can retake possession of the property. There is no inhibition on the sale of property, except that the purchaser of property must come into the same position that the landlord occupies as to the tenant, and if he is a Government official he can go into possession of the property at the end of the existing lease.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am informed—I do not vouch for the information, but it comes from a reliable source—that since this joint resolution was introduced a means of evading it has been found in requiring a would-be tenant to purchase the furniture in the apartment at the landlord's price. For example, property worth $100 is to be taken off the hands of the landlord at $200 or $300 or whatever may suit his whim, thus in that indirect way carrying on the same practice which I think this joint resolution, in part at least, will do away with. That is one of the conditions which I think make it necessary to pass this joint resolution as soon as possible.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is much easier to criticize this class of legislation than it is to construct legislation which will meet the situation. We all know that there is a very serious situation in the District of Columbia with which we have to deal, but I do not want to punish the owner who is dealing fairly with the community the same as the profiteer. But I want to say, Mr. President, in view of the fact that there may not be a roll call upon this measure, that I am unable to vote for this joint resolution. I doubt if this is the way to deal with the situation. I am afraid it will have a bad effect instead of a good effect. In the long run it will do much harm to those whom we would help. But that is not the only reason why I am unable to vote for it. I would be willing to trust some one else's judgment as to the policy, but I do not believe this joint resolution is worth the paper it is written on. I do not believe it would stand in the courts if it were up for consideration. Therefore, while I am not going to take up the time of the Senate in discussing it, for fear that there will not be a roll call upon it, I want to record myself as opposed to the joint resolution.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I can not see the slightest difference in principle between this joint resolution and a resolution which provides that A's property shall be taken and given to B for whatever rent B may be willing to pay for it, or without rent at all, so far as principle is concerned. To be sure, it may be presumed that most men have obtained a fair rental for their property. Some may not have done so. Whether they have or not, this bill simply says that A must be the tenant of B for another year.

I sympathize with the people of the District of Columbia who are overcharged and who are laboring under a burden which it is almost impossible to bear; but there is a limit to the point to which a lawyer ought to go in legislation in war times or in any other times. It is setting an example of legislation that is exceedingly dangerous, unless we concede that in time of war there is no Constitution at all; and I do not make any such concession as that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. It is not only a question of no Constitution, but there are certain fundamental principles of right and justice which the courts of this country enforce regardless of the Constitution. If you can say that a man shall not change the status of his property for one reason, you can say that he shall not change the status of his property for another reason; and if you can say that he shall not change the status of his property for a year, you can say the same thing for 10 years. There is no distinction between such a proposition and the principle upon which the Bolsheviki are now trying to erect the government in Russia.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not see any distinction. I am willing to go as far as anyone in the way of doing anything possible to relieve the people of this District or any other district in this country from the burdens which high prices, and perhaps extortion, have cast upon them, but I am not willing to vote for legislation which apparently is unconstitutional on its face.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, this joint resolution is like many others of a new kind; it is rather of a pioneer character. There would be an improvement made with experience and with longer opportunity for reflection; but it was intended to cover a pressing emergency at this time, taking the place of some legislation which it is hoped will be enacted by Congress later. Being of that kind, it seems to me that we can take it up for what it may accomplish for the temporary purpose.

I know that for about 300 years all of the laws of the English-speaking race have been framed by and for landlords for the government of tenants. I have had occasion, as many lawyers in this Chamber have, in days past, to examine the law of landlord and tenant, and I know the tender solicitude with which the common law regards the rights of landlords. Next to human life, the most sacred thing I know of is the right to distrain for rent, to evict a tenant, and to protect the property of the landlord against all comers and by all kinds of contracts.

Here in Washington is the Capital City of the Nation. There are probably 400,000 people in it at the present time. Two hundred and fifty thousand of them, either the heads or the members of families, are tenants. Now, the matter being in that condition, war questions have intruded themselves. The increase in price has come. Some landlords, very much to their credit, have not taken much profit. One who came before the committee testified that he had made an increase of only 50 cents per room per month; that he thought that would equal the difference between the old price of coal and the present price, and some of the costs of help about the house, so that he thought he would come out even. If he did not, as the printed hearings show, he said that he would rather the expense would be on his side than against the tenant.

This spirit is not manifested by all of them, and especially not by the subtenants. The subleases, many of them, that are made, it seems to me, are very grasping in character in many instances. Making a fair average of them, 75 per cent of the subleases made in the city of Washington are sheer, unadulterated robbery. The other quarter are obtaining fair prices for the furniture and a fair profit for the service in leasing out the term which they have taken the trouble to obtain from the landlord.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I am rather inclined to agree with the Senator's view that many of these subleases are founded in that form of extortion that might be characterized as robbery; but can we not legislate so as to catch the robber, rather than the honest citizen who is dealing with his property in a right and proper way? This touches the man who deals with his property righteously and justly just the same as with the robber. We make no discrimination; and it ought to be a fundamental principle of any law to discriminate between the just and the unjust, the righteous and the unrighteous, those who are obeying the law and those who are not.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the times of the Scriptures the rain fell upon the just and the unjust just as it does now. The sinner gets as much benefit out of it as the man who walks righteously. I never knew the Lord to discriminate in sending a shower for the benefit of a crop.

Mr. BORAH. I want to advise the Senator that there comes a time when the Lord has promised us He will discriminate; that He will separate the sheep from the goats; and the Senator had better pay attention to that fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have paid some attention to that; I trust as much as the Senator. I have read in Genesis that so long as the earth remaineth seedtime and harvest, heat and cold, winter and summer, and night and day shall not cease. The bow was hung in the heavens as a living evidence that the world was not again to be destroyed by water, with the pledge I have heretofore quoted, that seasons come and go indefinitely, and that there is to be no more destruction of the world by water. Notwithstanding the fact that I am a prohibitionist, I feel safe, I will say to the Senator from Idaho, from any of the aqueous maledictions leveled upon the wicked in Genesis and elsewhere.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has assurance from the rainbow in the heavens that there would be no more drowning, but he has no assurance that we will not starve to death. There is no promise that we will not freeze to death and there is no promise that our civilization will not be destroyed by chaos. There is no Senator here who has denounced the socialistic trend of affairs more powerfully than the Senator from Illinois. No Socialist would propose so unjust a measure as this. I ask the Senator from Illinois what is the distinction between our civilization and the civilization of the Bolsheviki, except that we undertake to discriminate between those who do right and those who do wrong, regardless of whether they happen to own property or not, while they do not discriminate at all, but punish all alike who are opposed to them or who happen to come within a particular class? Now, I do not want to punish a man simply because he is a landlord, but I do want to reach him if he is a profiteer.

Mr. SHERMAN. Neither do we, the Senator says, but we do. We discriminate between the good landlord and the bad one. This resolution will punish no good landlord. It enables him to take fair charges he voluntarily fixed last October. It is said it treats them all alike, and that is the original complaint, that the good landlord was not segregated from the bad one.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that in the food-administration law there is no difference between the wheat farmer in North Dakota and in southern Illinois. There is no difference between the elevator owner in one place in Oklahoma or in Illinois or in Missouri. They are treated just the same way. The great milling companies in the Mississippi Valley are treated the same way under that law. They are stopped from milling the wheat that they held in their elevators, and had held there and bought and paid for under the right of private contract when the law became operative. The same wheat that came up from Oklahoma to Alton, Ill., to be milled there was private property at the time the law became operative, just as it is now, and just as the landlord owns property now. Still——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. Just a moment. Still, Mr. President, the man who owns wheat, whether he was profiteering or not, was treated just the same way as the man who behaved himself. There was not any discrimination. It was a general rule made to cover the question of that kind of foodstuffs, and this is a general rule made to cover a particular kind of a commodity that the human being in Washington must have.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho first.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Oklahoma has been on the floor for some time, and I yield to him.

Mr. OWEN. Does not this measure take as a standard of fair treatment the contracts which the landlords themselves were satisfied with, and proceed upon that basis, and, being used as a basis, can that be held as unjust or unfair treatment when they are precluded from making extortionate demands beyond the basis which they themselves have already set as fair?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. That certainly is true. The landlord fixed it himself last October, six months after we declared war. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not think, if the Senator will examine the resolution, that that is in the working of the resolution. The Senator has referred to the wheat crop, and there is the vice of this universal rule which is established, regardless of the position either party may occupy who must obey the rule. In the Minnesota country and in that portion of the United States the farmers realized from wheat $2 and $2.20. The farmer in my State realized $1.60 and $1.70 under that rule. He was differently situated. He was not so accessible to the market. It was in every sense a thorough discrimination against the very large portion of wheat growers of the United States. The Senator does not believe that that kind of a rule is a fair rule? There is no reason why the Congress of the United States could not have made that rule so that it would apply to the farmer in the West and the farmer in Minnesota under such conditions that both would realize the same from their wheat.

Mr. SHERMAN. It depends upon where you live. The nearer you are to the market, to a large number of ultimate consumers, as the phrase goes, the better the price you get, and the farther you are removed from the market the more is sold out by the common carrier and bored out by the inspector, and naturally so. The farmer in Idaho is unfortunate in location to reach the $2.20 price. Those in the Mississippi Valley are a little more fortunately situated. There are many of the large mills of the country that convert it into a more portable and cheaply carried form, and therefore the farmer there gets a better price, because he is nearer the mills and nearer some of the large consuming centers of the country. But that ought not to be made a penalty upon those who are more fortunately located.

Here are men and women in Washington who are unfortunately located. The landlord is fortunately located. That is no reason why we ought to deny to the tenants the protection of the law or the resolution, whichever it shall be. If we make that the rule, then the law must be made to fit localities. On the other hand, the Food Administration act was made to fit the United States, and those who are unfortunately located receive a lower price naturally because of their being far removed from market.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Illinois if that applies to the finished product.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not so much so. It does some.

Mr. BORAH. Why does it not apply to the finished product?

Mr. SHERMAN. Any part of it?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. Why should not the same rule apply, if we make laws here which are to be universal in their application, and so forth?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. All right. Ask your questions all together and I will answer all at once.

Mr. BORAH. I have asked a question of the Senator, and he can proceed.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, I do not need to remind the Senator from Illinois that people do not eat whole wheat. We have to manufacture it. It has to be ground into flour. The Senator made a comparison stating that the people who live out West were not as fortunate as people who live in the Mississippi Valley. Has the Senator taken into consideration what it costs the people in the West for what flour they consume, or, rather, what the wheat costs those who really consume it?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want to break in upon the subjects that have been discussed by the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from North Dakota, but there is a point in this bill or resolution which interests me a good deal. The Senator from Illinois is discussing it as though it were confined to landlords and tenants, and the effect of the bill as between landlords and tenants is simply to continue the lease indefinitely; but the occupation is dependent upon the performance by the tenant of the terms of the lease. There is an element of fairness about that. But the resolution covers other kinds of possession as well. For instance, I put my own case, because I recently did this thing. I sell a piece of property in Washington. The payments are to be made annually, monthly, or every three months, or whatever period may be determined upon. A part of the agreement is that the purchaser shall be put in possession of the property. This resolution not only prevents the seller of the property from taking any process at all for the recovery of possession, but does not even require the purchaser to make the payments that he has agreed to make in order to be entitled to possession.

I am sure the Senator from Illinois does not believe that that ought to be put in the law. Not only it ought not to be put in the law from the standpoint of justice and fair dealing, but I am sure the Senator will agree with me that it is clearly unconstitutional and opposed to the fundamental compact of society if put into the law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will take up the question of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] first. We would be better off if we did eat the wheat whole. It would last longer and would be healthier. We would have fewer intestinal troubles, which now are a part of the usual surgical difficulties, especially in families of great wealth. Highly bolted flour has been a menace to humankind for many years. Nature knows more about how to prepare food for ourselves than we do ourselves. The chemist and miller have done more to injure the human race than he has ever done himself. We are eating whole-wheat bread now, and we are better off for it. It goes further, the Government thinks. I do not know that they have the health question in mind, but the entire American people would be better off, I say to the Senator from North Dakota, if we ate wheat in nearer its whole form of the berry than having it highly purified and bolted. We gain nothing in health. We gain very much to our disadvantage. Many farmers complain since highly bolted flour has come into use in the last 20 years.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to answer the rest of the question.

Mr. GRONNA. But right there——

Mr. SHERMAN. All right; I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator knows that the consumer is charged a higher price for unbolted flour than he is charged for bolted flour.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Is that an injustice to the consumer? The Senator was stating a parallel case. He was comparing the food-administration law. I understand he is defending this measure by the act which is known as the food act. We know that the consumer is paying a higher price for raw wheat than he is paying for bolted wheat. Is not that true?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. That is not because it is the whole-wheat flour. It is because it is war times and we are feeding our allies as well as ourselves, and a large number of farmers have left the field of production and gone to the military field. It is not because we are getting what is popularly supposed to be a purer brand of flour and paying a higher price, so that somebody is profiting unduly. It is because of the market condition.

Let me continue. The flour having been prepared from the wheat berry, is shipped into the market in much less bulk than when it left the local elevator or the farmer to be carried to the milling center. Everybody knows it who studied the freight question and the capacity of the rolling stock of the carriers. All the cars accumulate in the eastern centers. That is because from the West, as a rule, a greater tonnage of bulky merchandise or unmanufactured merchandise comes to the East. That takes the space. When the cars are emptied of the bulky merchandise, the grain unmanufactured, or if it is not the coarse grain unmanufactured, or if it is flour not made up yet at the plant of the different baking or biscuit companies and put into boxes, it requires bulk; but when it is in the highly manufactured form, ready for consumption, run through the bakeshops and ready to go from the box to the table of the consumer, it then occupies a comparatively small part of a freight car.

The result is that freight accumulates in the East and the empties have to be sent back West. That is the standing evidence of the fact that from the West comes the coarse form of merchandise, not so highly manufactured, as flour unmanufactured. The price is added to it. It reaches the form of foodstuffs in its final state. Of course, the price is higher the nearer it reaches that form. When we pay for it in its finished form there is less of the freight in the cost than there is in the bulky grain.

The query of the Senator from North Dakota is based on that fact. The more highly manufactured the merchandise is the lower the price of freight in the transportation. That is the natural effect of it. That I think explains mainly the question asked by the Senator from North Dakota.

Now, to return to the query of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the question it seems was one interfering with the right of property, the private right, and that I have been at times somewhat vociferous in my criticisms of socialistic schemes. I have, and I expect to be more so in the future if it is possible within my limited knowledge of the question and my ability to express myself.

Mr. President, if this be a socialistic scheme then the moratorium for the benefit of the soldier in the camp or field is socialistic. The moratorium now delays the collection of every debt owed by any person in the military or naval service of the United States. I have several constituents at home holding considerable in the form of negotiable paper against those in the military service. I have written them, Mr. President—all of them, where they have taken the trouble to write me to get the current information before the law was well known—and I have sent them copies of the act so that they might know what their rights were. They can not collect; they can not sue on a note; they can not foreclose on a mortgage, whether maturity of principal has come or not, or it is merely the maturity of interest. They are bound to hold their indebtedness as it now is until the end of the war or a given period thereafter.

Now, I do not think the holder of negotiable paper, of a note secured by a mortgage on real estate, where the maker or debtor is in the military or naval service, has any more right than a landlord or vice versa. If the landlord has more right here than the one holding the paper against one in the military service, then he can rightfully criticize this resolution and the legislation that will follow it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. On that point I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Illinois. Suppose the Senator from Illinois had done as many do in Washington—that he had leased his house for two summer months at a small rental because he would rather have it occupied than to have it vacant. This bill is passed. He must continue that lease and his house is taken away from him for a year after the war closes for the rent he has been receiving as a matter of accommodation for two or three months. Does the Senator from Illinois believe that that is constitutional or within the power of Congress to do when it is merely applied to landlords in the city of Washington?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do, if any such stay laws in war are. If that be not constitutional in a joint resolution, Mr. President, then the moratorium is unconstitutional. Those employed in the civil service of the Government in Washington have as much right to protection, they have as much constitutional right to appeal to Congress and to obtain legislation for protection for those in the civil service of the Government as those in the military and naval service have a right to appeal for and to obtain, as they have done, proper protection against the collection of debts.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator let me ask him a practical question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Suppose a landlord had rented a house last year for $100 a month to a tenant for one year or for a year and a half, the condition being that the landlord should keep it heated in the wintertime, but that after the lease was made difficulties attending the coal situation ensued and added greatly to the expense which the landlord was under; does the Senator from Illinois think that a bill should be passed by Congress maintaining the status quo of that tenant without imposing any additional burden upon him? Would that be just or equitable or fair?

Mr. SHERMAN. It would not be if imposed as a permanent rule, but this joint resolution is not intended for a permanent rule; it is only intended to sustain present conditions until the legislation following in the form of a bill is enacted. The joint resolution is to remain in force during the war and for a given time afterwards, when proper legislation covering the subject may be brought before both branches of Congress and be enacted; but, for temporary purposes, I think this proposed legislation is within the power of Congress.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] propounded practically the same query, as to whether a landlord can be kept from the possession of his property, amounting to a dispossession of the landlord. I answered that the same as I have answered the query of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], that if the law granting a moratorium is valid, if these laws that sustain the right of one who is in the military or naval service to be free from annoyance, that his family shall be free from dispossession or eviction while the head of the family is absent in the service, if these matters are based upon a sound reasoning, then it is likewise as to the persons here in Washington who are living in the Capital City—a city the like of which there is no other one in the United States—in that event, this joint resolution and the succeeding legislation are valid.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Illinois just referred to me as having raised the same question about the propriety of this legislation as between landlord and tenant. The Senator is in error about that. I made the suggestion that where a purchaser had entered into possession under a contract of sale or purchase there ought to be at least a provision in the measure that if the purchaser did not fulfill the terms of the contract of purchase the seller could resume possession, just as the landlord under the contract can resume possession if the tenant does not perform the conditions of the contract of lease.

Mr. SAULSBURY rose.

Mr. SHERMAN. In just a moment I will yield. The tenant must keep the terms of the lease as provided on page 2. There are some matters in this joint resolution as it left the other House, if I were myself writing it, that I, together with my colleagues on the committee, should prefer had been otherwise disposed of, but rather than delay it I was willing to take it as it was.

Mr. President, I wish to say before yielding to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] that I will suggest to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that I myself will take my chances when the final accounting is had, with my many imperfections and sins, with those who are covered in the bill or the joint resolution. I will take my chances, Mr. President, with Mr. Munsey, although he is the owner of newspapers and magazines, and is a gentleman, no doubt, not to be spoken of without fear and trembling; one who will level his maledictions and shed printer's ink like gore upon the battle field on those who offend him—I will take my chances with Mr. Munsey in the final accounting with as much courage as I ever did anything in my life if he perseveres in his present conduct. Before the committee, both in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, the evidence shows that Mr. Munsey—reformer as he is—who is leasing to the Government space for which he collects under the old rate $10,500 a year, has notified the Government that on the 1st day of July, 1918, he will raise it to $31,500 a year for the same space in the same building in the same city. I will take my chances, I will say to the Senator from Idaho, alongside of the redeemed and regenerated Mr. Munsey when it comes to a question of profiteering upon the Government at the rate of 300 per cent, as he is doing according to the evidence at the hearing before the committee.

I would be perfectly satisfied if there were an explanation made—and I hope it will be made—in which it would be shown that this is erroneous; but it was the testimony a long time ago, heard before the House committee and heard again before the Senate committee. There has been no explanation, there has been no contradiction by the agent of the building, who is convenient of access here any day. So I am led to the conclusion that in the dire need of the Government, when it is collecting from the taxpayers of the country all that it in justice feels that it can collect in intervals from them to meet the great exigencies of the war, along comes this gentleman and insists upon collecting from the Government 300 per cent more than he did the year before. It is an instance, Mr. President, of another reformer who has lost his civic chastity in the mad rush for gain.

The mere fact that Mr. Munsey may own newspapers does not terrify many of us. I have seen a great many gentlemen who have owned newspapers but could not get anywhere when they ran for office. I have seen them run for office all the way from alderman in my own city and in Chicago to Senator of the United States, and I never in my life saw a great newspaper editor of a metropolitan paper elected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there are some newspaper men who are now Members of this body.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am entirely impartial in my observations if there are. The Senator will notice I made no exceptions in the particular group.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think the matter covered by this joint resolution can probably be expedited by asking leave to withdraw my motion to concur in the House amendments and moving that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference with the House on the amendments of the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not rise to object, but before the motion is put I should like to ask leave to insert in the RECORD a letter which I received this morning bearing on this subject. I do not vouch for the facts set out in the attached statement and communication, but it is a very intelligent communication and conceivably states the situation quite fairly, I think. I do not even know personally the writer, but I am acquainted sufficiently with the conditions in the District of Columbia myself to believe what he is stating to be a correct representation of the situation so far as it goes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FIDELITY STORAGE CO.,
Washington, D. C., May 17, 1918.

Senator D. U. FLETCHER:

The writer is in the building and real estate business, and, of course, is interested in the various bills under consideration by Congress to prevent profiteering.

Doubtless some unwarranted raises in rent have been made, but some increase is necessary to cover the enormous increases in the cost of maintaining and upkeep of real estate.

The enormous prices paid for labor and material on the buildings erected by the Government is largely responsible for the increased cost.

A carpenter recently working for me at $5 per day worked last week on a Government building at Sixth and B Streets and drew $107 for the week's labor, including overtime. An electrician formerly worked for me (recently) drew $120 for one week's pay on a Government building.

Many laborers—not trained mechanics—have been taken from my force and put to work on Government buildings, under the guise of carpenters; they are put to work doing common labor, and with allowance of time and half and double time frequently draw $75 to $90 per week.

The upkeep of real estate has increased in greater degree than cost of food, shoes, and all other merchandise, dependent largely on cost of labor.

A building must be kept in repair. Roofing, glass, outside woodwork, parking, plumbing, heating plant, electric work, painting, papering, etc.

Material and labor have gone up over 100 per cent on all of the above. Carpenters two years ago were paid $3.50; now $5 to $6. Painters two years ago were paid $3; now $5 to $6. Laborers were formerly paid $1.50 per day; now $3.50 to $4 per day.

Plumbers, electricians, masons in like proportion. Wall paper, paint, plumbing material, tin, glass, etc., are more than double. Labor is much less efficient. No one cares whether he keeps his job or not.

An insurance trust is operating in the District, which has raised insurance in some instances 300 per cent. Congress passed a bill presumably attempting to stop this, but by careless wording of the law insurance business slipped through.

Probably 70 per cent of owners are obliged to borrow money. Interest rates, formerly 4½ and 5 per cent, have advanced to 6 per cent on all except the choicest loans. Borrowers are obliged to pay a commission in addition, which makes the rate about 6½ per cent.

Awnings and screens have increased about 200 per cent and last about three years.

People not familiar with real estate business overlook the annual depreciation, which will average on brick buildings 2½ per cent on the whole building. Plumbing must be renewed on an average of 25 years, 4 per cent depreciation; electric work, 20 years, 5 per cent depreciation; roof, 8 to 10 years, 12½ to 10 per cent; heating plant, 25 years, 4 per cent; outside blinds, etc., 20 years, 5 per cent. This is in addition to the annual repairs of leaks and minor replacements.

Taxes are higher. Now owner pays for renewal of street pavements, resetting curb, relaying sidewalk, etc.

Where service is supplied coal formerly $3.85 per ton now $8.85 per ton put in cellar. Removing ashes about three times increased. Fireman's wages about double. Elevator operators about double. Telephone switch labor about double. Hall cleaners, janitors, and manager about double. All cleaning supplies, soap, brushes, etc., about double. Elevator repairs, new cables, grease, etc., and labor about 300 per cent.

I can't make this letter too long, but many additional items all go to make up the annual cost of carrying real estate.

These are facts which can not be obscured by abuse of owners.

If ignored by intemperate legislation, it must necessarily stop all building for rental purposes. Just as effectively as if a ukase called for shoes, to be sold at prewar prices, no shoes would be for sale in the District.

The city is growing and should have more dwellings to accommodate the inhabitants.

The threat of confiscatory legislation has now scared nearly every owner into selling his house, rather than continue renting.

Practically no building is done without borrowed money for part of the cost. The proposed legislation has already made it almost impossible to borrow money on new projects.

JAMES L. KARRICK.

A REAL ESTATE FACT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 17, 1918.

A man died a few years ago and left two houses to his widow in expectation that the rents would maintain her during her declining years. These houses are located in a fashionable neighborhood, they cost 12 to 15 years ago about $12,000 each to build, the lots cost about $3,000 each, a total cost of about $15,000.

The husband to help build the houses had borrowed on one $7,000 and on the other $5,000. The widow had been obliged to raise an additional $1,200 secured by a second mortgage, to pay the carrying expenses during the vacancies.

During 1917 one of the houses was vacant, the other rented to a gentleman at, per year		$660
The widow's expenses for the house that was rented was:
Interest and commission on $5,000	$275
Interest and commission on $1,200, second mortgage	120
Taxes	78
Insurance	10
Water	12
To real estate agent for collection	33
		528
Leaving for repairs and income on $8,800 invested in the house		132

No income was received from the vacant house next door. The widow, in desperation, tried to save both houses from foreclosure, but failing to pay her taxes and interest, the rented house sold at foreclosure of the first mortgage.

The lessee then notified the purchaser that unless certain repairs were made he would move out. A list was submitted which was estimated to cost about $2,000. Failing to get these repairs the lessee thereupon proposed to take the widow's other house at $660 provided $200 was expended on repairs. The widow, hoping to save the balance of her inheritance, agreed to this, provided the lessee would spend the $200 and deduct from the rent $25 per month until reimbursed. The result is she is behind in taxes and interest and is about to lose this house also, under foreclosure sale. The lessee is not to blame for making the best bargain he could for himself.

But do you propose to enact a law compelling this poor woman to continue to accept $660 for what formerly brought $1,200, and which she would now have no difficulty in getting again?

Such a law means not only a temporary loss of income but total financial ruin. Hundreds of cases can be shown of just as great hardship. All this poor widow begs for is a law giving her a reasonable rental.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say further, Mr. President, that I am glad that the committee has asked that the joint resolution go to conference. It seems to me it involves a monstrous proposition. I have no acquaintance with Mr. Munsey or any of his affairs, and I am not attempting to defend him, nor would I for a moment utter anything here by way of justification or excuse for the profiteers who are making money at the expense of the people by extortionate charges, but I am impressed with the fact that most of the profiteering comes from subtenants and sublessees, people who have rented from landlords, who let them have the premises at reasonable prices, and who have themselves furnished, in some instances, apartments or buildings and sublet them and are making enormous and exorbitant profits by subletting those premises. That condition ought to be adequately dealt with and remedied. I would say a word in behalf of the honest, straightforward, patriotic landlords of the District, and there are landlords in that relation. There are plenty of people here who have invested their money in apartments and other buildings in good faith, and who are entitled, it seems to me, to some little consideration. I will admit that the tenants are entitled to consideration also, but the people who own property and who have developed that property, who have invested their money in it, are entitled to some slight consideration at the hands of Congress. This joint resolution would deprive them largely of any sort of control of their own property, even the right of possession of their property.

Take, for instance, a landlord who rented a house last October—and the leases in the District usually run from October to October—and suppose the tenant occupying such a house or such an apartment has not violated the lease by committing any of the torts or wrongs which would violate the covenants usually embodied in leases, but is nevertheless undesirable and unsatisfactory, and suppose the lease by its very terms and the solemn covenants contained in it expires on the 1st of next October. In those circumstances Congress undertakes to say that the owner of the property can not have possession of it; that the tenant must stay there on the same terms as to rent, provided he pays his rent—and, of course, he will do that—not only for another year or two years or three years, but for an indefinite period, until the expiration of one year after the treaty of peace, and the Lord only knows when that will be; nobody can guess, nobody can say. It is an indefinite appropriation by the Government of a man's property, and denying him, the owner of the property, the right to its possession. I never heard of such a monstrous proposition. It is absurd; it is too ridiculous, it seems to me, to be urged for a moment. It may be that the landlord has rented that property at a figure much below its actual value. Undoubtedly it is true, and everybody knows it is true, that the expense of heat and light for apartments has increased and the expense for repairs has greatly increased. I do not know that the taxes have increased very much; the taxes in the District, I think, are quite reasonable; but generally throughout the country the taxes have increased. At any rate, however, all these necessary charges against the property have greatly increased since last October; but in spite of all that the landlord, the owner of the property, is not permitted to get one cent more than he did a year ago for those premises, and he is obliged to keep there the present occupant, no matter how undesirable that occupant may be.

I am very glad that the Senator from Delaware has seen fit to move that the joint resolution go to conference, in the hope that they will bring it back in a somewhat more reasonable shape than it is at present.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I wish only to say a word. I can not permit my friend, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], to make the statement he has about this joint resolution unless he can say to me that he has read the testimony which the committee with great industry took before proposing the joint resolution. Of course, the speech just made by the Senator from Florida is the old-fashioned property holder's speech in favor of protecting the landlord. I think that one of the great things this war is doing for us everywhere is making the people of this country and throughout the world feel more keenly the rights of humanity, as compared to the rights of property, and appreciate that we can not deal as tenderly in all cases as we have heretofore done with the rights of property when the rights of men and the rights of women come in conflict with the rights of property.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to oppose the request of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] to send this joint resolution to conference, although I can not see how the conference committee can meet any of the objections which have been made to the joint resolution today. All the substantial provisions of the joint resolution have been agreed to and passed by both the House and the Senate. The amendments made by the House are in a sense immaterial; they do not go to the substance of the joint resolution as it passed the Senate, and when the conferees bring it back, unless they violate the rules of conferences, the objections that have been made to it will apply to any conference report that can be brought in here, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if I may say just a word? I do not care to be put in the position of speaking for the interests of profiteers or of championing specially the interests of landlords. I am simply appealing for fair consideration for them, as well as consideration for tenants. My impression was when this joint resolution originally passed the Senate that it was intended to cover a situation until a general bill, which was to apply not only to landlords and not only to tenants but to other conditions in the District, might be agreed upon. The Senate subsequently passed that bill, and it went back to the House. If this joint resolution should be limited to the time when that legislation can be written into law, I am agreeable that it should be done, but the present proposition is to have the joint resolution remain a law for a year after a treaty of peace. That is my objection to it.

I will say further, with reference to a good many of the landlords, that I presume over 50 per cent of the property owned here is under mortgage, and under heavy mortgage. It will be utterly impossible for them to meet their obligations if they are to be deprived of their reasonable rights in connection with their own property.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I might say that it is possible for the conferees to meet the objection which the Senator from Florida makes. We can limit the time to less than one year after the close of the war and put it as the Senate passed it, or make it either a shorter or a longer time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. SHERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, bills and joint resolutions are in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 4569) to establish the Mount Desert National Park in the State of Maine; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. HARDING:

A bill (S. 4570) granting a pension to John E. Graham (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4571) granting an increase of pension to Stephen R. Clark (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NUGENT:

A bill (S. 4572) granting an increase of pension to John W. Dickens (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota:

A bill (S. 4573) granting an increase of pension to Charles Belknap (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4574) granting an increase of pension to Adoniran C. Harper (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARDING submitted an amendment providing that the Paymaster General of the Navy shall cause to be paid to Mrs. Susie A. Van Kirk, mother of the late Dean R. Van Kirk, ensign, National Naval Volunteers, an amount equal to one year's pay at the rate received by that officer at the date of his death, May 1, 1917, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

LIGNITE COALS.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3220) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals, to determine the practicability of their utilization as a fuel and in producing commercial products, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN, it was Ordered, That the junior Senator from Idaho, Mr. NUGENT, be assigned to membership upon the Committee on Finance.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, and that unobjected bills be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the regular order.

Mr. MYERS. Not unobjected bills. The regular order is the calling of the calendar for anything, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar, and that unobjected bills only be called. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The first business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 39) to appropriate $3,000,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to prosecute the work of eradicating the southern cattle tick.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 53) authorizing the President to appoint two additional Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1725) to stimulate the production of food upon private and public lands within reclamation projects, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 91) extending the authority of and provision for the committee appointed under S. Res. 92, Sixty-third Congress, first session, to investigate the charges of alleged attempts to influence legislation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 25) providing for the appointment of a joint committee to be known as the joint committee on the conduct of the war, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 10) authorizing the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the causes of the recent riots in East St. Louis, Ill., and to report thereon, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 200) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States conferring upon women the right of suffrage was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of President and Vice President without the intervention of the electoral college, establishing their term of office from the third Tuesday of January following their election, and fixing the time when the terms of Senators and Representatives shall begin, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that joint resolution is adversely reported. The Senator reporting it is not in the Chamber, but I do not think there will be any objection to its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Why not dispose of it?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that it go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 385) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

NONMINERAL ENTRY OF LANDS IN ALASKA.

The bill (S. 950) to provide for the nonmineral entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing coal, phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals in Alaska was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe the bill has been read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read in full. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, for information, does the Senator from Utah know the purport of this bill? My only object in making the inquiry is that I do not wish to let a bill pass with my assent, though I would not work an obstruction, that gives to any private ownership in this country control of the coal and oil. I have long been an advocate, and would say to the Senator now that my purpose is to continue the advocacy, of the doctrine that coal and oil, the substances of fuel, ought to be taken charge of by the Government and supervised in their disposition, whether by lease or otherwise, or by sale, as the Secretary of the Interior may direct. I am opposed to the policy of private ownership of these minerals.

Mr. SMOOT. I will assure the Senator that there is nothing in the bill with that in view. It is a departmental bill, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, who asks for its passage.

Mr. LEWIS. Since the Secretary takes that attitude, I certainly shall interpose no obstruction.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 23) granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State university of the State of Nevada was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 90) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. That may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3311) to increase and expedite the supply of munitions of war was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 49) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of James Buchanan, a former President of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1795) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3522) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let that go over.

Mr. LODGE. I do not see in the Chamber the Senator who has the bill in charge, but I should like to ask whether that bill has not been entirely covered by the espionage act?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it has. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is not in the Chamber, but I think that is quite true.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

INTERNATIONAL CONFEDERATION OF DEMOCRACIES.

The resolution (S. Res. 196) to print the pamphlet entitled "An International Confederation of Democracies under a Constitution" as a Senate document was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. That may be indefinitely postponed. The article referred to was printed in the RECORD under extension of remarks in the House. I ask to have the resolution indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 947) validating certain homestead entries was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 951) to provide for the sinking of artesian wells, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3783) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico," approved May 11, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

OREGON & CALIFORNIA RAILROAD CO.

The bill (H. R. 5489) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange for lands in private ownership lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in the administration of the act of June 9, 1916, entitled "An act to alter and amend an act entitled 'An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon,' approved July 25, 1866, as amended by the acts of 1868 and 1869, and to alter and amend an act entitled 'An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville, in the State of Oregon,' approved May 4, 1870, and for other purposes" (39 Stat. L., p. 218), is hereby authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to exchange lands formerly embraced within the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and revested in the United States by said act for other lands of approximately equal aggregate value held in private ownership, either within or contiguous to the former limits of said grant, when by such action he will be enabled thereby advantageously to consolidate the holdings of timberlands by the United States: Provided, That all lands and timber secured by virtue of such exchange shall be disposed of in accordance with the terms and provisions of said act of revestment.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN.

The bill (S. 3527) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1885, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has already been read. It is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS.

The bill (S. 758) to increase the productive agricultural area of the United States by the reclamation of arid and swamp lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

KATHERINE MACDONALD.

The bill (S. 2975) for the relief of Katherine Macdonald was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$9,819" and insert "$9,117," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,117 to and for Katherine Macdonald, of Butte, Mont., for and on account of unpaid claims held by her on account of work and services performed on or supplies furnished for the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, a part of the Shoshone reclamation project in the State of Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3439) for the relief of certain homestead and desert-land entrymen was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall have to ask that that go over for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) to amend section 14 of the food-control act by increasing the guaranteed minimum price of wheat for the crop of 1918 from $2 to $2.50 per bushel was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, that amendment was put in the agricultural bill. As the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is not here, I shall ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

DISTRICT JUDGE FOR CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 2910) providing for an additional judge for the northern district of California was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all of sections 2 and 3, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional judge for the northern district of California, who shall reside in said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same salary now prescribed by law in respect of the present district judges therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, when this bill was reached upon the calendar, yesterday or the day before, I objected to its consideration. It was called some time before that, and I then also objected to its consideration.

I shall not interpose any objection now, for the reason that I do not feel that I should discriminate between my friend the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and those who are favoring other bills for similar purposes; but I think it is a mistake to increase the number of judges now upon the Federal bench, just as I have opposed at various times in my own State the increase in the number of judges upon the State bench. The number of our judiciary is enlarging beyond all reason and all necessity. I am quite aware that in making that statement I shall provoke the very decided opposition of many of my associates, but I am expressing an opinion that is the result of considerable observation and has been long entertained.

The number of judges in Great Britain is less than the number of judges in the State of Illinois, while the population which they serve is infinitely larger, and the reason for the difference in the two is found in the different methods of procedure. The judges in the older country are at work practically all the time. Our judges think they do pretty well if they meet at 10 o'clock, take a recess for lunch, and adjourn for the day at 4 or half past 4, and that regardless of the state of the docket or the character of the business then before the court. If instead of doing that, the judges would perform 50 per cent more work that might be done, and done efficiently, instead of there being need for more judges at a bigger salary roll the tendency might be the other way.

In my State, having a population of a million in round numbers, we have one district judge. He occasionally requires some assistance outside and gets it in the assignment of a judge from another district to help him out. Now we are entering upon the practice, and it will grow and continue to expand, of relieving overcrowded dockets by increasing the number of judges. The precedent once established grows like a Canada thistle. There are a number of such bills on the calendar or at least several of them have been enacted or have passed the Senate during the present session. The people of my State will very soon be demanding another judge, possibly two of them, and their demand will be reenforced by the precedent to which I refer. I have no doubt that in the discharge of my duties here I shall be required to advocate an increase of the Federal judiciary in my State, notwithstanding the fact that I am convinced, and I know the judge of that district is convinced, that it is not necessary.

It is for that reason I have made these objections. I think they are well founded, and I shall always continue to think so.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Has objection been made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was no objection made.

Mr. LODGE. Then I ask for the regular order. Under this unanimous consent I do not think indefinite debate is in order.

Mr. PHELAN. I am quite willing to refrain from making any remarks. I understand the Senator from Colorado has not objected to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR DEFALCATIONS OF NAVY PAYMASTER'S CLERK.

The bill (S. 3125) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the United States Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following-named men the sums of money following their names, respectively, or so much thereof as may be found by the Secretary of the Navy, upon evidence satisfactory to him to have been lost by said men and upon certificate from the Secretary of the Navy as to the amount to be paid: A. Balton, $67; Bernard C. Blezunski, $36; C. C. Bleam, $57; W. J. Brown, $50; Lemuel F. Dixon, $50; Elmer M. Hall, $30; J. Hello, $5; W. P. Hunt, $67; C. E. Jordan, $47; T. E. Kent, $40; Gustave A. Lohse, $76; L. E. Looney, $50; George L. Rice, $60; R. R. Sprott, $50; E. A. Stoner, $62; Max Szwajkowski, $102; E. T. Taylor, $50; Wenford P. Thorogood, $55; N. J. Turpin, $50; W. H. Wilson, father of A. W. Wilson, $87; Elmer Wilson, $50; Robert Wittig, $85; John A. Wohlgren, $85; and the sum of $1,311, or so much thereof as may be found, as above provided, to have been lost, is hereby appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act, the said sums being the amounts claimed to have been lost by the parties named by reason of the defalcations of former paymaster's clerk, Theodore N. Carter, United States Navy, who deserted January 10, 1912, and who is still in desertion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2120) for the relief of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3011) for the relief of Winfield S. Solomon was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3646) to grant rights of way over Government lands for reservoir purposes for the conservation and storage of water to be used by the city of San Diego, Cal., and adjacent communities was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The next business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 136) providing for the registration for military service of the subjects or citizens residing in the United States of a foreign country with whose Government the United States has concluded or hereafter concludes a convention or agreement consenting to such aliens being drafted into the military forces of the United States under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," and all amendments thereto.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION.

The bill (S. 2104) to amend sections 4402, 4404, and 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been heretofore considered and the first amendment of the Committee on Commerce, increasing the number of supervising inspectors from 10 to 11, was agreed to. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 17, to strike out "$3,600" and insert "$3,450," so as to read:

Each supervising inspector shall be entitled to a salary of $3,450 a year and his actual necessary traveling expenses while traveling on official business assigned him by competent authority, together with his actual and reasonable expenses for transportation of instruments, which shall be certified and sworn to under such instructions as shall be given by the Secretary of Commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over on the request of the Senator from Utah.

ADULT ILLITERACY.

The bill (S. 4185) to require the Commissioner of Education to devise methods and promote plans for the elimination of adult illiteracy in the United States was announced as next in order.

HEIRSHIPS IN FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

The bill (S. 4151) to provide for a determination of heirship in cases of deceased members of the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, conferring jurisdiction upon district courts to partition lands belonging to full-blood heirs of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, that bill relates to the question of titles in the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma and is asked for by the Farm Loan Bank at Wichita, Kans. It is a short bill, and I think there is no objection to it provided one or two amendments are made to it in order to remove what would be objections.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator if this is the bill that he was consulting with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] about?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; the Senator from Kansas and I have agreed upon the amendments to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. OWEN. On page 2 I move to strike out lines 2, 3, and 4, in the following words:

and when such proceedings have heretofore been conducted in compliance with the laws of said State then in force, the judgment and final order therein entered shall have like effect as of the date of its entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. After the word "begun," in line 15 on page 2, I move to insert:

But this proviso shall not be construed to reopen the question of the determination of an heirship already ascertained by competent legal authority under existing laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRED H. GALLUP.

The bill (S. 3945) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Fred H. Gallup major of Field Artillery in the United States Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Fred H. Gallup, formerly a captain of Field Artillery, whose nomination as major of Field Artillery was confirmed by the Senate in June, 1916, a major of Field Artillery, to take rank at the foot of the list of majors of Field Artillery, and that no back pay or allowances shall accrue as a result of the passage of this act, and there shall be no increase in the total number of majors of Field Artillery now authorized by law by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' CIVIL RELIEF ACT.

The next business on the calendar was House concurrent resolution 39, to authorize the printing of 250,000 copies of the soldiers and sailors' civil relief act, approved March 8, 1918, etc.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to ask the Senator having the bill in charge a question just for information. I notice that quite a number of the items which were passed by the House have been stricken out. Will the Senator kindly give briefly an explanation as to why they have been stricken out?

Mr. THOMPSON. As the Senator may know, these items are considered by subcommittees of the Committee on Pensions, and I have no personal knowledge of the reason any particular item was stricken out. They are all handled by a subcommittee, but I will say to the Senator I expect to ask for a conference with the House, and the conferees will adjust differences in amounts.

Mr. GRONNA. I assume, of course, that the reason why these items were stricken from the bill was because the beneficiaries have died since the bill passed the House. Is not that the reason in most cases?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is my information that the Senator from North Dakota is correct as to most of the items, but a few cases have been considered by the committee on their merit.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask the Senator having charge of the bill what the aggregate increase of pensions carried by the bill amounts to?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am unable to furnish that information because it has not been figured out or estimated.

Mr. THOMAS. I suppose the same is true as to all of these bills? There has been no estimate of the increases?

Mr. THOMPSON. These are House bills.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that they are, and yet I suppose that the report of the House committee comes to the Senate.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have no knowledge of any estimate having been made as to the exact amount. Of course, it could be ascertained in a short time. There is, however, a full explanation of each case in the committee report.

Mr. THOMAS. Presumably it is too small an item to have concerned the committee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Oh, no; but each individual case is considered by itself, and, of course, the Senator understands that when the cases are put in what is called an omnibus bill it has not been the custom to give the total increase.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The bill (H. R. 9160) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was announced as next in order.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I believe there ought to be more Senators in attendance when these matters are being passed on. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Guion	Myers	Simmons
Baird	Harding	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Henderson	New	Smith, Mich.

Fletcher	Lenroot	Poindexter	Tillman
France	Lewis	Ransdell	Trammell
Gallinger	McCumber	Saulsbury	Underwood.
Goff	McNary	Shafroth	Wilfley
Gronna	Martin	Sheppard

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] on account of death in his family.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] are absent on Red Cross work.

Mr. KIRBY. I wish to announce the absence on official business of my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. MYERS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. WALSH] is detained on official business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] is detained by illness. I wish also to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. On page 30 I move to strike out lines 13, 14, 15, and 16, the soldier named therein, James Longmire, having died since action on the bill by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, after line 12, it is proposed to strike out the following clause:

The name of James Longmire, late of Company A, First Regiment Oregon Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 31, line 1, before the words "per month," to strike out "$36" and insert "$40," so as to read:

The name of John W. Walker, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9641) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, after line 8, to strike out:

The name of James O. Carroll, late of Company K, Second Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 15, to strike out:

The name of Jessie G. Frier, late of Company L, First Regiment Florida Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 21, to strike out:

The name of Michael P. Connaughton, late of Company E, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 16, before the words "per month," to strike out "$24" and insert "$12," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Sommers J. Love, late of the Seventh and Ninth Companies of the United States Volunteer Signal Corps, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 19, to strike out:

The name of Charles A. Walters, late of Company G, First Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BONDS OF OFFICERS OF NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

The bill (S. 3898) to require cashiers and other officers of a national banking association handling its funds to give bond and to prevent its officers and employees from making erasures on the books of the association was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the bills on the calendar, beginning with Order of Business No. 331 down to and including Order of Business No. 345, be passed over.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the measures referred to by the Senator from Utah have been on the calendar for a long time. I have attended the sessions of the Senate many times with a view to having them disposed of. I do not feel willing that those bills shall now be passed over. There are some of them that will excite discussion, and two or three—one being the bank guaranty act—I should be willing to have go over; but the first bill objected to, for instance, merely requires a bond of officers in banks and prohibits their striking out pages of the records of banks without leaving them clearly legible. There can be no possible objection to the passage of this bill. I think the Senator from Utah should be content to make his objection to bills to which there may be real objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Utah objects to the consideration of the bills extending on the calendar from Order of Business 331 to Order of Business 345.

Mr. OWEN. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 331, being Senate bill 3898.

Mr. SMOOT. We are working under a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. OWEN. I did not understand that the Senate was proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senate is proceeding to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. OWEN. Then I shall object to all other bills——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me suggest——

Mr. OWEN. And I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.]

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The noes seem to have it; the noes have it, and the motion is lost.

Mr. OWEN. I call for a quorum.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I withdraw my request for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	Martin	Sheppard
Baird	Henderson	Myers	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Smith, S. C.
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Smoot
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Swanson
Fernald	King	Owen	Thomas
Fletcher	Kirby	Page	Thompson
France	Lenroot	Phelan	Tillman
Gallinger	Lewis	Poindexter	Trammell
Gronna	Lodge	Ransdell	Wilfley
Guion	McCumber	Robinson
Hale	McKellar	Saulsbury
Harding	McNary	Shafroth

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], is detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, a few moments ago, while the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] was unavoidably absent, the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 9612) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war. There is an item in that bill in which the Senator from Delaware is interested and which was stricken out. He desires to have the action of the Senate reconsidered in striking out that item. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby House bill 9612 was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed be reconsidered, so that the Senator from Delaware may present the item he has in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know what the item is which the Senator from Delaware has in mind, but I will say to him that, as the bill has passed, it will go to conference. I presume that he desires now to reinsert some item which was stricken out by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is precisely the case.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me tell the Senator why I will ask him not to make the request at this time. The Committee on Pensions which reported these bills recommended that certain items be stricken out because they did not fall within the rules adopted by the committee; and they have gone out. The House put them in perhaps under their rule, and if they have been put in under their rule, and are justifiable, then the Senate will recede from their amendments, but if we make an exception in the case of the amendment the Senator has in mind we will have to go through every one of the pension bills we have passed and change them in accordance with the action taken on the Senator's request, if the request is acted on favorably

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the Senator misunderstands the object of the request. This is the condition, if I may explain it: The House sent a bill here which contained a pension for a widow named Georgeanna McNatt Mills. The committee, under what they conceived to be a rule which they have adopted, struck that item from the bill. In the report on this bill it is stated that, according to the records of the War Department, the soldier whose widow is applying for a pension is a deserter. Personally, I knew that man, and I took the trouble to go to the State of Delaware and get a report from the adjutant general's office of the State, which shows that that man was enlisted for three years; was taken prisoner and confined in Richmond; was exchanged; was in the hospital time and time again; and was finally discharged before Petersburg at the end of his three years' enlistment.

One of the reasons given by the committee for its unfavorable report upon this item was that the man himself had never applied for a pension. As a matter of fact, which is stated to me by the Representative from Delaware, who lives in the same town where the widow lives and where the old man lived during his life, and, as I remember, the soldier was a very peculiar man in many ways. Among others, he disliked to have the idea suggested to him that he should apply for a pension, and he denounced every soldier who was not actually wounded in the war who applied for one. And here, by a report from a committee of this body in the case of a man who took the position that it was a man's duty to fight for his country and it was not the country's duty to support him forever afterwards because he had fought for it, his widow is refused a pension because that is reason to suppose that he was a deserter, in connection with the absence of certain book entries in the War Department which some clerk may have neglected to make.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to say that I think that man ought to have as big a monument as the Government of the United States can possibly erect to his memory.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Absolutely; and it is an injustice to deny his widow a pension.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Colorado may change his mind on further consideration when he knows all the facts.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be, but the soldier's attitude is certainly most unique in these degenerate days.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be if that were the view taken by him, but I wish to call the Senator's attention to the facts.

Mr. THOMAS. I assume that what the Senator from Delaware has said is true.

Mr. SAULSBURY. And I am assuming that no one will accuse me of not saying what I believe to be true.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The man was a Union soldier; I knew him when I was a small boy, and knew that he was a very peculiar man; and I know that the Representative who lives in the very town where this man lived makes that statement to me. I have his record here from the adjutant general of the State and also as set forth in the history of the regiment, which was published by the chaplain of the regiment, as long ago, I think, as 1864 or 1865. It is as much a matter of justice to the memory of that man as anything else that I want this question fairly considered.

I was called from the chair for a moment; I have been in the Senate all day, but while I happened to be out for less than 10 minutes the bill was passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention to the record of this soldier as shown by the War Department and to state why the committee refused to grant this pension.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. I merely wish to inquire whether or not we are going to reconsider the measure.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to make a statement before action is taken on reconsidering the vote whereby the bill was passed.

William J. McNatt, late a private, Company D, First Regiment Delaware Infantry, who enlisted September 26, 1861, and whose name appears to have been carried on the rolls of the company to the date of mustering out of the organization, September 30, 1864, and while he was reported absent on account of sickness since October 18, 1863—

That is, he was absent for nearly a year—

no record of his discharge has ever been entered.

He claimed no pay from the Government during that whole time, and the only thing that the Government could do was to place upon the records that he was a deserter.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That has never been done. If the Senator will pardon me, he has never been characterized as a deserter.

Mr. SMOOT. The record so shows.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; the record shows nothing to that effect.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us see what it shows. It says here:

No record of discharge has ever been entered. The records of the War Department show that he was captured at Snickers Gap October 27, 1862, and confined at Richmond, Va., November 4, 1862; paroled at City Point November 22, 1862; reported sick in convalescent camp December 31, 1863, being so carried on the records until August 31, 1864.

Then the letter from the War Department shows that the soldier was absent from the military control without authority from March 15, 1863, and there is no record of payment for service after that date.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I imagine this case is like a good many other cases of which I have knowledge. When the war was over it frequently happened that soldiers would go home without waiting to be mustered out. The man, I think, is not a deserter, but he was not mustered out.

Mr. SMOOT. The war was not over, I will say to the Senator, March 15, 1863.

Mr. NELSON. I understand that, but if the man had served his time out——

Mr. SMOOT. That was not the case, as the Senator would know if he had listened.

Mr. NELSON. The records in the adjutant general's office of the State show that he was not a deserter.

Mr. SMOOT. I am only telling the Senator what the records of the War Department show.

Mr. NELSON. I have known of a number of cases where the records of the department and of the adjutant general's office of the State entirely disagreed. I know in my own case I caused the records of the War Department to be corrected. I was wounded and taken prisoner at Port Hudson, but the War Department records did not show that fact. So I sent to the adjutant general of the State of Wisconsin and got a certified copy of the record and filed it with the department. After that record was filed they finally amended my record and allowed me commutation of rations at 25 cents a day while I was a prisoner of war.

Mr. GALLINGER. May I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am puzzled to know how a man could have left his command in the year 1863 and remained absent until some time in 1864, nearly a year, without having been arrested as a deserter.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether or not they could find him. Evidently they did not pay him anything, and he did not claim any pay.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have never known an instance of a soldier leaving his command for over a year during a time of war without being disturbed by the military authorities. It is a remarkable case.

Mr. SMOOT. I have known of many cases where the man who left was not apprehended at all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If I may be permitted, I should like to state just what the conditions were as shown by the records of the War Department, by the records of the Treasury Department, and by the records of the adjutant general's office of the State. Then the Senator from Utah can find such fault with this man's record as he sees fit. The records of the War Department simply show that this man was taken prisoner, paroled, and then show him in the hospital and in convalescent camp; "on the roll of paroled prisoners at Annapolis, Md., to December 31, 1862. Not paid and no remarks."

The record proceeds:

On company roll from November 1, 1862, to February 28, 1863; remarks—not paid. "Captured at Snickers Gap." Last paid to June 30, 1862.

On company roll from March 1, 1863, to April 30, 1863; remarks—not paid. Absent in convalescent camp. Last paid to June 30, 1862.

On company roll from May 1 to June 30, 1863; remarks—not paid. Absent in convalescent camp.

On company roll from July 1 to August 31, 1863; remarks—not paid. Absent in convalescent camp. Last paid to June 30, 1862.

On company roll from September 1 to October 31, 1863; remarks—not paid. Absent in convalescent camp. Last paid to June 30, 1862.

On company roll from November 1, 1863, to February 29, 1864; remarks—not paid. Absent, sick in general hospital.

On company roll from March 1 to April 30, 1864; remarks—not paid. Absent, sick in hospital. Last paid, unknown.

On company roll from May 1, to August 31, 1864; remarks—not paid. Absent, sick in hospital. Last paid, ——.

On det. muster-out roll of non. vets., dated September 30, 1864, his name is borne as William McNatt, with remarks—not paid. Absent, sick, since October 18, 1863. Last paid, unknown.

The record from the adjutant general's office of the State of Delaware is as follows:

Name, William J. McNatt. Private, age 18. Joined for service at Milford, Del. Enrolled by Capt. Smithers. Enlisted for three years. Mustered into service September 26, 1861, at Wilmington, Del., by Lieut. Derrickson. Remarks: Discharged September 30, 1864, before Petersburg, Va., expiration of term of service.

That is the official record of the adjutant general's office of the State of Delaware.

I have here in my hand a publication by the chaplain of the First Regiment of Delaware Volunteers. The imprint is 1866. It was written just after the war by the chaplain of that regiment, and the muster roll, as given, shows that William J. McNatt was a private who joined August 10, 1861, at Wilmington, Del., for three years, and his time expired.

It seems to me that the mere failure of some clerk in the War Department should not cause the blackening of the memory of a Union soldier who served his country, was captured, and had to go to the hospitals from time to time; and I am informed by the Congressman who lives in his very town that he was known to be a man who claimed the right to serve his country, as he did, by volunteering, and was absolutely opposed to anybody being paid pensions for simply doing their duty to the country.

That is the record of this man, and I think it is a very, very hard thing for the report of the committee to make such a record as it does for this man, after his death, when his widow is applying for a pension.

Those are the facts as I know them. I have given you my authority. I think this pension ought to be allowed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, all I want to say is that the testimony that was before the committee, and upon which this report was based, shows that on October 18, 1863, this soldier was reported absent on account of sickness. His mustering-out time was September 30, 1864. During all that time there was no report made as to where he was. He did not claim any compensation whatever from that time until the time he died. He made no effort at all to have his record straightened. He never applied for a pension. It may have been upon the ground the Senator says; but, taking all of those things into consideration, the committee thought that a pension should not be granted to his widow, as this man's record was not complete in that he was considered a deserter.

It may be possible that he was not a deserter. Such a thing, I suppose, could happen, but it is not very probable; and I think that the records in the War Department ought to be straightened out if he was not a deserter. But when a man was absent from his company for 11 months, when he lived for years after the war, when he never asked for compensation during that 11-months' period, and never applied for a pension, it did seem to the committee that the records in a case of that kind ought to show positively whether or not he had deserted. Those are the facts in the case. If the Senate wants to reverse its action, well and good.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. How long did this man serve before he left the Army?

Mr. SMOOT. He was enlisted on September 26, 1861, and it was on October 18, 1863, that he was to have been mustered out. That is a little over two years.

Mr. McCUMBER. I just wish to suggest to the Senator from Utah, and also to the Senator from Delaware, that the general rule heretofore has been that before the Committee on Pensions would deal at all with the case of a man whose record, according to The Adjutant General's office, showed desertion he would first have to apply to have that record of desertion cleared up. That matter was settled by the Committee on Military Affairs, and, after the question of desertion had been tried out by the proper committee and a reinstatement made, then the bill for pensions would be proper before the Committee on Pensions.

I can not understand why in this particular instance a different course has been pursued.

Mr. SAULSBURY. This man's memory is a thing that probably amounts to more with his relations than the $25 a month which his widow is to get. The idea of accusing a man of being a deserter because the records of the War Department show nothing about the matter except that he was captured fighting for his country, was in prison at Richmond, was paroled, and after that was in hospitals from time to time, showing that he probably was a man in broken health! When a history of the regiment, published in 1866, shows that man discharged, and when the records of the adjutant general of his State show that he was discharged before Petersburg, why, for the purpose of making good the omission of a mere clerk in the War Department, should we have an act of Congress passed?

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, as I understand the Senator, the department records do not show desertion at all?

Mr. SAULSBURY. By no means. They show that this man, so far as its records go, was absent, sick in a hospital or sick in a convalescent camp. He is not denominated as a deserter in the records of the War Department. That is a pure assumption, because the records do not show where he was at the time of his discharge. That is the only omission. This man is termed a deserter when the records of the War Department show nothing of the kind.

Mr. McCUMBER. I had understood from the discussion of the Senator from Utah, in which he used the term "deserter," that of course the records showed that he was a deserter.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is absolutely no such evidence.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the records show that after October 18, 1863, the department knows nothing of him. He is not designated on the record as a deserter, because he was never apprehended after that time. There was no record at all after the report that was given on October 18, 1863. The day on which his organization was to be mustered out, the term for which he enlisted, was September 30, 1864, and they heard nothing of him between October 18, 1863, and September 30, 1864. The record closes there.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator this question: Under the Army rules, if there had been a desertion or if nothing had been heard from the man, if the officers knew nothing about where he was, was it not their duty to report him as a deserter?

Mr. SMOOT. I think so, Mr. President.

Mr. McCUMBER. And the fact that they did not report him as a deserter would be some evidence that they did not regard him as a deserter, would it not?

Mr. SMOOT. The department did not even know where he was. He was never paid during that time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let me add this one bit of personal testimony: I know where this man was somewhere along about 1870, because I was born in the town where he lived, and, as a child, I remember a man known as William J. McNatt who was a Federal soldier. He was an old man to me at that time, of course. I knew that he was there, and my recollection is that he kept a little shop where we children used to buy things.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, he lived for a number of years after the war.

Mr. SAULSBURY. He lived at Georgetown, Del., all his life, and was a respected man in the community.

Mr. SMOOT. He did not die for years after the war, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I renew my motion to reconsider the votes by which House bill 9612 was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. Now, Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the item on page 6, lines 9 to 12, was stricken from the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, as a new section, the following:

That the provisions of section 5 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, relating to intoxicating liquors in interstate commerce, be, and the same are hereby, made applicable to the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not any objections at all to the provisions of this amendment. I should be very glad to have it adopted; but I will say to the Senator that I hardly think it is proper to put it on a pension bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will state that this may be the only chance to get the measure through the Senate at this session.

Mr. SMOOT. There are more appropriation bills that it can be placed upon instead of putting it upon a pension bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think it will injure the chances of the pension bill in any way. I trust the Senator will not object.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know how else to do, and I am going to ask the Senator to withdraw it and offer it as an amendment to some bill where it will be more appropriate than on this one.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I withdraw the amendment, Mr. President, and will offer the measure again at some later time.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3172) to provide for the abandonment of Piney Branch Road between Allison Street and Buchanan Street NW., in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3438) to prevent corrupt practices in the election of Senators, Representatives, or Delegates in Congress was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

FOREST LANDS IN ARIZONA.

The bill (S. 3914) authorizing a right of way for the transportation of water for improvement of grazing and development of the live-stock industry upon public and national forest lands in Arizona was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

NATIONAL GUARD OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 3735) to provide for enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been read heretofore, and, unless requested, the reading will be dispensed with. One amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs has been agreed to. The other amendments will be stated.

The remaining amendments were, on page 2, line 6, to strike out "the" and insert "this"; and, on the same page, line 25, to strike out the words "except as hereinafter provided," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the present war enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia and appointment of officers in said National Guard shall be made from men who, upon examination, are found to be physically and mentally fit for military service, and within such age limits as may be prescribed by the commanding general of the District of Columbia Militia, with the approval of the President of the United States: Provided, however, That the joining of the National Guard of the District of Columbia, under the provisions of this act by anyone either as an officer or an enlisted man, shall not relieve him from liability for any service in the United States military or naval forces to which he would otherwise be subject: And provided further, That enlistments under the provisions of this act shall not prevent the continuance of enlistments, during the period of the war, of such men in the National Guard of the District of Columbia who may so elect, under the requirements of six-year contract of enlistment as heretofore prescribed: And provided further, That enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia of the special class, and appointments of officers as herein specially provided, shall be for the period of the war and for a period not exceeding three months thereafter, if such additional term of service be required by the President of the United States, and, further, for service within the District of Columbia, or in cases of emergency, in the adjoining States of Maryland and Virginia, and such officers and enlisted men when in service, shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now provided by law for the National Guard of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That all officers appointed under the provisions of this act shall be commissioned by the President of the United States, on the recommendation of the commanding general of the District of Columbia Militia, and no officer shall be commissioned without first being subject to an examination to determine his fitness to hold commission: And provided further, That during the period of the war retired officers of the National Guard of the District of Columbia may, if they so request, be assigned to duty as officers of the District of Columbia National Guard, in such grades as the President may direct, subject to examination: And provided further, That officers who have served in the National Guard and have resigned therefrom and officers and enlisted men who have been honorably discharged shall, during the period of the war, be eligible to reappointment and commission in the National Guard of the District of Columbia in such grades as they may be found qualified by examination to fill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The name of Joseph T. Lewis, late of Company G, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

This is a duplicate of the item that has been taken care of in House bill 7634, which has already been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 241 directing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into and report to the Senate the progress of aircraft production in the United States.

Mr. LEWIS. That by understanding—the Senator from Kansas will probably justify my understanding—goes over until to-morrow. Am I right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There was a bill objected to——

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the Senator yield to me that the amendments of the House to a Senate bill may be laid before the Senate and a conference appointed?

Mr. LEWIS. The calendar is not finished. I have a bill on the calendar not yet reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a remaining bill on the calendar. It will be stated.

The bill (S. 2654) providing for the appointment of two additional district judges in the State of Illinois was announced as the last bill on the calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint two additional district judges for the northern judicial district of the State of Illinois, each of whom shall possess the same qualifications and have the same powers and jurisdiction as now prescribed by law in respect to the present judges for that district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the appointment of two additional district judges in the northern district of the State of Illinois."

JOHN DOYLE, ALIAS JOHN GEARY.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Objection was made to the bill (S. 1923) for the relief of John Doyle, alias John Geary, by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. He is willing to withdraw his objection, and I ask for its consideration. It is the same bill I referred to on yesterday.

Mr. SMOOT. My colleague [Mr. KING] objected to the bill yesterday.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; and I have seen the Senator's colleague, and he wants me to call it up and proceed with it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers of the Volunteer Army, their widows and dependent children, John Doyle, alias John Geary, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private, Company C, Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, on the 10th day of January, 1863: Provided, That no back pension, pay, bounty, or other emolument shall be paid prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7634) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. HOLLIS, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has a matter that he desires now to bring to the attention of the Senate, and therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. No; he does not want to bring it up this evening.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw the suggestion I made.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to submit a request for unanimous consent that the naval appropriation bill, which was reported to-day, be made the unfinished business, and then it is my purpose to ask for a recess and commence the consideration of it promptly at 12 o'clock to-morrow. Possibly we may be able to dispose of it to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is not in the Chamber. Yesterday just before adjournment it was tacitly understood, at least by the Senators present, that Senate resolution 241 would be called up to-morrow morning. I would dislike to give consent to the request of the Senator from Virginia, and therefore I shall have to object to making the naval appropriation bill the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 22, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 21, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, God our Father, never far from us, we would draw near to Thee in the present world crisis and receive wisdom, strength, courage, fortitude, that we may meet the exigencies of the hour and prove ourselves worthy of the great gifts bestowed upon us as a free people—lovers of liberty, truth, justice, and equal rights for all mankind.

We thank Thee for the wave of patriotism sweeping through our land, which searches the heart and inspires men to heroic deeds.

We thank Thee that the young men have responded to the call of the colors, and we bless Thee for the spirit which lives in the hearts of men, illustrated in the Red Cross, the embodiment of all that is purest and best in man; a moral and spiritual force behind the men behind the guns, carrying succor, courage, fortitude to them, and deft hands, guided by warm hearts, to bind up their wounds and inspire them to hope; giving courage and comfort to those who are passing from time to eternity; reaching out the helping hand to all the sorrowing and misery-suffering people, caused by an implacable foe, who would stop the wheels of progress and turn back the tide of civilization.

The call is imperative, the needs are wide reaching; grant that every man, woman, and child shall give of their substance, that it may go forward in the humane work without hindrance.

God bless the Red Cross; uphold, sustain, and guide it; and God grant that we may all stand behind it in prayers and in money, until a righteous peace shall be established throughout the world; that right may live and wrong perish, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the zone postal rates.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the zone postal rates. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, does that include the gentleman's own remarks only?

Mr. RANDALL. Nothing but my own remarks, and they are very brief.

Mr. WALSH. None of these resolutions?

Mr. RANDALL. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

An act (S. 390) to establish the Grand Canyon National Park in the State of Arizona; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

FOOD PRODUCTION.

The SPEAKER. The House will automatically resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11945, relating to food production.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Second. For procuring, storing, and furnishing seeds, as authorized by section 3 of the act, the appropriations for said purposes of $2,500,000 in section 8 of the act and $4,000,000 under the heading "Department of Agriculture" in the act approved March 28, 1918, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes," shall be available until the date when said act of August 10, 1917, shall cease to be in effect, and any moneys heretofore or hereafter received by the United States for furnishing such seeds may be used as a revolving fund until said date.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When the urgent deficiency appropriation bill was under consideration in the Committee on Appropriations representatives of the Department of Agriculture came before the committee and urged the pressing need for an additional appropriation of $4,000,000, which was granted them in that act. I have not had time to examine the hearings of the committee on this pending bill, and I wish to ask for information as to what was disclosed in the expenditure of that additional sum of $4,000,000, which is by this paragraph continued in effect. The hearings then disclosed, as I recall, that two million and a half dollars which had been appropriated in the original food-supply bill was to be utilized largely in Texas and in the Northwest. There were certain districts of the country, like Indiana, where there was need for supplying seed by reasons of drought or failure of crops, but the department did not have the time and did not have the money to supply that need. I am seeking information as to whether this $4,000,000 was available for other parts of the country than those in which the original sum was utilized.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes; it was utilized in other sections of the country. As the gentleman states, some of this appropriation was expended in Texas and in North Dakota and South Dakota and through the drought-stricken regions. Subsequent to that, under the appropriation made by the Committee on Appropriations, the other sections of the country were taken up wherever the need was shown, and the money applied in those sections, going into the corn belt and even as far as New York State. In some remarks the other day I mentioned the exact States in which it had been expended.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give us any information, as disclosed in the hearings, as to what the prospect is for want of seed by reason of shortage of crops during the coming year?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. All the hearings we had in reference to this matter—and they were quite extensive at different times, because there were hearings on special bills as well as the appropriation bill—showed there was great necessity for looking after the furnishing of seed through various sections of the country, and the demand was very great indeed. Of course this fund provided for in this bill will be more in the nature of an insurance fund, so that these emergencies may be met as they arise. If they do not arise, of course the money will not be expended.

Mr. STAFFORD. I heard it stated in private conversation on the floor of the House here by a gentleman who is not now present that an estimator of the wheat crop predicted that the supply for the coming year from the present outlook would be several hundred million bushels more than the crop of last year. Was there anything in the hearings to justify the committee in coming to that conclusion?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The estimate showed that there would be an increase in the production of wheat this year, and we shall in all probability make the very largest wheat crop ever made in the United States. So far as the crop is concerned at the present time the conditions are very encouraging. General conditions in reference to the crop are much better than they were last year. I think there is no question but that there will be an increased production of wheat.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The effect of this paragraph is not to make any new appropriation.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Not a cent.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman said that a great deal of this seed probably would be used in cases of emergency, and that unless the emergency arose the money would not be expended for the purchase of the seed. Is that correct?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That is true. By emergencies I mean, of course, where it develops in any part of the country that there is necessity to look after the furnishing of seed. The money would not be expended unless this demand should arise. That may arise and come to the attention of the department, and then the department will take cognizance of the facts furnished them and make such an investigation as is necessary, and if it is shown that the necessity does exist then seed will be secured and the people will be notified where they are and where they can be obtained, and if large quantities are demanded of course the Government will get them and transfer them to those localities and store them and sell them at cost.

Mr. WALSH. What will be the necessity of storing in large quantities of seed if that is the plan of the department?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Of course, seed would not be stored any great length of time, but it would be necessary to secure some place to take care of them until they were distributed out to individual farmers.

Mr. WALSH. Now, the gentleman has stated the outlook for the coming wheat crop is excellent, as I understand him, and the general conditions are better than they were last year.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Very much better.

Mr. WALSH. And we will probably have a bumper crop of wheat this fall or whenever it is harvested?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It is estimated there will be a considerable increase over last year.

Mr. WALSH. Now, that result has been obtained without the utilization of this somewhat modest appropriation which was carried in the bill which passed this House for the purchase of seed wheat to be sown this year—the bill which passed early in the session. We have got this big crop coming, if nature will be kind, without the utilization of that somewhat modest sum of money we appropriated in that bill.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I presume the gentleman refers to the bill which passed the House and is now pending in the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. It is pending somewhere, I assume.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. In the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is up in the air.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The emergency provided for by that bill having passed, possibly and probably that bill will not be passed.

Mr. WALSH. So the wheat crop is absolutely safe, and there will be no need of worrying about it.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. About that appropriation?

Mr. WALSH. No; without it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. When hearings were had on this additional appropriation before the Committee on Appropriations all of the two and a half million dollars of this revolving fund had been spent, but no money, as I recall, had been received from the farmers in payment of these seeds. Can the gentleman from Mississippi in charge of the bill inform the committee whether any amount of this large fund has been returned so as to recoup the fund that was paid out by the department agents?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. My information is the Government has not lost anything by the sale of seeds.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not lost anything, but whether any of the money for the seeds furnished has been returned to the fund.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. As fast as cash is received by the department from the sale of seeds it goes back into the Treasury. The amount collected from the sale of seed up to the present time, my information is, has been returned to the Treasury.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not give the committee any information as to the total amount of seed of various kinds that has been purchased under this authorization from the department?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I stated that the other day. I will, in my speech, be glad to furnish the information again to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is in the RECORD, that will be satisfactory.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I stated that the other day in detail exactly the kind and quantity of seed, and it will appear in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Third. For the prevention, control, and eradication of insects and plant diseases injurious to agriculture, and the conservation and utilization of plant products, $811,300.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUTCHINSON: Page 2, line 23, after the word "products," insert: "for the following stated purposes and in amounts as follows: Cereal-smut eradication, $110,000; peanut conservation and utilization, $15,000; control of cotton, truck, and forage crop diseases, $117,550; farm storage of sweet potatoes, $30,000; location of Irish potato seed stocks, $30,000; plant-disease survey, $23,000; castor-bean production and utilization, $20,000; maintenance of field-bean seed supply, $10,000; field supervision of war-garden work, $7,500; production of cereals and grain sorghums, $53,250; sugar-beet nematode work, $10,000; inspection of fruits during processes of marketing, $18,000; control of new sugar-cane disease, $20,000; production of rice, $5,000; control of cereal and forage insects, $55,000; control of stored-product insects, $22,000; control of vegetable and truck crop insects, $35,000; control of sweet-potato weevil, $30,000; control of deciduous-fruit insects, $45,000; control of citrus-fruit insects, $10,000; control of insects injurious to live stock, $20,000; control of rice insects, $3,000; control of sugar-cane insects, $9,000; general supervision of emergency insect-control work, $3,000; prevention of plant-dust explosions and fires, $75,000; total, $776,300"; and strike out the figures "$811,300."

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up the time of the House, and I ask that the gentleman make the point of order.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will, then, ask the gentleman a question. Is this a similar amendment to the one offered by the gentleman yesterday?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. It is similar in that it is itemized, but makes it $35,000 more, owing to an error of somebody in drawing the bill.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. This is in identically the same form as the amendment offered by the gentleman to the first paragraph upon which the chairman ruled yesterday and held it to be in order.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. It is.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Then I do not insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, the committee made three reductions. First, the control of cotton, truck, and forest crop disease, $20,000; second, control of sweet-potato weevil, $20,000; third, in the Bureau of Chemistry, markets and plants, $60,000, making a total of $100,000.

The amount as submitted in the section is $811,300. The total estimate was $876,300, making a difference of $65,000. My amendment makes the amount just $100,000 less. So there is an error in the section before us of $35,000. While this does not seem a very great amount, especially if you are going to give carte blanche to the Secretary of Agriculture to use it for any one item, I could discuss several of the items in this amendment, but I am only going to say a few words about one, and that is the general supervision of the prevention of plant-dust explosions and fires. When that was before the committee it was divided into three sections—first, for the prevention of thrasher explosions and fires, and, second, for the prevention of mill and elevator explosions, and then for the prevention of cotton-gin explosions and fires. We reduced that $60,000, leaving an appropriation of $75,000. Now, I would like to ask the acting chairman of the committee [Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi], in charge of the bill, where that would be taken off, namely, whether it was for the prevention of mill and elevator explosions, or for what part?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It was agreed in the committee that we would leave the three executive officers that would have the execution of this law to apportion, under the direction of the Secretary, the amount that was reduced by the committee from the total amount, so that the total amount would be reduced proportionately from the several amounts proposed to be used in these bureaus of the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from New Jersey yield?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand that the Department of Agriculture is traveling around the country to prevent explosions?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Do they prevent these explosions before they occur or during the conflagration, or what is it they are doing to prevent explosions?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I will explain that.

Mr. WALSH. I wish the gentleman would.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, this provision is an appropriation of $40,100 for traveling expenses. It also makes provision for 42 extra men. The first is for the prevention of thrasher explosions, and provides for 23 men. I suppose it would take 23,000 men to investigate the thrashers that are traveling around the country. The only thing that they can do to prevent these explosions is to see that the machines are well oiled and that there is no smoking around while the thrashing is going on.

The second item I know something about, which is the prevention of mill and elevator explosions. I have a mill and an elevator and know something about the work and conditions under which they are operated. I am also a director in a large insurance company which places millions of dollars of insurance on flour mills, and it has men to go around and investigate and report to the company. If a mill owner does not keep his mill clean his insurance is revoked. This item is for the purpose of enabling them to go around and tell the different mill and elevator owners the necessity for cleaning up their establishments. And I would suggest to the department they ought to have another bureau, and that is one to investigate the mill owner or his business or his books or his last statement, as those are among the causes of a great many explosions, especially when the buiness is not a paying proposition.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not a fact that the insurance companies, for their own protection and the protection of the mill owners, make these various investigations themselves, and the cost of it is included in the cost to the owners indirectly, and for which they pay?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I believe that this item would be absolutely useless.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, these insurance men are experts, but the department aids are scientists.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] has expired.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say but very little in reference to this. This is an item which is earnestly urged by the Department of Agriculture. It was strongly presented to the committee by the chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, Dr. Alsberg, who is one of the most scientific men in the department, and a man possessing as much information as any gentleman now in the employment of the Agricultural Department. In addition to that, I talked with the Secretary himself in reference to this item and asked him his views in regard to it. He stated to me in so many words that he considered it exceedingly important, and that he wanted this appropriation made. The committee saw proper to reduce the amount from the amount estimated. That reduction is made in the total of the bill. This appropriation as presented here is for the work proposed to be done, but, of course, it will be curtailed to the extent of the amount of reduction of the amount of money provided for.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. WELLING. Can the gentleman state, in a word, why he objects to the different items being itemized here?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Because when you put in provisions and itemize the bill throughout, and specify the amount that may be expended for different purposes, then you tie down the department absolutely to the specific amount for the specific purpose which might be mentioned in the bill. The general provisions of the bill place the discretion in the Secretary of Agriculture to use this money for these purposes in a general way to secure best results. The work to be undertaken is stated in the estimates. It is proposed by the department to use the money for these purposes so far as known now, but if something should arise suddenly, as things are arising under conditions as now existing in this country, then we want him to have the discretion to allot such money as might be necessary to take care of the situation. And this is the form of the bill that is desired by the Agricultural Department, and it is approved by the Secretary himself as the best way in which to make the appropriations to accomplish the results desired.

Mr. WELLING. I notice that there is here an appropriation, according to the gentleman's amendment, for sugar-beet nematode work, $10,000. Have we any assurance, without that amendment going in, that any of this money will be expended in eradicating nematode in sugar beets?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It certainly will be expended in that way, probably that amount, possibly more than that, if the emergency should arise. Suppose it should be demonstrated by absolute observation that the disease was greater and covered a larger territory than at present supposed; if the appropriation is made in the lump sum, as it is made here, the Secretary could go beyond the $10,000. And that is the very reason why it is in the bill as it is.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman said this item was specifically asked for by the Secretary. Does the gentleman mean that the Secretary asked for it in a lump sum before the committee?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The Secretary himself was not before the committee.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I mean that the department asked for it specifically?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I stated that I had a personal conversation with the Secretary himself and talked over the whole bill with him from one end of it to the other, and we considered in that connection in our conversation this specific item; I asked him as to the necessity of this particular item, and whether or not it could be reduced.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the amendment offered shows that the addition was wrong in this case. Does the gentleman advocate that?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. If the addition is shown to be wrong, we will correct it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman announce that he believes in the policy of lump-sum appropriations for the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Not in a general way, not all the time, because we appropriate in the annual appropriation bill in detail and segregate the items. But this is an emergency appropriation, which is intended to take care of conditions as they may arise and as they come up suddenly and unexpectedly. For the general work of the Department of Agriculture we make all of the appropriations in detail and segregate them and report the several items in thebill.

You can do that with reference to the activities of the department itself, because the officials of the department, from the Secretary down to the various chiefs of bureaus and divisions, know what the actual necessities of the department will be in order to carry on the normal work of the department. But no man can read the future, and therefore it is impossible for anybody to tell what will arise suddenly calling for immediate and prompt action. Therefore these appropriations in this emergency bill were made in that way a year ago, and that plan has been followed in this bill at this time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then the gentleman does not believe in that as a regular policy?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not believe in it as a regular policy. Regular and normal appropriations should be itemized. In emergency appropriations, in times like these, discretion should be given.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then why does the gentleman oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Because of the reason I have just expressed to the gentleman from Ohio. It is because of the difference in the purposes of the bill. In the annual bill we know what the normal activities are, but nobody can tell what the necessities might be and what might arise to be taken care of under this bill, hence the necessity for discretion to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have a little more time. I move to strike out the last word myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised to hear my friend defend this policy of lump-sum appropriations, particularly in view of the fact that I have listened for so many years to his eloquent argument in favor of the appropriation for that beautiful river, the Tombigbee.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am in favor of the largest lump-sum appropriation which the Government will give for that purpose and which the gentleman from Ohio will lend me his transcendant ability to obtain. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. As a war measure?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have always supported consistently the gentleman's appropriations intended specifically for the use of the Tombigbee River; but I would not support, and I do not think the gentleman would ask me to support, a lump-sum appropriation to be expended by the Secretary of War, who, perchance, in his wisdom might see fit not to give any portion of that appropriation to the gentleman's river. Therefore I am surprised, as I say, to hear the gentleman advocate what I regard as practically an indefensible matter, namely, the making of appropriations in lump sums for the Government service. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am always for the Tombigbee, and I do not want my good friend to ever give me out on that great enterprise. I invite his help and assistance, and together we will yet improve that great river and preserve the commerce of the Nation. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON], because it is in line with the insistent demand of this House in the matter of the preparation of appropriation bills, that they should be itemized. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], inadvertently of course, has not stated the real situation. Appropriation bills are usually, if not always, properly itemized, as demanded by the House and as is eminently proper.

This is not an emergency appropriation; these appropriations are not intended to be placed at the disposal of the Secretary of Agriculture to do just as he may please with them. These are appropriations urged during this year of war for particular work, and the committee took action on each particular item, and designated definitely how much money should be used for each particular line of work in which the Department of Agriculture should engage.

Every regular appropriation bill passed by the Congress for the Department of Agriculture contains a provision to the effect that during the year for which the appropriation is provided the Secretary of Agriculture may divert 10 per cent of the money appropriated for one purpose aad use it for another purpose different from that for which it was specifically appropriated. That is necessary in order that he may meet an emergency respecting any line of work in which the department is engaged. That matter was brought up in the Committee on Agriculture when this bill was under consideration. It was suggested that the usual 10 per cent provision be inserted in this bill to give the Secretary of Agriculture the opportunity of diminishing or increasing the amount intended to be used for one purpose and applying the difference to other purposes, and the committee refused to insert that provision in this bill, insisting that the particular amounts it fixed are all that should be allowed for particular lines of work.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If the records of the committee show the full action of the committee, they will show exactly what I have stated.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Was there any proposition to include in this bill any provision for the shifting of funds to the extent of 10 or 20 per cent in this bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There was; 10 per cent was suggested.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not remember it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It was suggested before the committee, and it met with no approval from any member of the committee. It was insisted, and the committee decided, that the Department of Agriculture should be held to the use of the specific amount set opposite each proposition.

Now, the gentleman says he wishes to give large authority to the Secretary of Agriculture. I have attended all, or nearly all, of the meetings of the committee. I am familiar with the discussions had on these particular matters. I know of the increases that were made, because some items were increased, and I know of the reductions that were made, and I know why they were made. The reductions were not as large as some of us demanded, but we could not have our way. We asked that some of these items be eliminated altogether.

Now, when this bill is brought in carrying lump sums, we find two millions, and so recommended, for one item, and $800,000 for another, and we know, of course, that a lot of these separate items have been put together to make the total amounts. I have diligently gone through the estimates and through all the memoranda available that were made or used at the time the committee was considering this bill in an effort to find the separate amounts which put together would make these aggregate sums, and I have been unable to find the amounts or to make the proper calculation of the sums that would foot up the gross amounts carried in these lump-sum items; and I insist, Mr. Chairman, that neither the Secretary of Agriculture nor anybody else can take this law after it has been passed in this form and determine how much money is available for use under any one of the particular items contained in the estimates that we considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That was urged before the House yesterday when the other amendment, similar to this, was offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], in charge of this bill, insisted that the Secretary of Agriculture should have large discretion, should be permitted to spend money without any restriction whatever, admitting what I said, that it would be necessary for the Secretary to go to the office of the Committee on Agriculture and look over the minutes of its meetings and see what amounts had been fixed for each particular line of work. If that is not a ridiculous proposition I never heard one. I never knew of a law being passed along such lines. Suppose the Secretary should not do it; and, of course, he would not do it.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. The statement made by the gentleman is certainly a very important one. As I understand him, he says that in the estimates made by representatives of the department of separate items that constitute the gross amounts that are appropriated for he has failed in any instance to find that they aggregate as much as the amounts contained in this bill. Is that correct?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have been unable to pick out the different items and put them together and add them together and make the aggregate as carried in these lump-sum appropriations; no one can do it without referring to the minutes of the Committee on Agriculture. The gentleman from New Jersey, like myself, has made inquiry and investigation, and he says there is a discrepancy in this very item, and he is unable to account for it.

Mr. TOWNER. Then it is utterly impossible for the House to understand whether or not the amounts asked for in this bill are really recommended by the representatives of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is entirely true, and further along the line I have spoken of, about the difficulty confronting the Secretary of Agriculture, he will be unable to determine how much the committee has recommended or how much Congress has appropriated for any particular line of work. It will be impossible for him to determine.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Would it be impossible to tell what salaries the men who are to be employed, the experts, shall receive under this lump-sum appropriation? Will not they be able very readily to determine the salaries that the men will get?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is a very pertinent question. In these different lines of work many men are to be employed. In some lines the salaries are high and in some they are comparatively low. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] says, they run from $100 a month to $300 a month. We did make large reductions in some of the amounts which would provide for large salaries, and in some cases we lifted the recommendation for the cheaper work, as we may call it, the department wished to do. In some cases we increased the appropriation which would provide for paying the smaller salaries.

How in the world can the Secretary of Agriculture know whether he is enabled under the appropriation to employ men at high salaries or at low salaries? How can he tell anything about it? And if he should be given the unlimited authority or discretion which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] suggests he should have, and as he will have if the bill in its present form shall become a law, what is to prevent him from using the entire amount in hiring and paying men at the higher salaries? There is no limit upon his authority. Congress has determined, and the Appropriations Committee of this House have almost invariably brought in bills in accordance with that determination, that these matters should be itemized as far as possible. We are departing radically from that rule without any possible excuse for it.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman in reference to a statement made yesterday. I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to say that there were covered in this bill 11,000 employees.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Later on the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] stated that this was identical with the bill as passed last year. There seems to be a great conflict of opinion as to that—whether there are to be 11,000 new employees.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Pardon me, but the gentleman from Missouri can get his own time.

Mr. RUBEY. But the gentleman from Massachusetts has made a misstatement concerning me, and I want to correct it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman from Missouri can get time to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor, and he yields to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. A similar bill passed a year ago, was in operation for only a few months, and about 5,400 were employed. Under this bill some 11,000 employees will be provided for, a part of them engaged a year ago and the rest will be employed now, and all will be paid out of money we are now appropriating; that is, this bill will provide for about 6,000 men in addition to the 5,400 employed under the bill of last year, or more than 11,000 altogether. Or, to state it in another way, 5,400 employed last year will be continued in their jobs and 6,000 will be added this year, making more than 11,000 altogether, and they will all be paid out of money provided by this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct a statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], I know unintentionally. I did not say that the bill was identical in the number of employees. I said it was identical in language and identical in purpose; that the appropriations, however, were different, and that it was not identical in the number of men employed. This bill will carry additional men.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman say how many he considers it will carry?

Mr. RUBEY. It will not carry 11,000 additional men.

Mr. TREADWAY. How many?

Mr. RUBEY. Probably two or three thousand. There are now included in the Department of Agriculture about 16,000 or 17,000, as I stated yesterday. This bill we are now considering provided for 7,000 men, making a total of about 22,000 men. There will be some additions, because, as I said yesterday, it is proposed to put a farm demonstrator, if possible, in every county in the United States, and every time we get a good man and put him into a county as a farm demonstrator that will add one man to the pay roll. There is no question about that. There will be others added to the pay roll.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. RUBEY. I do not know whether I ought to yield or not, because the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] refused to yield to me, his colleague on the committee, and said that I could get time in my own right.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I would have yielded for a question, but not for a long statement.

Mr. RUBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAUGEN. I take it the gentleman will accept the figures submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture and put in the estimates. If he will accept these figures he will find the figures are exactly 11,907. The gentleman knows the committee reduced the appropriation to some extent and estimated about 11,000. That is not increasing it over the number employed last year. I gave the exact figures yesterday. The total number estimated in the Book of Estimates, 11,907. Now, the total number employed last year under the food-survey bill was 6,280; total increase, 5,627.

Mr. RUBEY. Now, the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture and the secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture is that the number of men used under this bill is about 7,000, and there will be two or three thousand added to that.

Mr. HAUGEN. Six thousand two hundred and eighty.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUBEY. Go ahead.

Mr. SWITZER. Speaking about the farm demonstrators, and so forth, do they have to devote all their time to this work?

Mr. RUBEY. They do.

Mr. SWITZER. Then, they are prohibited from farming and the actual production of food——

Mr. RUBEY. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SWITZER. I want to know——

Mr. RUBEY. I am asking the gentleman a question. Will he answer it?

Mr. SWITZER. If I can.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman has in his State a number of superintendents of schools in every county, has he not? Does that superintendent of schools in each county teach school or act as supervisor of schools?

Mr. SWITZER. The farmers are rising up in my State against the proposition——

Mr. RUBEY. I am sorry for them.

Mr. SWITZER. Some farmers are going to beat a man in the primaries right in my own county, so they say, because he is a school-teacher. We have got now a farm demonstrator, or some sort of farm supervisor, in my county. How many have we got to support who will not be producing anything?

Mr. RUBEY. You have one good supervisor in your county, and you ought to have him, and you ought to have one good woman to help the women in that county. Thus, you have two, or you ought to have them. I do not know whether——

Mr. SWITZER. We are not asking for any more.

Mr. RUBEY. Now, I shall decline to yield. I want to say just one word. A great deal has been said about lump-sum appropriations and about the appropriations provided in this bill. In our regular agricultural appropriations we have always endeavored in every possible way to give the House the information necessary and to subdivide this work and report the appropriations together in an itemized statement, so we know just what we are doing in this and in that particular line. Now, then, as has been said by the gentleman from Mississippi, this is emergency work and comes up here during war times. We do not know to-morrow what may be needed over in the State of Kansas to take care of pests in connection with wheat. We do not know what may happen next week or month in connection with hog cholera. It may be necessary for the Department of Agriculture to take a great deal more money that would be used in a certain item here to take care of some particular emergency. Now, I want to say another thing. I was called to order yesterday for talking about things that occurred in the committee. I am going to talk about something that did not occur in committee. If there was in the committee a word said about reporting this bill in an itemized form I never heard it, and I was right there when the bill was reported. No member of the committee said anything about it, and yet to-day they come here and ask for an itemized bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Let me see if I can arrive at how much time will be needed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the committee, and I want to be heard in reply to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has not been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to this paragraph close at the end of 10 minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. And I to have five minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. How much does the gentleman want?

Mr. ANDERSON. I want five minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that all debate close on this amendment and all amendments to the section at the end of 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph, the pending amendment, and all amendments thereto shall terminate at the expiration of 30 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Will the gentleman give the names of the gentlemen who are to speak?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], five minutes; the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], five minutes; the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], a member of the committee, five minutes; the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], five minutes; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], five minutes; and I reserve five minutes for myself.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] had the floor a few moments ago I asked him whether he agreed with the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] yesterday in regard to the increase of number of employees, and I referred to the speech made yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY]. He at once said that I had misquoted him, saying we passed this bill a year ago. Now, my impression from what had been said came from listening to the gentleman from Missouri at that time, and in order to verify my impression I want to quote the very language as it appears in the RECORD this morning of what the gentleman from Missouri did say:

> This identical bill was passed by this very Congress a year ago. We provided for these appropriations for the purpose of stimulating agriculture from one end of this country to the other. That work is being done now. The men have been employed, and they are now in the field.

Now, I think, Mr. Chairman, I was justified in my inference that he gave the House to understand that this bill was identical with the bill which we previously passed.

Mr. RUBEY. It is identical.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is all I said, but the gentleman said I did not make a correct statement at the time.

Mr. RUBEY. I know the gentleman wants to be fair, and so do I.

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. RUBEY. I supposed the gentleman referred to the number of men employed in the department, but I did not state that the number that will be employed in the department under the provisions of this act are the same.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have not had access to the record of the committee, of course.

Mr. RUBEY. I would not have made that statement.

Mr. TREADWAY. But there is a very great difference between the members of the committee as to the number of additional employees that are to be added. The gentleman from Missouri said that there was to be something like 2,000, because the work has been so successful by those already employed. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], who has the records before him, says there are to be nearly 6,000 additional employees.

There must be something wrong here somewhere when there is a difference of at least 4,000 among the members of the committee as to the probable employees under this act. It seems to me that we ought to have more definite information. Now, for instance, take that one item of the prevention of explosions. I understand there are at present employed by that department 17 men. There are to be 42 men added in that department, according to the estimates as submitted to the committee. Now, if there is useless duplication of employment it is by men who are going around snooping into the mills and factories, officially representing the Government, in order to do something that experts are employed to do by the insurance people and paid for by the mill owners themselves. They must have that class of people for their own self-protection, and why, in the name of all that is good, must we duplicate that work, unless it is as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] yesterday, in order to make positions for deserving men along toward election time?

I find that under this one amendment here there are provided at least 140 additional men, according to a hasty compilation by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON]. What are these people going to do that is beneficial to the farming interests of the country?

I represent such a community. I am always interested in the welfare of agricultural sections. I do not want to vote against this bill with a view of doing any injury to the farming interests, but I shall vote against the bill if it means that a political subterfuge and camouflage is being played here for the benefit of any aspiring political people looking for good positions for some of their subservient politicians.

That looks to me to be the real merit and crux of this bill. I think those of the committee who are taking an attitude in opposition to it are upon sound ground.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The gentleman does not really believe the Agricultural Department is asking these appropriations from Congress to be used for political purposes, does he?

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not wish to pass judgment on the merits of the various people in the executive departments at the present time. I should rather leave it to the judgment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I doubt if the gentleman really believes that.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I think we have gotten rather far away from the merits of the amendment now pending. There is a great deal of the work under the general item which we are discussing which is valuable. It seeks to provide a fund for the elimination, eradication, and control of the diseases of plants, and thereby to conserve the food supply of the country. There are many of us who are in sympathy with much, if not all, of the work which will be done under this general item.

But the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] does not in any way affect the work which will be done under this item. It is amendment of form entirely rather than an amendment of substance, although it is an extremely important amendment from the standpoint of making this legislation what it ought to be. In order to understand just what this amendment does it is necessary to keep in mind just how this bill was made up.

The Secretary of Agriculture in making his estimates for this bill followed, in a general way, the same form of language that was in the bill we passed last year. But under each one of these general items he segregated each particular item of work. In other words, he made a statement of each project which was to be conducted under the general language, and accompanied each item with a statement of the character of the work which was to be done under it. The committee considered each and every item, disallowed some of them in toto, I think, reduced some of the others, and increased a number of them.

Now, then, if the Secretary is to have any information at all as to what the committee allowed and as to what the House allowed, if the Secretary is to have any information as to what the Congress desires to have done under this bill, then the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey ought to pass, because he can get his information only from the terms of the bill itself. If he does not get it from the terms of the bill, and he can not get it and ought not to get it from the minutes of the committee, he would then, under the terms of the law itself, be entitled to use this money for any of the general purposes mentioned in the general language. He would not be confined to the use of the money for the specific purposes for which the Committee on Agriculture allowed it, nor would he be confined in its expenditure to that which the House understands the money is appropriated for.

Now, one of the items which has been discussed, and which is covered by this language, is the item for the control of dust explosions, which has been referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Now, what we intend in that case is this: It is not an experimental item, not a research item, but it is a propaganda item pure and simple. The Bureau of Chemistry has made some experiments touching the causes of explosions in thrashing machines. They observed that most of these explosions were caused by the creation of static electricity in the pulleys and belts of the machines, and that by a suitable system of commutators and electric wiring that static electricity could be gathered and grounded, so that it would not cause a spark and thus set fire to the dust in the machine. Now, this item is intended for work among the people who run these thrashing machines, to induce them to adopt the methods worked out by the Bureau of Chemistry for the purpose of preventing explosions in such machine.

Practically the same kind of work will be done under the item for the prevention of explosions in flour mills. Any man who wants to put on any one of these preventive instruments can do it. He can get them on the market. There is nothing secret about it. It is simply a question of whether he wants to do the thing which the Bureau of Chemistry says can be effectively done in order to prevent explosion.

It seems to me that the Secretary of Agriculture ought not to be in the business of soliciting for this purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I was considerably surprised yesterday when the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] was voted down, and I was more surprised at the arguments used against it. For instance, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], said, in defense of this lump-sum appropriation, that he had seen on this floor pension bills carrying hundreds of millions passed in a few hours; that he had seen the post office bill passed in a few hours, and inasmuch as those committees had done wrong he thought this committee ought to be entitled to do wrong also.

Now, the trouble with the illustration was that it did not fit. There is no lump-sum appropriation in the pension bill. Everybody ought to know that, especially the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. Is there any authority vested in the Secretary of the Interior to distribute pensions around among his favorites, as it could be done under this lump-sum appropriation? Not at all.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The pension appropriation bill, which passed the other day, carried in a lump sum $185,000,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. There is no authority there to distribute it to Tom, Dick, and Harry, as there is under this bill to distribute the salaries to whom they please.

But however that may be, it is no defense of a wrong bill to say that some other bill is worse than this. That is no defense at all. It has been the uniform practice and it is recognized to be good legislation to have segregated items everywhere, and in this bill especially there is more necessity for it than ever. What is there in this war argument that it is a great necessity, and therefore we should not segregate these items and thereby limit the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to distribute this money as he might see wise? War? Yes; we are at war. God knows we are at war. We have to raise large sums of money. Is that an admonition that we should use that money economically and wisely or not? Is it not an admonition for economy when we see the solicitation of the children's pennies for war stamps, when we see the solicitation for larger sums for liberty bonds, when we see everybody straining every effort to contribute to the war, when this magnificent effort is made on the part of the women and children of the United States to raise funds for the war? Is not that an admonition to us when we are considering an appropriation bill that we should prevent waste in the expenditure?

One of the objects of the bill is said to be preventing waste. My God! Can you ever find a more wastefully framed bill on the statute books than the one that is brought in here? [Applause.] Never. It literally encourages wasteful expenditures. I am surprised that anybody on that side of the House, after his attention has been called to it, will vote against a proposition to segregate these items, as desired by the gentleman from New Jersey. [Applause.] It seems to me to be unthinkable in these times, when we are raising money in the way we are, that we should outdo all the wasteful Congresses of the past in order to bring in here a bill that is an example of wastefulness in itself. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I know it is unpleasant for that side of the House to hear these statements, but I ask for order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The committee will be in order. The gentleman from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. STEENERSON. I am very glad to see that the Members on that side of the House over there are listening and paying attention to every word. I hope what I say will fall upon willing ears. I say it is a most important thing these days that we should scrutinize every appropriation bill which, unless modified as is proposed in this amendment, would give discretion to spend enormous amounts on new-fangled theories like the one described by my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] about explosions. The committee has done faithful work here and has determined, according to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], the sums that ought to be and could be wisely spent on each of these subjects. Now you propose to give discretion to some bureaucrat to spend the money as he pleases.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] in charge of this bill says he is willing to trust the Secretary of Agriculture. Well, what does the Secretary of Agriculture know about the administration of these affairs? The office of Secretary of Agriculture is getting so big now that he can not possibly devote his personal attention to these things. He has got to leave it to some bureaucrat, some head of a bureau that thinks he owns the world, and most of them do. We have experience of that. No; let Congress make the limitation and not leave it to them to spend as they please. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, it is hard to understand why some of the gentlemen here are causing so much delay in the passage of this very important measure. This is a short bill, only five pages long. The House commenced to consider it on Friday. This is Tuesday. This is an emergency measure, made necessary by the war, and yet gentlemen are holding up the House in its passage of this measure because it confers discretionary powers on the Secretary of Agriculture about matters of small magnitude compared with some of the colossal powers that they have put in the hands of other departments.

But this measure, pertaining to the business of the farmers of the country, is held up by gentlemen who undertake to hamstring it, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] suggests that it is an effort to play politics. I submit to this House and to the people who will read this record in the fall time that the effort to play politics comes from another quarter in this House. There is no politics being played by the administration in its conduct of the war. The President, at the outset, when a man was needed to lead Russia to the light, appointed the great lawyer, Mr. Root, a Republican. Not long ago he appointed ex-President Taft to an important position in this city. Recently he appointed the great lawyer Hughes, a Republican, to make an important investigation. The cry of politics falls flat, and ill does it become gentlemen who are going to have to face their record this fall to talk about politics in connection with a measure like this and then vote for the measure.

Gentlemen, it will be said to some on both sides this fall, "I know you voted for the bill; but you did all you could to delay it, and you did all you could to defeat it until the record vote came, and then you swallowed it, after doing all you could to make it obnoxious and loathsome."

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that we may be able to come together here and pull together in the passage of this bill. It is an important measure. Why, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] voted for the food-control bill, that outlined this very work. This is a supplementary measure, necessary to carry out the purposes of the original bill. Why gentlemen will take up time now and delay the passage of this measure, which the Secretary of Agriculture is hoping will pass speedily, I can not understand.

Gentlemen, let us quit it. Let us get together. If we have serious objections, let us present them and get through with them and pass the bill. We are not conferring extraordinary powers here; nothing at all compared with some of the powers that we have conferred without much debate in this House. I trust that gentlemen will support this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I trust when we read the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], just concluded, to-morrow morning we will notice at the close in brackets the word "applause," the echoes of which still reverberate. I do not believe that Members on that side of the House or Members on this side of the House are going to be frightened by this prattle about the emergency and about the delay in the passage of this measure. The truth is, Mr. Chairman, the millions are coming too easily from the pockets of the taxpayers. The heads of departments are not imbued with the spirit of economy. They come up and submit their estimates and then insist—as I understand they do insist, or, at least, express the strong desire, as in this instance—that we should pass bills in lump-sum appropriations. I wonder why the distinguished chairman in this instance, instead of putting this bill into six or seven paragraphs, did not put it all into three or four lines, lump it all into one appropriation of $18,000,000, or whatever the total may be.

Now, I do not believe that the farmers of this country, or the laboring people of this country or any other class of our people, are dependent for signifying or demonstrating their patriotism upon appropriations made out of the Federal Treasury. I deny it as far as the farmers are concerned and as far as the laboring people are concerned. I do not believe we have got to stimulate the farmers' patriotism by appointing farm supervisors in every county of the Republic or by appointing demonstrators as to how to make cottage cheese in the various rural communities of this Nation.

Furthermore, I submit that we should follow the plan of this measure, as we have in other emergency measures and other annual appropriation bills, by itemizing the appropriations and say to the heads of departments, "You have available for this purpose a certain amount of money, and if it is not sufficient, under the general powers you possess, you can exceed that sum and trust to Congress to make it up in a deficiency appropriation."

The gentleman from Alabama, after an absence of several days from the House, displaying himself, I presume, in all his pristine splendor to some of the communities in his great Commonwealth, making appeals for patriotic purposes, which he can so well do, comes back all fussed up because this bill was taken up on Friday and we have not passed it before he returns. And, forsooth, he must get up and read a lecture because gentlemen rise on the floor and take part in legitimate discussion and legitimate amendments, and because of this he charges delay.

I suppose that he is one of the gentlemen who is anxious that we should adjourn by the 1st of July, so that he can go back to his constituency and perhaps persuade them and the people of his State that he ought to be elevated to some other body in response to a suggestion contained in a letter which he sent out under his own frank to the wondering public within the great State of Alabama. [Applause.] That great constituency that is sitting there in fear and trembling waiting upon the decision which he shall make of that momentous question—whether he should run for the Senate or return to the House. For this he would presumably hasten us up and hurry us along without debate or consideration or discussion of the appropriations of billions, which many of these bills carry.

The time will come, Mr. Chairman, when the people of this country will ask their chosen representatives, Why did we vote for these measures and why did we not ascertain the reasons for these lump-sum appropriations?

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the people of this Republic expect us to pass measures without due consideration and due deliberation. I think they expect us to remain here in the House and consider and discuss every proposition that is made to us, whether it takes a week or two weeks, or all summer, and to do it calmly, dispassionately, and patriotically; and if we do that there will be no furor at the homes or at the firesides of the people of this Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to get back to the proposition pending before the House, and that is the question we have up for consideration. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey, which is the pending amendment before the House, proposes to segregate the various items and fix the specific sums which shall be appropriated for each activity. The provisions of the bill are in accordance with the bill passed a year ago, and the appropriations under the bill passed a year ago were exactly like the appropriations under this bill. There is no difference between them, except in amounts; there is no difference in language or difference in purpose. That bill received practically the unanimous vote of the House. There were only 5 votes, as I recollect, against it. Now, if it was good legislation then, why should you not continue the language of the bill; why should you change the plans that were then adopted and pursue a different plan when you are making appropriations for the work that was begun under the plan inaugurated a year ago and has proven successful?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I can not yield, I have only a short time. It was stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] a moment ago that there was never a more wasteful proposition proposed on the floor of the House than in this bill. It is wasteful, wonderfully wasteful, is it not, to appropriate $11,000,000 to stimulate and encourage the agricultural interests of the whole United States of America! Is it not awful and horrible to think about, to expend $11,000,000 to help the agricultural interests and assist the farmers when they are standing under the burden placed upon them as well as other people in the appropriations of billions of dollars.

Let us look at the result. The great stimulation of agriculture in farm products during the year 1917 was brought about to some extent, and I believe to a considerable extent, by the appropriations of the last annual Agricultural bill and the emergency bill.

The total amount of production last year of farm products was $19,413,849,381, while the total amount of the products during the year 1916 was $13,406,364,011, making an increase in 1917 of $6,037,485,370 over 1916.

The total amount of products in 1917 exceeded the average for five years previous by $10,055,083,502.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I have not the time to yield. When the farmers of this country are producing this enormous quantity and value of agricultural products and are patriotically responding to every request made of them, when they have produced this more than nineteen billions of dollars in a single year, some people see fit to get up on the floor of the House and talk about wastefulness and extravagance in an appropriation of the sum of $11,000,000 to help them in their work and to stimulate and encourage the agriculture of the country. The man who does it is no friend of the farmer and not in sympathy with him. I think you had better talk about wastefulness somewhere else. I do not like to hear people talking about economy when it comes to the great tillers of the soil—the people who in the sweat of their faces produce the wealth of this country and support its institutions and patriotically respond to its requests. [Applause.] Let economy be practiced on somebody else. [Applause.] I would much rather hear them talk about wastefulness and the practice of economy in some other directions in this country where it could be practiced, and where in all probability it should be. Reduce some of the billions that are being appropriated and quit talking about the insignificant sum of $11,000,000 appropriated in this bill for the benefit of the whole agricultural interests of the United States of America when the production of agriculture added over $19,000,000,000 to the wealth of this country last year. [Applause.] I appeal to the Membership of the House to defeat this amendment, and to let the discretion remain in the Secretary of Agriculture to carry on this work as it was begun, and which he has so successfully done up to the present time, as shown by the results. If the work already begun has brought about these results, why change the plans and risk the possibility of injuring the service already begun. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. HUTCHINSON and Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi to act as tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fourth. For increasing food production and eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food by educational and demonstrational methods, through county, district, and urban agents and others, $6,100,000.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A moment ago when I was pleading for speedy action upon the passage of this bill the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] took occasion to refer to the fact that I had been absent for a few days. I had been absent making patriotic speeches down in my State. I wired to the gentleman from Mississippi, who is one of the best friends the farmer ever had in Congress, to know if it was necessary for me to immediately return. I should have been here on Friday, but believing as he did that nobody would seriously oppose a measure looking out for the development of the agricultural interests and the carrying on of this great work during the war, he said that he did not think there would be any opposition to the bill, and that there was no necessity for me to return. But I am here now. The gentleman from Massachusetts suggests that I am one of those who wish Congress to adjourn early in order that I may go down into Alabama and see if I can induce the people of the State of Alabama to send me to the Senate. This is the second time that Republicans here have injected themselves into this senatorial situation in my State. You can not fool me, gentlemen. I know the earmarks and just what is back of such performances. There are Democrats in public life who get Republicans to play their tricks for them; but it will not work with me, nor will it work with the people of my State. If I desire to submit my candidacy to the people of my State, I shall do so in obedience to the call of the people of the State and in response to my duty as I see it. I paid for the postage on the letters that the gentleman says I franked in connection with the office of Senator in Alabama. While I am still of the opinion that it was frankable because of its reference to public questions, the Post Office Department thought that it contained a line or two which took it out of the class of frankable matter; but that should not worry the gentleman from Massachusetts. I suppose that the gentleman is one of those who favor selling to the United States Government the pneumatic-tube service, the greatest piece of graft ever foisted upon a free people. I trust that we may adjourn before that can be unloaded upon the American people for $4,400,000. It is repudiated by every postal expert in the Government, denounced by every postmaster where it has been operated, opposed by the chairman of the Post Office Committee of this House and by the Postmaster General of the United States. I shall be here to fight that when the gentleman advocates it upon the floor of this House. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUTCHINSON: Page 3, line 2, after the word "others," insert "for the following stated purposes and in amounts as follows: Fruit and vegetable utilization, $35,000; general administration of extension work, $35,000; home-economics work, $25,000; extension work in Northern and Western States, $134,200; county-agent work, $1,893,000; boys' and girls' club work, $382,000; home-demonstration work, $1,327,400; extension work in Southern States, $90,000; county-agent work, $1,333,815; boys' club work, $75,300; home-demonstration work, $803,385; total, $6,135,000"; and strike out the figures "$6,100,000."

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that we have discussed this amendment, I wonder if we can not agree on a time for debate. I ask unanimous consent that all debate close upon this amendment and all amendments thereto in 30 minutes, 5 minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], and 5 by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON], the remaining 5 minutes to be occupied by me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes, the time to be occupied as indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is for the purpose of itemizing the entire paragraph. When these 11 items were before the committee there were no reductions in any one of the 11. The total amount of the estimates submitted by the bureau was $6,135,000. The bill before the House carries in this section $6,100,000, showing a reduction in the estimates of $35,000, when there were no reductions in any of the 11 items. This work is practically for extension work, for county-agent work, in Northern, Western, and Southern States. You notice in the itemized amendment boys' club work and home demonstration work, but practically all of it is for salaries and expenses of demonstrators. There has been no change in the different items. As I said, my only object in offering the amendment is to set the Department of Agriculture right, but there is an error of $35,000 in the total amount of this section. This amendment of mine gives $35,000 more than is asked for in this section of the original bill.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I do not see the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] in the House at the present time. It has been reserved for him to give a new reason why we should vote for this bill. The gentleman intimates, if he does not expressly so state, that in case anyone upon this side, or the other side for that matter, has the temerity to vote against this bill some one will be sent out into his district this fall and his constituents will be told that he voted against a war emergency measure. Now, who that will be who will go out I do not know. I have too much respect for all the gentlemen on the other side with whom I have any personal acquaintance to anticipate that any of them would go out into my district and do so. If they want to, however, they may have the opportunity, because I am going to vote against this bill unless it is amended so as to make it more acceptable. I might say also that I understood that the gentleman from Alabama intimated that nobody dared to vote against this bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman from Alabama did not intimate anything of the sort, but whoever does do it must take his stand in the record.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen must not interrupt without the consent of the gentleman having the floor.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think everyone in the House heard what the gentleman from Alabama said and knew what he meant. His meaning was plain enough, and I want to know if it has reached that state of affairs here that a Member can not endeavor to reduce the amount carried by any of these bills; that he can not say, "I will not vote for a bill because it contains unnecessary extravagances and waste," without being threatened that somebody will go out into his district and say he refused to vote for an emergency war measure? If we have reached that stage in our deliberations, let me say we are proceeding so that this Nation will come to bankruptcy before we finish this war. It is not the way to win the war; it is the way to lose the war. Shall we pay no attention to matters of economy, pay no attention to waste, pay no attention to incompetence? If so, we might as well not consider the bills at all. Why is this bill brought in making appropriations in these lump sums? The only explanation that can possibly be given is that if the items were given a large number of them would be stricken out or reduced. This bill might just as well be cut down one-half and answer all purposes. But we have got it here in such a form that we can not reduce it; we can not cut it down. We might itemize it, and to that extent the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey is an excellent one, because it would leave the bill in better shape than it is now, but this is not what we need. We need another bill, so itemized that we can reach these items, and refuse to vote for those we did not approve and thought were unnecessary, and cut down those altogether too large. That is the form in which this bill ought to have been presented.

Now, the gentleman from South Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, for whom I have the highest respect and esteem, stated here yesterday that we had voted for much larger bills here in connection with the Army and Navy and put them through in quicker time than we have this. Very true. They were emergency measures, and yet I thought at the time, and I still think, that we did not take as much time for their discussion as we ought, and it was not necessary that we should rush them through in that manner. I may have been wrong about that, but this bill is not an emergency measure. This appropriation will not go into effect until the 1st of July, and if this bill is not passed and signed by the President until July 1 it will not make one bit of difference with the work of the department——

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Every employee employed under the emergency food bill, passed on the 10th of August, 1917, will go out on the 30th day of June unless this bill passes and is signed by the President and becomes a law before that time, and it will disorganize the whole work. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is one day's difference from what I said, and June 30 is more than a month distant. This is not an emergency measure, and any person who may go out over the country stating it is an emergency war measure will state something that is not the fact. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable controversy about the number of employees to be increased. If the gentleman from Missouri is present, I would like to call his attention to page 35, where he will find the items for the extension work, Northern and Western States. The estimated expenditure for 1918 is 1,524 employees; the number required in 1919 is estimated at 3,707, an increase of 2,183. Turn to page 37 and he will find the item for the extension work in the Southern States. The required number for 1919 is 2,110; the estimated expenditure for 1918 is 1,147, an increase of 963.

If he will turn to page 57, he will find the item for special work in crop estimating. The number required in 1919 is reported as 2,938; the number estimated for 1918 is 68, an increase of 2,870.

He will find an increase in these items of more than 6,000 people, and yet we have been told repeatedly that there is practically no increase in the number of men to be employed by the department. As I have stated, and as I stated at the beginning, the estimate furnished by the department will require the employment of more than 11,907 people.

That is all I care to say.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Does anybody on that side desire to be heard?

Mr. HAUGEN. The question for this House to determine is, Are we justified in appropriating this money in employing these 6,000 additional people. As I said the other day, I believe that 11,000 people could be employed to better advantage back of the plow rather than sending them over the country riding in Ford cars and automobiles. The question of food production is to be taken into consideration. If so, there is no question but that better results could be had. If we are to proceed in a business way, it is up to this committee and to Congress to report an itemized bill, so that all of these items could be segregated, so that everybody may know what the money is to be expended for; that the Secretary of Agriculture may have something for a guide as to how the money may be expended. If so, it is up to Congress to determine and to direct how it shall be appropriated.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this is another amendment to itemize the appropriations so that Congress may know how much money is intended to be used and to put a limit on the amount that the Secretary could use in these particular lines of work.

I know of nothing that I can add to what I have said. This House knows I have always favored liberal appropriations for every legitimate purpose in connection with agriculture. I have always been in favor of this county-agent work, and nothing that I have said or may say should be taken in opposition to the principle on which it is founded. I introduced the first bill ever introduced in this House to provide for general employment of county agents throughout the country. A similar bill was later introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and became the law and is now the law. For that kind of work the regular appropriation bill carries something like a million and a quarter of money. This bill carries several hundred thousand dollars. It is impossible to find out the exact amount, because we do not know what items considered by our committee are included in this $6,100,000. The Lever bill, the law to which I have referred, provides several million dollars now. It is a graduated affair, more available or to be appropriated one year than the year before, until it reaches a maximum of $4,100,000, and that amount shall be annually appropriated thereafter. So you can see that there is a very large amount of money appropriated at different times and in different ways for this extension work and for county-agent work, as a part of it is called.

I favor the work. It is very important and necessary. Good results have followed it. I have objected, however, to the employment of so many men to take up different lines of this work, all of which are similar, work that could be done by one man. But there seems to be no disposition on the part of the House to make any restriction which will require the work to be done in the manner I have suggested.

Carried in this appropriation bill there are a lot of other things. We can not tell what they are, because the amounts were changed by the committee and a lot of amounts have been put together and made into this aggregate of $6,100,000. No one can tell what they are; no one can tell without referring to the minutes of the Committee on Agriculture.

There are appropriations here of $50,000 in relation to poultry. One gentleman, appearing before us, thought he had made a hit when he said that a large part of this money would be used to send men and women out into the country to induce the building of individual chicken houses and operate these houses during the war, when money is scarce, when it is necessary for us to enact unusual and burdensome tax laws.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And when the board of control, or whatever you call it, is putting an embargo on the movement of all kinds of building material.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. When we are spending tremendous sums of money, making appropriations almost without limit, and taxing the people to produce that money, we ought to go slow in the matter of these appropriations. It was said in the committee, and even urged before it, that these amounts are small—only a few thousand dollars—and comparison was drawn between them and the appropriation of millions, even billions, of dollars for other departments. We were asked why we would refuse an appropriation of a few thousand dollars for the Department of Agriculture; but these few thousands, added together, aggregate more than $18,000,000, and some of them are, in my opinion, absolutely unnecessary. Our duty, as I see it, is to economize wherever we are able, cut down appropriations, and prevent extravagance and unnecessary use of money wherever we can. That is the duty of the Committee on Agriculture. We do not refuse or hesitate to make immediately available the large amounts, the billions of dollars, requested by the Committee on Military Affairs, for instance; but we have felt it our duty to restrict these amounts, demanded of our committee, even though they are small, wherever we could and to cut out unnecessary and wasteful items. We tried to do it. The committee in its bill has disregarded the action of the entire committee, the spirit of their action, as I understand it. The amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] will carry out that spirit as to itemizing the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this item provides for increasing the food production, eliminating waste, and promoting conservation of food by educational and demonstrational methods through county, district, and urban agents, and makes an appropriation of $6,100,000. As I understand it, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] has offered an amendment providing that the object for which this money is to be appropriated shall be expressed in the appropriation.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] became quite eloquent a few minutes ago in trying to demonstrate the wonderful agricultural production that has come about through slight appropriations by Congress for agriculture. I think he stated that in 1916, in round numbers, the total amount of agricultural production, which includes live stock, was about $13,000,000,000. and in 1917 it amounted to over $19,000,000,000, an increase, if I understood him correctly, of $6,031,000,000, and that this increase is accounted for by legislation such as this. But the gentleman failed to say that most of that increase came about by reason of the increased price at which the 1917 crop was valued over the value of 1916. If he would measure the production correctly, he would give the number of bushels of increase in each of the cereals and the number of cattle, hogs, and other live stock that had been produced in 1917 over the production in 1916.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. If I can have some more time.

The gentleman spoke also of the fact that we are only appropriating the small sum of $17,000,000. He failed to call to the attention of the House that the agricultural appropriation bill carried over $28,000,000.

The annual appropriations for permanent purposes carry over $18,000,000, and the deficiency bill appropriated for seed and for forestry $5,000,000 more, or a total, with this bill, of about $60,000,000 for agricultural purposes this year.

Now, I do not complain of any wise appropriation for agricultural purposes, but a committee in the other room is to-day considering appropriations running into the billions of dollars, and the War Department is estimating down to the last dollar what it is going to cost to produce shot and shell to win this war. But this committee brings in a bill for $18,000,000 without saying what the money is to be expended for, except that it is for "agricultural educational purposes." Why, I understand from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] that they propose to send men out to educate the farmers how to build individual chicken houses. [Laughter.] According to the hearings, they propose to spend $80,000 to educate the housewives of America how to make cottage cheese. Why, I think if my friend from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] will go throughout the agricultural producing sections of the country, he will find that our farmers and our farmers' wives are pretty well educated with regard to some of these things, and some of them resent the fact that they will have men drawing high salaries paid from the proceeds of the sale of liberty bonds to carry on this war to teach the farmer how to build a chicken house, or to teach a familiar household art to his patriotic wife, who knows more about making cottage cheese than any of the men you are going to employ and send throughout the country.

Oh, gentlemen, that is not the way to win this war; and before this war is over, it will not be so popular to come here and ask for lump-sum appropriations to do work of this kind, and it will not be very popular to vote for such appropriations. What are you going to do with it? That is not an unusual request. Under the law it was the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture on the 1st day of December to make an estimate, which would be open to Congress, showing just what he is going to need, and here six months have elapsed and we do not know what this $18,000,000 is to be expended for. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I was somewhat surprised at the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], who has just taken his seat, when he complained of the appropriations we are making for agricultural purposes. Even if the appropriations made for the agricultural interests of the United States of America are in accordance with the figures which he furnishes—$60,000,000—does the gentleman object to appropriating $60,000,000 for the agricultural interests of the United States?

Mr. GOOD. No; if I know what it is being appropriated for.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman asked me a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman asked me a question, as I understood it.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. No; I was asking the House. I am always ready to yield, and I very rarely decline to yield; but I asked the gentleman from Iowa to yield to me, and he declined to do so.

Mr. GOOD. I thought the gentleman asked me a question. I beg the gentleman's pardon, if he did not ask me a question. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The Agricultural Department ask for these sums, and they are justified in doing so. I say that the appropriations made in the Agricultural bill and the emergency bill of last year and the emergency bill of this year have been fully justified by the results obtained.

The gentleman spoke about the increased price of agricultural products. I wondered then if he was objecting to that. I am willing for the farmers of the country to get the full price for their products, and I assume the gentleman himself is willing that they shall receive the full value.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman ask me a question now?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. No.

Mr. GOOD. I voted against $2.20 wheat. I do not believe that the agricultural interests are asking any great increase, or any increase at all in many of their products.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not yield.

Mr. GOOD. I thought the gentleman wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. No; but I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. GOOD. I asked him if he did ask me a question, and he said he did not want me to answer it.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. No; I said I would yield in order that the gentleman might ask me a question, and I would try to answer it. I did not know whether I could answer it or not, but I was willing to try. I was not discussing wheat, and I was not discussing the gentleman's vote on wheat. I voted in that instance to sustain the President. I thought the gentleman voted the same way I did, because he spoke that way, and I presumed he had voted in accordance with the way he spoke. [Laughter.]

Now, then, coming back to the question at issue, this is an identical proposition with the one offered to the paragraph preceding, and to the paragraph preceding that, and the House has had two votes on these propositions, and it has voted them down, and I appeal to the House to vote this proposition down.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is asked for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANDALL: Page 3, line 2, after the figures "$6,100,000," insert:

"Provided, That in order to further eliminate waste and to promote conservation of food, it shall be unlawful during the existence of the war with Germany to use any food or food materials in the manufacture or preparation of alcoholic beverages."

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have the gentleman state what his point of order is.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The point of order is that it is not germane to this bill and not germane to this paragraph. This paragraph is "For increasing food production and eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food by educational and demonstrational methods, through county, district, and urban agents and others."

Mr. RANDALL. Is that the only reservation, that it is not germane to this paragraph?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It is not germane to the bill or to the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that it is not germane to the bill and that it is legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that the extent of the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. STFFORD. During the discussion I may think of some other grounds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the point of order is that it is not germane to this paragraph.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Not germane to the bill, not germane to the purposes of the bill, and is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a further ground—that it is legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the first ground of the point of order—that is, that the amendment is not germane to the paragraph—let me read the paragraph:

For increasing food production and eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food by educational and demonstrational methods, through county, district, and urban agents and others.

Now, the amendment uses the identical language of the paragraph in the bill. My amendment reads:

In order to further eliminate waste and to promote conservation of food it shall be unlawful during the existence of the war with Germany to use any food or food materials in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages.

It seems to me that that answers the contention as to the amendment not being germane to the paragraph. The language is identical, the purpose is identical. Germane; of course!

As to the further point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, I call attention to the fact that the provisions of paragraph 4 as they appear in this bill are not permanent law in any act.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, legislation on this bill was made in order by the rule.

Mr. RANDALL. Then the amendment is in order. I did not know the provisions of the rule, but I call the attention of the Chairman to section 4 in this bill; the paragraph is not permanent law and only becomes law by being attached to this act. Therefore that paragraph is new legislation. Whether it is in order or out of order, this amendment is in order, for, as the gentleman from Massachusetts says, amendments have been made in order by the rule. Therefore the only question for the Chairman to decide is whether it is germane to the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the phraseology of this bill, from the paragraphs designated first to sixth, is in virtual identic language to section 8 of the food-survey and food-control law passed August 10, 1917. The first paragraph of the bill under consideration states that there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums for the purposes indicated.

There is nothing in this paragraph or in this bill which seeks to appropriate funds to regulate the use or conservation of food in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages. The present paragraph is limited to increased food production, eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food by educational and demonstrational methods through county, district, and urban agents.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. Would not the prevention of the use of a bushel of grain in the manufacture of alcohol be a conservation of food products by demonstrated methods?

Mr. STAFFORD. It would not in my opinion. Now, segregating the items which were included in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey shows that this appropriation was to be used largely for salaries for educational and demonstrational methods. The gentleman seeks to incorporate a new legislative feature in the paragraph that is to restrict the use of food, to make it unlawful to utilize it. It has no direct relation; is not akin or related in any way to the authorization in the original bill or to that in the paragraph. If it is not related to those authorizations, I respectfully submit that it could not be considered as germane. It is new legislation entirely. When the gentleman, on a like occasion, sought on the Post Office appropriation bill—and I direct the Chairman's attention to the ruling of the Speaker on that question—to recommit the Post Office appropriation bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads with instructions to forbid the further carriage in the mail of any newspaper carrying advertising matter relating to liquors, the Speaker held that although there was under consideration in the Post Office appropriation bill an amendment to the Judicial Code that sought to restrain mailable matter so far as fraud was concerned, that that did not warrant a motion to recommit involving extraneous matter, although somewhat akin, that was carried in the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL].

The question was argued at great length by Members of the House—the gentleman from Georgia [Mr: CRISP], who upheld the position that it was germane, and the opposition by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], and by myself. The Speaker there held that it was not germane to the subject, although it was in a way distantly related to it because it related to restricting mail matter. The amendment reported by the committee sought to restrict mail matter so far as fraud was concerned and not advertising matter relating to liquor, and it was accordingly held not in order.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I only want a moment's time of the Chair; but, as I understand the amendment, it seems to me to be germane not only to the bill but to the paragraph to which it is offered. The rule of germaneness, subsection C says:

The general subject may be amended by a specific proposition of the same class.

Here is the general subject to increase food production, eliminate waste, and promote conservation of food. That is the general subject. Here is a specific subject, by withdrawing from brewers the use of food products for the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. If it is not germane to the provisions of this bill and to this particular section, I am frank to say that the question of germaneness is one that I can not distinguish, because it is a specific provision in a general proposition of food conservation and the prevention of waste.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, while I am personally in favor of the amendment on its merits, considering the parliamentary question that has been raised, it seems clear that the amendment proposed is not germane to the subject matter of the paragraph. In paragraph 4 it is proposed to make an appropriation for eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food "by educational and demonstrational methods." The amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL] proposes to eliminate waste and conserve food by making it unlawful to use certain foods. This is an entirely different proposition than is involved or than was contemplated by the language of the paragraph as it was reported to the House. The proposed amendment has nothing to do with educational or demonstrational methods of avoiding waste or in conserving foods and is clearly not germane to the thought or purpose of the legislation in the paragraph as it now stands. If one could offer an amendment like this and have it in order upon this paragraph, then almost any kind of legislation would be in order as an amendment to the paragraph. By an amendment, then, the use of any food product could be inhibited. Such a wide latitude for amendments would not, I believe, be contended for by the author of the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. What does the gentleman say about the rule making the amendment in order?

Mr. NORTON. If this amendment were in order under the rule, it would have to be a germane amendment. An amendment in order on this paragraph, it seems to me, would be one that would propose some new or modified educational or demonstrational methods to conserve food or avoid waste, and not one along the line of enacting a prohibitory statute.

The CHAIRMAN. In order that the situation may be clearly apprehended by members of the committee, the Chair will read, first, the language of the paragraph and then the language of the proposed amendment. The language of the paragraph is:

Fourth. For increasing food production and eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food by education and demonstrational methods, through county, district, and urban agents and others, $6,100,000.

The amendment proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL] is in the following words:

That in order to further eliminate waste and to promote conservation of food, it shall be unlawful, during the existence of the war with Germany, to use any food or food materials in the manufacture or preparation of alcoholic beverages.

In order to ascertain whether or not this amendment is germane to the paragraph, it becomes necessary to determine the purport, and effect of the matter proposed to be amended. If the paragraph had concluded with the word "food" in line 25, so that it would read as follows:

For increasing food production and eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food, $6,100,000—

there would be no doubt in the mind of any member of the committee that the amendment would be absolutely in order. But that is not the paragraph. The paragraph in its entirety proposes to increase food production, eliminate waste, and promote conservation of food by certain indicated processes, namely, by educational and demonstrational methods, through county, district and urban agents. In other words, lecturers are to be sent out to instruct the public with respect to their farming activities and the household arts so that in the result production will be increased, waste will be eliminated, and food will be conserved. If it was proposed by the amendment that some of the money which is appropriated should be utilized in the employment of agents to instruct the public in the folly of converting food products into alcoholic beverages for public consumption, such an amendment would be in order and in perfect harmony with the avowed purposes of the paragraph. It would come within the manifest scope and intent of this particular portion of the bill. But that is not what is intended to be done by the amendment. The amendment does not propose to educate the public, or by demonstrational methods, convince them of the folly of utilizing food products to produce alcoholic drinks, but to absolutely inhibit the use of such products for alcoholic conversion.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair permit an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am inclined to think the Chairman overlooked the fact that the paragraph goes further than he says. It reads:

For increasing food production and eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food by educational and demonstrational methods, through county, district, and urban agents and others.

Just what "others" means there may be a little uncertain. There is one thing certain, and that is that you can not say that it refers to other agents, because the language used is "through county, district, and urban agents," which would include all classes of agents. It means other methods. Then, if the Chair will pardon me a moment, the very fact that it enumerates the methods by which these proposed conservations of food should be attained, namely, by educational methods, does not preclude its accomplishment by other and similar means and other agencies. For an instance, the rule is, if you authorize the construction of one public building, we will say, in New York City, that will be restricted to New York City, and, according to the Chairman's construction, will preclude an amendment constructing buildings elsewhere; but if you have a bill for the construction of public buildings in New York City and Cincinnati, we might add 40 other places, because the general proposition is to construct public buildings, and the place has nothing to do with it. The general proposition of this paragraph is to conserve food and prevent waste, and therefore, because it says by educational and demonstrational methods, does not preclude other methods that may be used to accomplish the same results.

The CHAIRMAN. If the paragraph carried the meaning suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], then of course the relevancy, or the germaneness of the amendment would be apparent. But the Chair does not think that it can be successfully maintained that the chief purpose of this paragraph is to increase food production, eliminate waste and promote the conservation of food. If that was the chief purpose of the paragraph then it would end with the word "food" in line 25, thereby rendering possible an infinite variety of methods to accomplish the purposes indicated. Eliminate the words providing the methods by which production is to be increased, waste eliminated and food is to be conserved, and the amendment of the gentleman from California would be plainly germane and in order. But the committee evidently did not intend that the department should have free rein to accomplish the results intended, and secure the elimination of waste by any means that seemed good to them. Hence the use of the restrictive language confining the activities of the department to certain indicated lines of accomplishment. The one and only meaning of the paragraph therefore is to provide the means whereby the results intended may be secured on certain restricted lines of endeavor. The Agricultural Department is "cabin'd, cribbed, confined," so to say, to the restricted paths of activity marked out for them to pursue.

As to the suggested meaning of the word "others," it occurs to the Chair that this word ought to be interpreted to mean "other educational and demonstrational methods," in view of the general meaning of the paragraph. For instance bulletins might be sent out. It is perfectly true that a general subject may be amended by a specific subject of the same character, but the amendment of the gentleman from California is not a specific subject of this general subject. This amendment does not propose to eliminate waste, to increase food products, or to promote conservation by any educational process, but is a flat legislative inhibition upon certain practices. Therefore it is not a specific subject of the same character as the general subject. The general subject is to increase food production, and so forth, by educational and demonstrational methods.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Chair permit me to interrupt him again?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I feel very certain the Chair is mistaken about the purposes of the paragraph. The sole purpose of the paragraph is "for increasing food production and eliminating waste and promoting conservation of food." Now, that is the intent, purpose, and object of the legislation. The method by which it is to be done as set out here is "by educational and demonstrational methods, through county, district, and urban agents, and others." But the whole object and intent to be accomplished by the legislation is that of conserving food and preventing waste, and it merely directs here by what particular way it may be done; and that being true, it becomes apparent you can add any other similar method to accomplish the same result.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not agree with the gentleman from Arkansas in that view of the paragraph. The methods indicated are not illustrative of what may be done, but are restrictive, confining the expenditure of the money appropriated to them, and them only. The department could not expend this money otherwise than as indicated, namely, on educational and on demonstrational methods. The suggestion has been made that certain legislation in this bill has been made in order by the rule, and that this amendment would be in order to this legislation. In this connection the Chair will say that if there is any legislation in this bill, made in order by the rule, to which this amendment would be proper, relevant, and germane, then the amendment can be offered when that legislation is reached, and will then be in order. This matter has been very earnestly argued by gentlemen who have taken a different view of the meaning of the paragraph from that held by the Chair. If their interpretation of the paragraph is correct, then the Chair will admit that the amendment is in order. Hence the propriety of the ruling on this point depends upon the meaning proper to be imputed to the paragraph. In that view it might be well to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair so as to afford the opportunity for full discussion of the paragraph on the appeal, and thereby secure an authoritative disposition of this question by the committee itself. The Chair has sought to set out in full the reasons for the conclusion reached and in view of that conclusion is constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, after the figures "$6,100,000," insert: "No part of this appropriation shall be available for any purpose unless there shall have been previously issued the proclamation authorized by section 15 of the act of August 10, 1917, entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the transportation of agricultural products,' such proclamation being the prohibition of the use of foods, fruits, food materials, or feeds in the production of malt or vinous liquors for beverage purposes."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the paragraph under consideration. Further, that it is new legislation that is not germane to the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I simply suggest that it is a limitation upon the appropriation. The points of order which have been made by different gentlemen contained the assertion that this is an appropriation bill. The amendment which I offer is simply a limitation upon the appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. While the Chair is reading the amendment I wish merely to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that this amendment involves substantive law. While it is in the form of a limitation it is nevertheless a mandatory direction that compels the President to do something under the authorization of a law where his power is discretionary. First, it is well recognized that if there is a limitation that though in form negative carries affirmative legislation it violates the principle of true limitation and is legislation in its fundamental character.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. What legislation does the amendment carry?

Mr. STAFFORD. It refers to the provision of the food bill where——

Mr. RANDALL. It refers to legislation but does not carry it.

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). Where discretion is lodged in the President whether he shall permit the utilization——

Mr. RANDALL. But the amendment does not carry legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). Whether he shall permit the use of grain in the manufacture of malt beverages.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment does not carry any legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. The legislation is that the gentleman makes mandatory what in another law is permissive and to that extent it is legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment does not carry anything mandatory.

Mr. STAFFORD. It does indeed. You can not in the form of a negation in a limitation embody legislation which in effect is affirmative in its real purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. A different principle from that of germaneness is involved in the point of order to this amendment. If the Chair understands the amendment it is intended as a limitation on the payment of any money under this paragraph until the President has issued a certain indicated proclamation which in his discretion he may or may not issue. This amendment does not compel him to issue it, but so long as it is unissued the House does not propose, if the amendment is adopted, to allow the Agricultural Department to have the benefit of the appropriation in this paragraph. In other words the amendment proposes to utilize the right of the House to appropriate, or not to appropriate, in its discretion, to an object authorized by law. This of course is the fundamental principle upon which this amendment must depend.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chairman will permit——

The CHAIRMAN. In a moment. This amendment does not compel the President to issue the proclamation referred to. He may issue it or refuse to issue it in his discretion. But the amendment in substance says to the Department of Agriculture, We propose to withhold from you the benefit of this appropriation during the full period of time during which this proclamation is unissued. That may be a very unreasonable ground for the House to take, but after all is not this question merely one of competency or power resting upon our authority to refuse or award an appropriation? If we choose to withhold it, who is to say nay to us? We can be unreasonable if we choose to be unreasonable.

The matter proposed to be dealt with is an appropriation of money, and this body has the absolute power to determine whether it will or will not appropriate. In the exercise of that power we may do unreasonable things, arbitrary things, whimsical and absurd things, but after all the question is whether, with respect to the action proposed, we are within our powers and within our rules—in a word, whether this is a limitation, in a parliamentary sense, on an appropriation bill. The Chair is not altogether certain, in his own mind, that this amendment, in the form submitted, is strictly and technically a limitation, and being in doubt he resolves that doubt in favor of the amendment and remits the same to the determination of the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. It may be very well remembered, Mr. Chairman, that the House of Representatives did not, in the first place, pass the food-control act and therein give the President the power at his discretion to issue this proclamation; the House of Representatives made that prohibition itself, and afterwards, through the conference committee and the action of another body, the action of this House was nullified.

Now, the proposition here is to limit the expenditure of certain money, not for the purpose of general agriculture or the various purposes named in this bill but for the purpose of conserving food and eliminating waste of food; and the proclamation that it is desired to have issued bears directly upon that question.

The most astounding thing connected with the food situation in this country is the failure of the Food Administration to act in the matter of grains and sugar used in the manufacture of beer. With an intensive campaign of spying into the flour barrel and the sugar bowl of every family in America, the wholesale loss of food through the operations of the breweries, nine-tenths of whose product is German owned and made, becomes a positive scandal.

Mr. Hoover admits that the brewers are using to-day 42,000,000 bushels of barley, over 2,000,000 bushels of rice, and over 10,000,000 bushels of corn annually and millions of pounds of sugar in the manufacture of beer, and all of this, Mr. Chairman, is undoubtedly a waste not only of the food products but of the fuel and transportation facilities of the country.

I wish to refer here to the following, which shows how one brewery is wasting grain, labor, transportation, and man power:

A 1912 advertisement of the Anheuser-Busch Brewery declared that this brewery at that time covered 140 acres of ground and occupied 110 buildings. The details showing the enormous waste are as follows:

Capacity: Brewing capacity, 2,500,000 barrels per year; malting capacity, 2,000,000 bushels per year; bottling works, 1,000,000 bottles daily; grain storage elevator, 1,750,000 bushels; stock houses (for lagering), 600,000 barrels; steam power plant, 12,000 horsepower; electric power plant, 4,000 horsepower; refrigerator plant, 4,000 tons per day; ice plant, 1,200 tons per day; coal used, 325 tons per day.

Freight: Inbound and outbound, 50,000 cars per year.

Transportation facilities: Refrigerator freight cars, 1,500; horses at home plant, 143; wagons at home plant, 78; auto trucks at home plant, 74; horses at branches, 483; wagons at branches, 430; auto trucks at branches, 47.

Employees: At St. Louis plant, 6,000 people; at 36 branches, 1,500 people.

Total sales, 1911, 1,527,832 barrels.

Budweiser bottled beer sales, 1911, 173,184,600 bottles.

Six million people have petitioned this Congress to enact war prohibition. Congress can not longer evade its plain duty in this matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DUPRÉ). The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not know how many gentlemen wish to speak on the amendment, but I would like to have a little time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, would it be asking too much to take an hour for debate on this amendment? It is a very important question. I think there will be a number of Members coming in who will desire time.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened intently to the prepared speech of the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL] on his amendment that would prevent all activity on the part of the Agricultural Department, so far as the present item is concerned, unless the President and the Food Administrator would change their position in the administration of a certain provision of the food-survey law.

This amendment can be considered only in one attitude, and that is a direct reflection and criticism of the President of the United States in the administration of the authority that was granted him as to the control of food in the manufacture of maltous beverages. The President has control of that situation in a practical way. He has reduced the amount of alcoholic content in maltous beverages; he has reduced the amount of alcoholic content that may be utilized in beer or near beer; and now it rests with the gentleman from California, who, I assume, pretends to be a friend of the administration, to come here and direct a slap at the President in his administration of this most troublesome question.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. The President has a new champion in the House. Now, I resent the language that the gentleman uses. There is no direct slap at the President. This paragraph provides——

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not yield further. This is a reflection, a direct reflection, upon the President in the solution of one of the most knotty problems he has had to contend with, as to what should be the policy of the Government so far as the control of the manufacture of maltous beverages is concerned.

In the few minutes at my disposal I can not review the arguments that have justified the President and also those who have supported this policy, but if you wish here now to renew it let it be known broadcast, let it be known in your district, that you are not 100 per cent with the President, and that on this question here you want to do something that, in his judgment, will create dissension and dissatisfaction among the industrial workers of the country.

I am not in the confidence of the President, but I have heard it stated that the reason why the President has not forbidden the manufacture of beer absolutely is because it would create dissension among the industrial workers of the country. Are you willing to accept his decision in this critical moment that it is for the benefit of the industrial welfare of the country, the peace and quiet of the industrial workers, to have control of the alcoholic content of maltous beverages, or are you in favor at this minute of driving the President to stop instanter the use of grains in the further manufacture of maltous beverages, when you know there is only a three months' supply on hand, and thereby force the public to the stronger drinks—the whisky and wines and other strong alcoholic drinks?

We all know there is a large supply of wines in the State of California, from which the gentleman comes, that can be utilized for years and years. There is a large supply of whisky on hand, but so far as beer is concerned, which is an almost nonintoxicating beverage, you would exhaust the present supply within a few weeks and force the drinking population to go to the drinking of the harder liquor, that which is more devitalizing, that about which the public is protesting more and more every day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly content to leave this great problem in the hands of the President. He has solved it in a practical way. The country is not complaining of his solution of it. He has reduced the amount of alcoholic content that may be used in the manufacture of beer now to 2½ per cent, I believe. In Canada they regard beer containing only 2½ per cent of alcohol as a temperance beverage. And throughout the country we have the light maltous beverage containing 2½ per cent and less of alcohol, but now as a fetich the few would put aside the practical solution and create dissension among industrial workers by refusing them their light beer. The alternative of their proposal is to favor whisky and bar beer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I grow a bit weary of Members always saying that the working people of this country will not work unless they are drunk. [Laughter and applause.] I resent it for them. I say now that the records will show there have been more strikes, there has been more disorder, there has been more disloyalty in those communities where whisky and beer are manufactured and drunk since this war commenced than in all other parts of this country put together. [Applause.]

When anyone here says the honest workingmen of this country hold their allegiance to beer above that of their country and their flag, it simply shows—well, I will not say what I started to say. [Laughter.] It shows absolute ignorance of workingmen. I will put it that way.

Then they say, "It will embarrass the President," and the gentleman who makes that statement has been opposed to more propositions that the President has wanted than any other Member of this House.

The proposition is, Is it more important to have bread or beer? If you are more in favor of men being made drunk than in having children kept in good health, then, bless your heart, vote against this amendment. It amounts to the same thing. [Applause.] The time has passed in this country and everywhere when you can say that beer or whisky are necessary for good health, or that the working people of this country will not work unless you make them drunk. The record does not bear out that assertion, and the working people will not stand for it. If you would rather protect the interests of the beer-making Germans in this country than the people who need sugar and bread, why, bless your heart, if that is where your heart lies, vote against this amendment. [Applause.]

There is no use in trying to hide behind the idea of embarrassing the President or embarrassing the workers of this country. It may be that the I. W. W. will agree with the gentleman. I do not know. [Laughter.] If any working people do, they are the only ones. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERMYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. OVERMYER. Will the gentleman state whether or not cereals are used in the manufacture of nonintoxicating liquors such as Bevo and Pablo?

Mr. CARAWAY. I understand they are.

Mr. OVERMYER. Does the gentleman's amendment prohibit the manufacture of those things?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; anything in which any food products are used in the making or brewing of its products. I do not believe in these times of shortage of grain that people should be permitted to make millions of gallons of Bevo. I am not acquainted with it. I do not know what purpose it serves, except to make profit to somebody who brews it. I am in favor, so long as we have to have a policy of conservation—and I am willing to submit to it; I am willing to observe every rule of the Food Administration, and I am not criticizing any of them, I am complying with them all—I am willing to cut down the use of flour to one meal a day, if necessary. I am willing to do without the use of sugar, but when we ask the women and children of this country to do that I am in favor of saying to the beer drinkers and whisky drinkers, "If you are not willing yourselves to help conserve the food supply, we will enact a law that will make you join the women and children of this country in helping to conserve food products." I hope the amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, the prohibitionists, it appears to me, become very unreasonable when they come to discuss the food bills that are presented in this House. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL] attempts to restrict the expenditure of the money appropriated in this bill, those expenditures having nothing whatever to do with the question of prohibition.

Gentlemen of the House will remember that when the food-control bill was presented this question was debated at length, both here and in the other body, and after the debate and the discussion section 15 of the bill was written. It provided for absolute prohibition of the manufacture of whisky. It provided further that—

> Whenever the President shall find that limitation, regulation, or prohibition of the use of foods, fruits, food materials, or feeds in the production of malt or vinous liquors for beverage purposes, or that reduction of the alcoholic content of any such malt or vinous liquors is essential in order to assure an adequate and continuous supply of food, or that the national security and defense will be subserved thereby he is authorized, from time to time, to prescribe and give public notice of the extent of the limitation, regulation, prohibition, or reduction so necessitated.

I have stated on this floor that, as far as I am concerned, although I do not believe in legislating prohibition on to people, but believe in leaving it to them to decide, that during this war, if those in charge said that the foodstuffs of the country were needed to make bread, I would vote to close up every distillery and every brewery in the United States. This Congress in passing upon this question decided that the fairest thing to do was to put the power in the hands of the President to say when that time had come.

The gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from California are willing to trust in the hands of the President the lives of all our boys, willing to leave to him the control of all the finances, but they are not willing to leave in his hands the power to pass upon the question of prohibition. That is all that the amendment of the gentleman from California does. By his amendment he says, in effect, that the President can not consider the interests of all the people in this country on this question, that he must be tied down by the action of this Congress, and that we will not leave in his hands the power that we voted him when we passed the food-control bill.

Now, I believe it should be left where the law has placed it, and if the administration believes the restriction is necessary there is no doubt that the order will be issued. I believe, with all due respect to the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Arkansas, that the Food Administration and the President of the United States know just as much about the condition of affairs in this country as those gentlemen know, and that if, in their judgment, it is wise and necessary, considering all the circumstances, to have this restriction, the order will be issued by the President. I hope the House will not go on record in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from California. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, section 15 of the act of August 10, 1917, provides that—

> Whenever the President shall find that limitation, regulation, or prohibition of the use of foods, fruits, food materials, or feeds in the production of malt or vinous liquors for beverage purposes, or that reduction of the alcoholic content of any such malt or vinous liquor is essential in order to assure an adequate and continuous supply of food, or that the national security and defense will be subserved thereby, he is authorized, from time to time, to prescribe and give public notice of the extent of the limitation, regulation, prohibition, or reduction so necessitated.

The bill before us authorizes the expenditure of $6,000,000 for the purpose of sending folks out over the country to encourage the production of cereals and other agricultural products. The amendment now before us provides that this expenditure shall not be made, these people shall not be so employed, unless the President, in his wisdom, issues the proclamation of prohibition which the act of August 10 gives him authority to issue. And why not? If the President, in his wisdom or in his judgment, is of the opinion that it is not wise to save millions of bushels of grain for the use of the people, for the use of the allies, and thus aid in winning the great struggle in which we are engaged—if he does not deem it wise to do that, why should Congress spend $6,000,000 of the people's money sending people out to encourage the production of agricultural products to be used in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors? [Applause.] I do not know what the President may determine. For one I would not be disposed to advise the President in the matter, but I do believe that unless the President deems it wise to prevent the waste of these agricultural products in the manufacture of products that muddle men's brains, in the manufacture of beverages that reduce the efficiency of the men that use them—unless the President deems it wise to do that we should not ask the people to pay taxes into the Federal Treasury and buy liberty bonds for the purpose of hiring folks to go around and encourage production in these agricultural products to be used for such purposes.

It is a question of national efficiency, a question of national sobriety, a question as to whether or not we are to spend the people's money to encourage production to be used and utilized for a purpose harmful in its effects on the people and reducing their capacity and energy in the winning of the war.

Now, gentlemen, we have been called upon from the beginning of this great struggle to do our utmost to help win the war, to help insure a great and glorious victory. Here is an opportunity to put your declarations into practice and make it clear and definite that you desire to have done that which will have a more beneficial and useful and helpful effect in the winning of the war than anything that can be done by the Congress at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I voted for the prohibition amendment, I voted for prohibition in Alaska, and I voted the other day for prohibition in the Hawaiian Islands. I belong to a prohibition family; all my instincts and bringing up are in favor of prohibition and temperance; but I think a proposition like this, to hold up the President, force him to do something he may not think wise to do at this time, on pain of refusing to the farmers demonstrational farm-bureau and educational work to which they are entitled, is outrageous. It seems to me that we ought to be willing to trust the President of the United States in this matter.

He has the power to prohibit the use of these food products for the making of malt and vinous liquors if he thinks it wise and is necessary. He asked Congress in the last session not to pass such legislation as this. Let him take his time and settle this matter, if it is necessary to settle it. He has the responsibility of deciding how the grain is to be apportioned out, and he knows how the supply is holding out. We do not know, and when he thinks it is necessary to issue a proclamation stopping further making of beer and wine I do not believe that he will have any hesitation about doing it.

I shall vote for the appropriation for farm bureaus and other demonstration work on its merits, and I do not believe in forcing the President either to cut off this appropriation or to issue a proclamation which he may not think timely. I know that some Republicans will vote for this amendment as a "good joke on the President" coming from a Democratic source or to "put the President in a hole," but I decline to be a party to any such scheme.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the time was limited, but five minutes was reserved for the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]. I do not see him present. If he is not present, I do not see any reason why the gentleman should not occupy his time, if the Chair sees fit to recognize him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may occupy the time reserved for the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], who is not on the floor. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am getting sick and tired, every time the prohibition question comes before this body, of hearing some one stand on this floor and say that the reason the President has not given us prohibition is because the workingmen of this country do not want it. I say it is an insult to the workingmen of this country for any one to stand here and say that they are opposed to prohibition. As I stated only a few weeks ago on the floor of this House, the great industrial State of Ohio, the third largest industrial State in the Union, with its thousands and thousands of workingmen in its factories, shops, and mills, voted dry by a large majority. If you leave out Cincinnati and Hamilton County, the State of Ohio went dry by over 55,000 majority. I want to say if the liquor traffic depended on the working classes of our country it would go out of existence in six months. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] pleads with us to stand by the President and defeat this amendment. As far as standing by the President is concerned, I want to say that there is no man in this House who has stood any closer to the President during this crisis than I. I have supported him on every single proposition that he has advocated. Partisan politics has been cast aside by me, and I have stood by the great President of the United States, and intend to stand by him until this great crisis is over. [Applause.] But I am not so sure as to whether or not I ought to smother my convictions upon this great prohibition question simply because the President of the United States does not agree with me. For I believe that in standing for prohibition I am advocating a great war measure which will help us defeat Germany. Some time ago this House, by an overwhelming majority, passed a law which prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors to soldiers and sailors.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Not now. Why did you pass that law? Because you thought it would impair their efficiency. If intoxicating liquor is a bad thing for the soldiers and sailors, why is it not a bad thing for our workingmen in the shops and factories who have to make the ammunition and the guns with which the soldiers fight? Then, again, what a farce it is to ask the brave mothers of the country who have given their sons to go to the front to fight this battle to conserve food and fill their cellars full of corn meal and other kind of dope in order to save wheat and still let the brewers of the country use thousands and thousands of tons of foodstuffs in the manufacture of a nonessential intoxicating liquor. [Applause.] I read in the paper just yesterday that in a few days Mr. Hoover is going to call a wheat day all over the United States. He is going to have big meetings in the schoolhouses, in the theaters, any place where they can get a meeting, and have some one address the meeting and ask the women of the country to conserve foodstuffs, especially wheat. It is a farce, I say, to ask these brave women who are doing their best to conserve the food of the country and then allow the brewers to use up the foodstuffs in the manufacture of beers and wines. We have had embargoes placed upon the shipment of certain commodities on the railroads, embargoes on the shipment of automobiles, on building material, on the shipment of other products, and yet the brewers of the country to-day are using more cars on the railroads to haul their products—their beer and the grain used in the manufacture of beer—than all of the iron and steel industries of the United States are using at this time. I shall support the amendment. I believe it is in keeping with the principle which ought to be in the heart of every true American—to win the war and to defeat Germany. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the question presented by the last speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], is not in issue upon this occasion. This prohibition issue is not involved, because everybody knows this amendment if adopted will not secure prohibition. There is no man in the House who is stronger for prohibition than I am; there is no man here who will go further than I to establish prohibition throughout this country. I am just as strong for prohibition as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], who spoke in favor of this amendment, and I am just as strong for it as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], who has just spoken.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I regret very much that I have not the time to yield to my good friend. I have only five minutes. If this was a straight prohibition amendment proposed upon the floor of this House or a straight prohibition bill proposed on the floor of this House I should certainly vote for it. I have voted for every moral proposition and every prohibition and temperance amendment or bill that has been offered in Congress ever since I have been a Member of this body, and will continue to do so so long as I remain here. When I came here there was a saloon in this Capitol. I voted to exclude it from the Capitol, and it was excluded, and I have voted for every prohibition measure presented. What is this amendment? This amendment says that "no part of this appropriation shall be available for any purpose until the President shall have previously issued a proclamation authorized by section 15 of the act of August 10, 1917, entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture,'" and so forth. In other words, you propose to say to the President of the United States, you propose to walk up to the White House and look him in the eye and say to him, "Mr. President, until you issue your proclamation you shall not have a dollar to run the work provided for in this paragraph for the Agricultural Department of this Government."

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman wants to be fair——

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Yes; I want to be and will be fair, but I decline to yield, because I have not the time. Under this appropriation we provide for home economics, for county agents in the North and West, for extension agricultural work in the Northern and Western States, and for boys' and girls' clubs, and for demonstration work and extension agricultural work in the Southern States, for county agents, for boys' clubs, for home demonstration work in the Southern States. These are the provisions now under consideration. This is the work you propose to stop until you can force and compel the President to issue his proclamation provided for in the act referred to in the amendment proposed.

You propose by the adoption of this amendment to go up to the President of the United States and say to him, "Until you issue your proclamation we propose to stop the agricultural industries in the United States and activities of the Agricultural Department provided for in this paragraph of the bill carrying an appropriation of $6,100,000." Do you believe that you can hurry the President in issuing that proclamation one single minute or one single hour or one single day by withholding money for the activities of any part of this great department or any other department of the Government? You can not coerce the President, and he will issue that proclamation whenever he believes that circumstances justify it and not before. Whenever he comes to the conclusion himself that it is required by the conditions existing in the United States of America, and it will help to win this war, he will issue it and not before. This is simply an effort to say to the President, and it does say to him in so many words, "You shall issue that proclamation which you have the right to issue now." He can issue it this very minute if he sees proper to issue it, but this says to him, "You shall issue it now, and unless you do issue it we will withhold this appropriation for the Department of Agriculture." Do you think you can get anywhere with President Woodrow Wilson by a proposition of that kind? If you think so, you are badly mistaken in the man and have another think coming to you. You can not coerce him and make him do anything his wise judgment does not approve. You will simply delay the cause instead of hurrying it. Gentlemen, if you want to take that position, you take it, and you will be responsible for it. I am willing to trust Woodrow Wilson, the President of the United States, and the people of the United States are willing to trust him, in reference to this matter. If you do not believe the people trust him implicitly, you put it up to them and you will find out maybe to your sorrow. Some say, "You have stood by him." Yes; I have stood by him. I am standing by him here now and I am going to stand by him, and we will win this war and put Germany to flight and destroy the autocracy of the world. [Applause.] I am going to stand by him till the end of time, if he lives that long and I live that long, before I shall turn aside from the accomplishment of that great purpose which I hope and believe we all have. [Applause.] You propose to say to him that he shall issue the proclamation. The law is plain, he knows what it is, and he will do his duty, and you can not impress it upon him more strongly by the passage of this amendment. I am willing to defer to his good judgment and wise counsel—are you? This is not a real prohibition proposition, because it will secure no results and you know it. It is simply an amendment to put up to the President and say to him, "We command you and you shall obey." If you do not obey, we take from you the money provided in this paragraph of the bill.

You are mistaken in the President if you think for one moment you can drive him to do what his conscience and judgment does not approve. As I said at the outset, if it were a prohibition bill, if it were a real prohibition amendment which would secure results, if it were upon a bill where it ought to be, and which would bring about prohibition, I would vote for it, as I know would many other Members of the House. You know and I know that this amendment will not accomplish prohibition and aid that cause which I have fought for and voted for since I was 21 years old, and I refuse to ride a "wooden horse" and make a play in an effort to deceive somebody by trying to make them believe this is a real prohibition amendment when I know and you know it is not. You can not deceive the people, and I am not going to join you in an effort to do so. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one-half of a minute.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. We can not extend it, the time has been closed——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have been absent on a committee meeting and have not heard the amendment. I would like to hear it read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANDALL. If this amendment is adopted, do I understand that it will apply only to the restriction of the appropriations named in the fourth paragraph and to no other portion of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry; it is a matter of legislative interpretation.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. RANDALL) there were—ayes 57, noes 52.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi and Mr. RANDALL) reported that there were—ayes 69, noes 58.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fifth. For gathering authoritative information in connection with the demand for, and the production, supply, distribution, and utilization of food, and otherwise carrying out the purposes of section 2 of the act; extending and enlarging the market news service; and preventing waste of food in storage, in transit, or held for sale; advise concerning the market movement or distribution of perishable products; for enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to inspect and certify perishable agricultural products, as provided in the Agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $2,136,028.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUTCHINSON: Page 3, line 13, after the word "nineteen," insert "for the following-stated purposes and in amounts as follows: Market news service on fruits and vegetables, $500,000; market news service on live stock and meats, $300,000; market news service on butter, cheese, eggs, and poultry, $164,000; market news service on grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, $180,720; food and fertilizer survey of the United States, $449,700; conservation of food products in transportation and storage, $229,937; market inspection of perishable foods, $51,000; city market service, $66,131; direct market activities, $85,100; special market activities, $109,440; total, $2,136,028."

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how much debate? We have had debate on this over and over again, and I am anxious to get along as much as possible. How much debate does the gentleman think we should have?

Mr. HAUGEN. We want about 25 minutes on this side.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Could not you get along with a little less than that?

Mr. HAUGEN. Thirty minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That is getting worse. I do not think we ought to take that much time. We have had extended discussion on this proposition on all the items preceding this, and it looks to me as if we could get on a little bit faster. I do not want to hurry anybody or cut anybody off, but I feel that gentlemen on that side ought to help me in getting along.

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire to suggest to the gentleman that this is a very large item, and one of the most important items in the bill.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Say 25 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Thirty-five minutes on this side.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Thirty minutes on a side?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Twenty-five minutes. I have given the gentleman 25 minutes, and only take 5 here.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have a request for 30 minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Make it 35 minutes. Mr. Chairman, I make the request in this form: I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto and on the paragraph close in 35 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto and all amendments to amendments shall terminate at the expiration of 35 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Will the gentleman from Mississippi now give the Chair a list of the gentleman whom he is to recognize?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa to give a list of the names over there. I reserve five minutes for myself.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], five minutes; to Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, five minutes; to Mr. YOUNG of Texas, five minutes; to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON], five minutes; to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], five minutes; to Mr. MORGAN, of Oklahoma, five minutes; and take five minutes for myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman that that will make 40 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the suggestion to the chairman of the committee that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] be allowed to control 30 minutes of the time.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Let the gentleman distribute the time and divide 5 minutes of it. Let him take 25 minutes and give us 10.

Mr. HAUGEN. Make it 30 minutes on this side, and you can take whatever you want.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That will leave me five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time as computed here amounts to 40 minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Unanimous consent was granted for 35 minutes, 30 to be used on that side and 5 minutes on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will control 30 minutes for himself and his associates, to suit himself, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] is to have five minutes?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That is right.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, there is some excuse for lump-sum appropriations in a strictly war bill, a bill appropriating money for the manufacture of arms or ammunition, or for any strictly military or naval purpose, but there is no excuse for lump-sum appropriations in an Agricultural appropriation bill. It will not aid or comfort the enemy to know exactly how much money is appropriated for specific agricultural purposes. There is absolutely no excuse for giving lump-sum appropriations to the Agricultural Department to be used as they see fit. It is an unwise policy to make lump-sum appropriations at any time.

There is a bill pending in the Committee on Rules providing for a budget system, or appropriations by one committee, and nothing has occurred in this House that is so forceful an argument in favor of taking the power of appropriations away from all other committees and placing it in one committee as this action on the part of the Committee on Agriculture. And I serve notice now that from this day on no member of any committee that makes appropriations here can get very far with me in arguing for a retention of the power of making appropriations in individual committees.

The action of the Committee on Agriculture in making lump-sum appropriations in this bill has made the final argument in favor of one appropriating committee and of a budget system. From this on I shall favor on this floor and in every place where it will be of any value the budget system—one appropriating committee—so that we shall not have duplication of appropriations, as we are having in this bill. Why, the Committee on Agriculture is duplicating appropriations here for the various activities of the Department of Agriculture. There is not an item in this bill that could not properly have been included in the regular Agricultural appropriation bill, because they are all akin and simply adding to and multiplying appropriations for the same purpose. The House would not have made the appropriations as large as this bill will make them in the aggregate.

At a time when we are appealing to the people for money from all sources, reckless appropriations are being made. This is reckless, but it would not be so bad if Members knew exactly what the money was to be used for and if the country knew what it was to be used for. But here are $6,000,000 to be placed in the hands of a bureau chief or of the Secretary of Agriculture to be used——

Mr. RUBEY. Two million dollars in this section.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Two in this section, six in the former section, other amounts in other sections, and, in all, $18,000,000. Every purpose should have been itemized. The gentlemen on the Committee on Agriculture will find that their action in this may result at a very early day in sufficiently arousing the Members of this House to respond to an intelligent demand that has been coming from the country for many years for a budget system in the United States. [Applause.] And the Committee on Agriculture will probably not have the opportunity of bringing many more appropriation bills upon the floor of this House. For one, I shall favor the budget system and the inauguration of it at the earliest date possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The gentleman from South Carolina will occupy the time that I have.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if anybody should be frightened by looks or voice the Committee on Agriculture would be badly frightened at this moment. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] says that this bill is a wasteful expenditure of public money. I venture to assert that the gentleman from Kansas has not read this bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, I have read it very, very carefully, and analyzed it.

Mr. LEVER. I am very glad the gentleman has done that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I opposed the rule to bring it upon the floor after examining the bill very carefully.

Mr. LEVER. The great State of Kansas, one of the greatest agricultural States in this Union, I am sure will appreciate the position of the gentleman from Kansas in opposing a rule here to make in order an appropriation for the encouragement of agricultural production in this country in time of war.

The complaint has been made here frequently, and with some degree of justification, that it would have been better if each of these larger items had been segregated into smaller ones.

I want to reiterate what I said yesterday, that this bill follows the exact language verbatim of the food-production act of August 10, 1917, which the gentleman from Kansas voted for, and there were only five votes cast in this body against it. More than that, there is no provision in this act, as in the regular appropriation act, by which a certain percentage of one appropriation may be carried to another appropriation to meet an emergency that may arise.

Let us see what this situation may be. We had a lot of talk yesterday about cottage cheese, a little appropriation of $52,000. That is carried in a lump-sum appropriation in which the work against hog cholera, contagious abortion, and other animal diseases are carried. Now, suppose the Secretary of Agriculture finds an unusual outbreak of hog cholera in the country; suppose he finds an unusual situation with respect to some other animal disease. Are we to limit him under those circumstances to a certain sum here, or shall we give him the privilege of saying, "I will take the $52,000 that I have asked the committee to give me for work with respect to cottage cheese, and I will put it into the fund for fighting hog cholera"? Because the vital thing under the circumstances is the eradication of hog cholera, the vital thing is the fighting of blackleg, the vital thing is the fighting of contagious abortion, the vital thing is doing something else.

You do not want, in an emergency appropriation of this kind, to tie the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture hard and fast to any one small item in this bill. If we were bringing in the Agricultural appropriation bill, providing for the ordinary routine work of the Department of Agriculture, I should agree with the gentleman fom Kansas in his contention.

And I would say to the gentleman from Kansas that there is not a committee in this House which so minutely itemizes its regular appropriation bill as the Committee on Agriculture, and that work has been progressing year by year, because I recall—and my friend from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] will bear me out—that when we first became members of the Committee on Agriculture practically every item in it was an aggregate sum, a big sum, and it has been the Committee on Agriculture that has set the pace in this House for itemizing appropriations. But I think there is not a sane man in this House who can not see the difference between a regular appropriation bill, providing for the doing of routine work, regularly organized work, and an emergency appropriation bill which is attempting to speed up the activities of the Department of Agriculture along the lines of production and the elimination of waste in this country. The man who can not see that distinction to my mind has a mind so dull that he can not see anything. I am sure the gentleman from Kansas, good friend as he is of mine, will, in the light of this proposition, regret his terrific onslaught on the Committee on Agriculture. I hope by now that this proposition of the segregation of these items may once and for all time in this House and in the consideration of this bill be settled. We have beaten every proposition looking to it since this bill has been under consideration and have taken up the time of busy Members here by the renewal of a fight in which the proposition has been whipped repeatedly on this floor. Let us go forward. You have made a fight, and a good fight, but you have been licked, and you ought to take your licking like good men, and I believe you are going to do it. I hope this amendment will not prevail. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SHACKLEFORD). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there are a number of ambuscades and camouflages hereabouts that ought to be exposed. [Laughter.] My eloquent young friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who is soon to be transplanted to other fields of usefulness [applause], and whom we will very greatly regret to lose, is adroit as well as capable. He insists that because most of us voted for the legislation on which these appropriations are based, therefore we should vote for any sort of an appropriation carrying out the purposes of that bill that may be presented by anyone.

Well, my friend is a logical man, and he knows that that does not necessarily follow. We favored the legislation, but it is not necessary to drain the Treasury to put it into effect. Because we think the appropriations asked for under the bill are exorbitant and wickedly extravagant is not an argument against the legislation, and the fact we seek to bring the items within reason can not properly be tortured into opposition to the legislation or the carrying out of its provisions.

The gentleman argues that as what is done here in the way of lump-sum appropriations is what was done in the original bill, and the appropriation it carried, therefore, having started with a lump sum, we should go on with lump sums. Well, every man in this House who is not a mere novice—and the gentleman who made this argument certainly is not—realizes that in the inauguration of an activity, in the beginning of an activity, it is quite frequently necessary to lump the appropriations until the organization shall have been perfected, when the Congress always proceeds, if it is wise, to segregate the items; and the time has come for the segregation of the items under this bill.

Another camouflage that is popular here and hereabouts is that every item carried in an agricultural appropriation bill is something done for the farmer. The idea sought to be conveyed is that you are in making the appropriations doing something for the horny-handed son of toil, and it is further urged that as long as we are blowing our money for booming guns and battleships and what not, why not do something for the farmer, the agriculturist, the tiller of the soil? There is not a penny of the more than $2,000,000 sought to be appropriated under this item that will ever be paid to any farmer [applause], and there is not a penny of it the spending of which will necessarily benefit any farmer. Under this item you are proposing to secure information more or less necessary, more or less informing, more or less essential, as to where agricultural products are to be found.

It is a food-survey proposition, and if we do not get any further along with it and do not get any more real information out of it than we ordinarily do out of that sort of investigation, then we will have wasted $2,000,000 of good money of the heavily taxed people of this country, paying somebody who ought to be engaged in a productive enterprise to do a wholly useless and inconsequential thing. That is all there is to that. It is not $2,000,000 to the farmer or for the benefit of the farmer. It is $2,000,000 in the spending of which, if we benefit anyone at all, we are to benefit the men who use the farmers' products by telling him how much there is of it and where it is to be found. This old guff about voting enormous appropriations because being on an Agricultural bill they are going to help the farmer is ridiculous when the facts are considered, and we ought not hear that kind of alleged argument from gentlemen who ought to know better. My opinion is that there is no necessity for the kind of investigation or inquiry herein proposed. The Food

Commission by reason of its organization, activities, and its duties must be informed with regard to the agricultural products and production of the country with regard to all things proposed to be inquired into here. The Food Commission has gone into these matters carefully and thoroughly and will continue to do so. They are getting the information for a real useful purpose in order to know to what extent it may become necessary to ask the people of the country to conserve and limit the use of food. That bureau will get all the information necessary along these lines, and in my opinion the expenditure of this $2,000,000 will be worse than useless. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to direct attention especially to the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 1 of this bill. This is the provision which provides for the continuation of the appropriation of $2,500,000 as provided in the act of August 10, 1917, and of the appropriation of $4,000,000, authorized by the act of March 28, 1918, making a total of $6,500,000 for procuring, storing, and furnishing seeds to farmers. The chief purposes of the appropriations referred to were to stimulate agriculture, to encourage increased production of food products, to enable farmers to enlarge the acreage planted and increase the amount produced on each acre. I have never had very much faith in the means adopted by Congress under the advice and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. Especially I have not had confidence that there would be any material increase of production of food products through the system adopted. The Members of the House must bear in mind that under former appropriations and under the appropriation made in this act the Secretary of Agriculture can dispose of seeds for cash only. I have contended, and I now maintain, first, that there is no demand among the farmers themselves that the Government should sell them seeds for cash. The farmers have been accustomed to purchase their own seed and perhaps in the larger number of cases to save their own seed. The farmers who have to buy seed and who have the cash to pay for it or possess the credit to enable them to buy seed do not particularly need this assistance. The farmers who have no seed, who have no cash, and who have no credit can not deal with the Secretary of Agriculture. Under the restrictions of the law he must trade with cash customers only. Now, bear in mind that the object of this appropriation and the only basis upon which it can be justified is to increase food production. It is evident to my mind that men who have the cash to pay for seed or who can borrow money from local bankers with which to secure cash to buy seed from the Government will not to any material extent increase the products of their farms merely because they can trade with the Government instead of private individuals. This appropriation therefore to my mind will fail to meet the purpose for which it is intended. It will not stimulate agriculture. It will not increase food production. It will not help us to win the war. On the other hand, the Government will be to a large expense for the payment of salaries and traveling expenses of a large number of Federal employees.

I have in my hand an article which I clipped from the Daily Oklahoman, published at Oklahoma City, in its issue of May 14, 1918. That was just one week ago to-day. It purports to give an interview from H. N. Vinall, of the Department of Agriculture emergency seed distribution. This representative of the Agriculture Department appears to apologize for the high prices the farmers are being charged for their seed. Referring to the prices, the paper represents him as saying as follows:

> The prices would have been lower, Vinall declared, if the seed had been purchased later or earlier than February, because of the high prices prevailing at that time. The Government had appropriated the money during last year, he said, but money for the work in Oklahoma and Kansas became available only in February, and, due to the proximity of planting season, the seed were bought immediately.

It appears from this statement that the department did not exercise the very highest quality of business judgment. It purchased seed at a time when high prices prevailed. As a result, the farmers will pay higher prices in purchasing from the Government. Just why this fund was not available until at a time when high prices prevailed I do not know, but it is evident that the farmers who dealt with the Government suffered financial loss thereby. I was also impressed with the reasons the representative of the Agriculture Department assigned as to why the farmers should purchase from the Government. Here is what he said, according to the Oklahoman:

> The farmers hardly can afford not to buy seed from the Government, both as patriots and for their own gain.

Mr. Chairman, I supposed that the farmers would be at liberty to buy from private dealers or the Government; that it would be left entirely to them; but, according to this interview, the farmers who bought seed of the Government agent were held up as patriots. The implication might follow that those who did not buy of the Government might not be patriots. Mr. Chairman, I know nothing about the correctness of this interview; neither is it my purpose to criticize Mr. Vinall, whose name appears as a representative of the Department of Agriculture. I indeed assume that he is an intelligent, capable, efficient official, and is honestly trying to discharge his duties and is carrying out the directions and wishes of his superior officers at Washington. What I am criticizing is the policy of the Government in purchasing and selling seed to farmers and limiting those sales to the farmers who have the cash, a class which is in the least need of assistance. If the Government goes into the seed business, it should treat all farmers alike, and it should conduct its business upon a plan that will accomplish the purpose of the appropriation, namely, to insure increased food production.

The farmers may be divided into four classes—first, those who own their farms with no mortgage on them, farmers who are out of debt, who have bank accounts, who have credit, and who need no help or assistance from the National Government. They are able to buy seed from anyone. This class does not constitute 25 per cent of our farmers. Another class are the farmers who own their farms but their farms are mortgaged. They are in debt. This class constitutes about one-third of the farmers of the United States. Another class have no farms. One-third of our farmers are tenants who have no farms, mortgaged or otherwise. They are the men that need the credit. They are the men to whom the Government should furnish seed on reasonable terms. Another class of farmers are not even tenants. They are known as farm laborers. It is not the 25 per cent but the 75 per cent of farmers who should be aided. It is the tenant farmers and the farmers with mortgages upon their farms to whom the Government should sell seed on credit. By this plan the Government could largely increase food production. So if the Federal Government desires to stimulate agriculture it should help the farmer who has no cash, who has no bank account, but who is intelligent, honest, industrious, and patriotic and needs help in the way of credit, but it seems to me that the policy of the Agricultural Department results in helping those most who need help the least. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have always voted for every measure brought into the House which, in my judgment, aided the farmer in scientific farming. It is a great work and one in which the Government can do great good; but at a time when we are exacting from the people such large sums of money because of the war I think it is a great mistake for the Congress of the United States to impose greater taxes on the people for unnecessary purposes. When we passed in this House the Federal farm-loan act it was understood by every man who voted for that bill that bonds would be sold by that corporation and the money received from the sale of those bonds placed in the fund to be loaned to the farmers; it was not intended to take the money out of the Treasury of the United States to loan at all. Yet those bonds have not found purchasers, and consequently the administration has ordered to be diverted from the Treasury of the United States $209,000,000, which money has been raised as a war fund to carry on this great war, to the Federal farm-loan bank, and it has been shown here by statistics that money has been injudiciously loaned—in some instances as much as $10,000 loaned on a property valued at but $7,500. That is bad management; it is a bad loan; and the money has been wrung from the people for another purpose and has been diverted. For what purpose I leave it for you to say. One gentleman said this morning on the floor of the House that it is now proposed to place in every county in every State in the Union a man to educate the farmer, and a woman in every county in every State of the Union to show the housewives how to make schmierkase—Dutch cheese—but you are calling it cottage cheese. I suppose you are afraid to call it Dutch cheese now for fear you might be considered pro-German, and you have given it the name of cottage cheese. Where in the name of goodness will you find a housewife who is a competent housewife who will leave her home and children and go out through the county and teach people how to make Dutch cheese? Where can you get women who know how to make those things who will go among the housewives of this country and educate them how to economize? My good friends, the farmers of this country, because of necessity, have learned how to economize, and I hope that you will not send some little painted and powdered lady from the city to the country to educate the housewives on the farm how to economize. Oh, what absolute nonsense to talk about such things! You are going to spend the people's money in employing whom? Somebody seeking notoriety. You remind me of the story of the fellow who wanted a divorce from his wife because she was a suffragette. He went to a lawyer and said he must have a divorce. The lawyer asked him why, and the man said that his wife was a suffragette. The lawyer informed him that was not sufficient cause and the courts would not grant a divorce upon that ground. "But," said the man, "she is out every day, neglecting her family, attending conventions, promoting the cause of woman suffrage, and she is out every night listening to lectures. I do not object to getting my own meals, to washing my own clothes, to washing the dishes, and making up the beds, but, by heaven, when it comes to sitting up nights running little pink and blue ribbons through my night clothes to try to fool the baby I draw the line!" [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, you are seeking some other cause for the woman to be away from home and from her baby.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I propose to offer an amendment to this section to increase the item by $5,000, in order to get a market news service here in the District of Columbia. I made some remarks upon this subject a few days ago, on May 17. I think everyone here will admit that the prices for meat and vegetables are higher in Washington than anywhere else in the United States. In the estimates prepared by Director Charles J. Brand we find that a service such as I am going to propose for the District is given to several cities of the United States, some eight of them, under the emergency funds we provided last year. I was strongly impressed with Mr. Brand's statement concerning this work. One of the cities where they have this service is the city of St. Paul, which is the nearest of the eight to where I live. I want to give you the prices of meats advertised in the St. Paul Dispatch. Take the advertisement of the Broadway Meat & Provision Co. They advertise to sell veal stew at 12 cents a pound, veal shoulder roasts at 15 cents a pound, leg of veal at 17 cents a pound. If there is anyone in this room who can buy any of those articles for twice the amount in Washington, I would like him to stand up. Summer sausage is sold at 27 cents a pound, pork shoulder at 23 cents a pound, midget bacon at 28 cents a pound. Pork liver is sold at 7 cents a pound.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What is the date of that?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. This is on May 3, and meats were higher in Washington on May 3, I think, than they are to-day. There are several other advertisements here. Here is one of McQuade's Market. It advertises veal roast at 23 cents a pound, loin of veal roast 28 cents a pound, shoulder of veal at 25 cents a pound, veal stew at 20 cents a pound, pork loin at 28 cents a pound, spareribs at 17 cents a pound. It seems almost impossible when you consider what we have to pay for meats here in the District of Columbia to think that in St. Paul they are selling meats for such prices. It is hard for the consumers to pay such exorbitant prices as are charged in Washington. As a rule, the farmers are blamed for the high prices, which is unjust to them. A market news service will show that the profiteering is done after the products leave the hands of the farmers.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see provision made for a market service in the city of Washington, but these appropriations are already away up in the air, and are about the only ones that I have objected to on account of the amount. Why would it not be better for the gentleman to offer a proviso that out of this money appropriated $5,000 shall be used for the purpose he suggests?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I am willing to accept that suggestion if the other members of the committee would accept it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think that would be adopted.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I have no objection to a proviso of that kind, making $5,000 of the money appropriated available for that purpose.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. That being the case, I have nothing further to say. I thank the gentlemen very much.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, our worthy and distinguished chairman has just stated that the Committee on Agriculture has always exercised great care in preparing appropriation bills in segregating the items, which is true.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. And let me state that the gentleman has helped to do that, and rendered very valuable service.

Mr. HAUGEN. I thank the gentleman; but the gentleman will also recall a year ago a bill came to our committee appropriating $25,000,000 in a lump sum. He also will recall that the bill was referred back to the department with instructions to itemize, and that the appropriation was cut to $18,000,000. I regret exceedingly that this great committee is going to depart from the rule which it has followed in the past. I believe it a good rule and one that the committee should follow. As I have said, I believe that Congress and the department are entitled to know what the money is appropriated for. Here we have an item carrying $2,136,000; all of it can under the bill be used for one project. For instance, all of the appropriation carried in this item can, if the Bureau of Markets so determines, be used for food survey. That, of course, should not be done; certainly not unless the service can be made of more value than it has been in the past.

I read from Mr. Brand's testimony as to the food survey. Here is what he said April 27:

Yes; or December 31. The actual information on wheat, flour, stock, and other grain foods, and cereal foods generally, for April 1, is ready to release to-day.

The survey made on December 31 is ready for release the 27th of April. Of what value were those surveys, when much of the food had been consumed at the time the information was released? If we are to have surveys, we ought to have them when they are of some value, not after the foodstuffs have been consumed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee what was the appropriation for the Bureau of Markets, say a year ago, for the activities included in this item?

Mr. HAUGEN. I think they were increased last year $155,000 more than this year. My recollection is that last year it was $2,522,000. We started the bureau, I believe, with $50,000, and it has kept on increasing.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long ago?

Mr. HAUGEN. Three or four years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here is an instance of a bureau created four years ago, with an initial appropriation of $50,000, growing in that time to the extent of $2,136,000 and furnishing information that was of no avail at all to the public generally.

Mr. HAUGEN. Just one more statement. When Mr. Brand was asked of what value this work was, among the things that he had discovered was a wreck over in Albany. I read from his statement, printed in the hearings:

Mr. WASON. Did you think, under ordinary conditions, a wreck in Albany would affect the price of beef in Boston?
Mr. BRAND. Yes.
Mr. WASON. How much?
Mr. BRAND. Two or three dollars a hundred.

Gentlemen, it is absurd. Just think of it; a little railroad wreck affecting the price of beef in the big city of Boston to the extent of two or three dollars a hundred. Gentlemen, that seems to me a reckless statement. With the money we are expending we are entitled to more reliable information. Considering it all, it seems to me that the bill ought to be referred back to the Committee on Agriculture, and that the committee should bring in a bill in the regular form—in a proper form—in order that the department may know what the money is appropriated for and that we may know exactly for what purpose this money is to be expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HUTCHINSON) there were—ayes 33, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this same section.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the Randall amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 13, after the figures, insert "Provided, That $5,000 thereof shall be used to establish a market news service on live stock and meats in the District of Columbia."

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment at all and I ask that it be adopted.

The question was taken and the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sixth. For miscellaneous items, including the salaries of assistant secretaries appointed under the act approved August 10, 1917; special work in crop estimating; aiding agencies in the various States in supplying farm labor; enlarging the informational work of the Department of Agriculture; and printing and distributing emergency leaflets, posters, and other publications requiring quick issue or large editions, $1,105,980, of which sum not exceeding $25,000 shall be available for rent in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, for the official purposes of the Department of Agriculture, and within the limits of the appropriations for rent may by this or any other act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, to requisition the use of, and take possession of, any building or any space in any building, and the appurtenances thereof, in the District of Columbia, other than a dwelling house occupied as such or a building occupied by any other branch of the United States Government; and he shall ascertain and pay just compensation for such use. If the amount of compensation so ascertained be not satisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of such amount, and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation for such use in the manner provided by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to correct a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, page 4, after the word "rent," strike out the word "may" and insert in lieu thereof the word "made."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUTCHINSON: Page 3, line 22, after the word "edition," strike out all of lines 22 and 23 and the word "Columbia," in line 24, and insert "for the following stated purposes and in amounts as follows: Office of the Secretary, $76,420; publication and information work, $235,000; agricultural exhibits, $43,020; rent in the District of Columbia, $25,000; assistance in supplying farm labor, $162,000; poultry and egg demonstrations, $40,000; sirup demonstrations, $7,000; preparation of sweet sirups, $5,000; handling, transportation, and storage of fish, $20,000; waterproofing leather for Government and farm use, $3,000; serviceability tests of leather and substitutes, $6,000; utilization of wool-scouring wastes, $9,000; extension work in bee-keeping, $15,000; control of noxious rodents, $100,000; destruction of predatory animals, $125,000; special work in crop estimates, $234,540; total, $1,105,980.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, let us see how much time to take on this. This is the same amendment, I understand, just simply segregates and itemizes the paragraph like the previous amendment. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Does anybody want to speak on that side? If so, how many?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Does the gentleman desire not to make any effort to correct this bill at all?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am opposed to correcting it in this way.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman is referring to votes that have taken place on other matters. I did not know that he might finally consent to some correction of it.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am trying to state to the gentleman that I intend to stand for the bill as reported.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to suggest to the gentleman that it occurs to me that five minutes on a side is all that is necessary on this amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It occurs to me it is not.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, as a member of this committee, I do not propose to submit any more to a time agreement here where five or six gentlemen speak on that side and only one on this side. If we are going to debate this question, let the RECORD show just what the House thinks about the attitude of the Members.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Regular order has been called for. The regular order is that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] has been recognized and is entitled to the floor, but pending his taking the floor he submitted to an interruption by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] in order to reach an agreement as to time. So long as that proceeds informally with the consent of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON], the Chair will not interfere.

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire to say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] that the division of time came at the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi, and if that division was not satisfactory to the gentleman from Alabama it should not be charged up to this side. As far as I know, no objection has been made to time being taken on the items. Nobody is asking for anything but a square deal.

Mr. HEFLIN. "The gentleman from Alabama" has just stated that hereafter he would not agree to that method.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would it not be all right if we would take 20 minutes on this side if the gentleman from Alabama be given that much time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] is in charge of the matter in this House, and he can submit any agreement that he makes informally with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and it will be submitted by the Chair.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will suggest to the gentleman that makes the statement that five minutes from me is sufficient to answer 20 minutes from that side.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Of course, Mr. Chairman, what I am trying to do is to expedite the passage of the bill, and I have always been willing to concede discussion to that side. Of course, anybody could object to any request for unanimous consent that I make. How much time does the gentleman from Iowa want?

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] would like five minutes, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] would like five minutes, making in all 10 minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Young of Texas, a member of the committee, would like five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I wish to discuss another matter entirely, that relating to commandeering, but I do not wish to be included in that agreement.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Now, then, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, 10 minutes on that side and 10 minutes on this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto shall terminate at the expiration of 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, does that include the whole paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. That was not the way it was stated.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I stated, there is a different matter, the right of a department to commandeer buildings, that I think should be discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] to close debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto in 20 minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Will the gentleman now indicate those who are to consume this time?

Mr. HAUGEN. On this side, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON].

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi give the Chair the names on the Democratic side?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. YOUNG of Texas and myself.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is on the same line as the rest, for the purpose of itemizing the paragraph, and I desire to call the attention of the committee to one particular item, and that is "Assistance in supplying farm labor, $162,000." In the next paragraph, paragraph 7, we have an appropriation of $500,000 for the benefit of the Secretary of Agriculture, for supplying labor to farmers. This is a partial duplication. The Department of Labor also has a large appropriation for this very same object of supplying labor to farmers and other industries.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman that this covers two items for the same thing in this bill, one to be used by one party and one by another?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Both by the same party. The first is this amendment, which authorizes $162,000 for assistance in supplying farm labor. In the next section, paragraph 7, there is $500,000 appropriated to the Department of Agriculture for the same purpose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What excuse can there be for that?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I do not know.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I will.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the appropriation carried in the last paragraph is a separate appropriation made as a revolving fund. There is a bill pending in the Senate which might become a law. In case that should become a law, of course this item will be stricken out. The reason it was segregated and put in a separate paragraph by itself was for that purpose, in order to not interfere with the amount carried in the other paragraph in the bill, and I think that amount should be carried in that paragraph.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. May I ask the gentleman a question? If this becomes a law, how can it be withheld?

Mr. RUBEY. If this becomes a law—it has to pass the Senate, of course—and both sums are utilized, of course that amount of money will not be used. If this is stricken out, and if you put it all in one paragraph and that paragraph is stricken out, they would be left without any money to do this work. For that reason the department asks that the amount be kept in the appropriation bill as they have asked for it in their estimate, and we put this $500,000 in a separate item by itself. We ought certainly to keep that amount in that paragraph. Then if this becomes a law, that, of course, will probably not be used.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. What argument was made before the committee in favor of an additional sum of $250,000, estimated for in this lump-sum item for further crop estimating? Has not the department large appropriations for that purpose? And what condition is there necessitating the use of this additional large sum for that purpose? Is not that in this item? I thought there was an appropriation of that kind carried in this item.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. This section carries an item of $234,540 for special work in crop estimate, which, of course, is in addition to the amount appropriated in the regular bill.

Mr. Chairman, I look upon this bill as extravagant. A lot of appropriations here are excessive. I think we ought in war times, when there is such a great demand upon the people all over the country to raise money and purchase bonds, to conserve the money in the Treasury as much as possible. Those of us who know anything about the Fuel Administration know that the Fuel Administration to-day is conserving the fuel supply. Lots of concerns, factories, and industries have had their supply cut off 50 per cent. If the Fuel Administration can do that, it certainly seems right that we should be conservative and cut off all unnecessary items in appropriation bills.

Some of these items are started in a small way. We started last year with a $25,000 appropriation for one item, and this year they come in and ask for $135,000 for the same purpose, with an increase of 42 men. It does seem to me that this committee ought to cut down the items to the lowest possible amount. A great many of these items can wait until the war is over. The people at home should not be burdened by raising money for purposes of this kind. This item is administrative. Lots of money can be cut off this bill and saved in the final analysis without interfering seriously with the work of the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise not so much to speak to this amendment as to make some little reply to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], who has assaulted the farm-loan act.

Mr. Chairman, at the time that act was passed one of the curses of the Nation was the high rate of interest that prevailed in a great section of the country where farmers were seeking to purchase farms upon which to raise their families. These loans largely were obtainable from life insurance companies and great organizations of capital that made a specialty of making loans on real estate. In my own State, where I think we have some of the richest black land in the world, and it is now selling, much of it, at as high as $300 per acre, men were forced on that kind of security by these great land-loan concerns and life insurance companies to pay all the way from 8 to 10 and 12 per cent interest. Those were short-term loans, running usually not to exceed five years. The very moment that we passed through this body the farm-loan act that interest rate was cut in half, and now the same concerns that fleeced those people all those years are begging to put their money out at half the rate of interest that they formerly assessed against men who were attempting to buy homes, and are making legitimate loans on this valuable real estate security.

It is true that since this bill became a law we have entered this great war, and the Government has gone into the field in competition for the surplus money of the country in order to win this war. We have given the Government the right of way, and necessarily every kind of business institution in the world has had to get out of the way when the Government demands came, and they should have gotten out of the way. The very fact that this war is on has interfered with the operations of the Farm Loan Board. My own impression is that the farm-loan security under the system that we have is as fine an investment as the Nation affords to-day. But temporarily we must stand aside. We must first win this war. But I do not see how any man can stand on the floor of this Congress and criticize that law when it has served its purpose by cutting down these high interest charges, giving a man 30 or 40 years' time in which to develop and pay for his home. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman from Michigan, to whom the gentleman refers, stated that $209,000,000 of the Government's funds had been diverted to this farm-loan business. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas if he has recently examined it, and, if so, if he has not found that only $57,000,000 have been taken of the farm-loan bonds by the Government and only $100,000,000 were provided this year, and that, with $9,000,000 that was taken of stock, makes only $66,000,000, instead of $209,000,000 invested in that? Did the gentleman notice that?

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman from South Carolina is entirely in error. Two hundred million dollars has been set aside by the Secretary of the Treasury to be drawn in a given time.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman said $209,000,000 had been diverted to that. As a matter of fact $57,000,000 and $9,000,000 have been diverted, and that is shown by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. It does not matter to me, Mr. Chairman, what the figures are. None of this money is going to be lost. The point is that we have taken out of the hands of the Shylocks the power to charge these high rates of interest, and every dollar of this money will be paid back into the Treasury; our people enabled to buy and pay for their homes and tenancy reduced to a minimum. What greater boon could there be than to have a rural-credit system that thus enables our citizenship to become prosperous and contented home owners? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TALBOTT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5489) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange for lands in private ownership lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. SHERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FOOD PRODUCTION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, for the reasons that I have urged before, I think these items ought to be segregated. I wish, though, particularly to speak in reply to some things that were said by the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]. No one is more familiar with legislation relating to agriculture than he, and no one has done more than he to advance agriculture in the last generation as far as originating and presenting legislation and with unusual force and ability securing its enactment. He, therefore, knows better than to speak of these as emergency appropriations. They are no such thing. They are urged during the emergency of war under the claim that they are necessary for war. But this is legislation for particular purposes, and particular amounts are carried, some of them necessary, for these particular purposes. The gentleman says that it will be unwise to limit or direct the Secretary of Agriculture as to the use to be made of these funds because there might be an outbreak, or an emergency might arise, requiring the use of larger sums of money than are carried in these items. He spoke of hog cholera and some other great plagues with which the animals of this country have at times been affected. The annual appropriation bill carries nearly $450,000 for hog cholera, a large part of it as an insurance fund, for an emergency, because hog cholera is not generally prevalent or seriously threatening the hogs of the country. Five hundred thousand dollars is carried in the regular annual appropriation bill to enable the Department of Agriculture to fight and if possible stamp out a new disease of cotton, $100,000 only to be used at this time for particular purposes, and $400,000 carried in the bill as an insurance fund for an emergency if it should arise.

No one knows that better than the gentleman from South Carolina. There is a foot-and-mouth disease that afflicted the cattle of the country recently, and an outbreak is, of course, possible. A million dollars is carried in the annual appropriation bill for that emergency should it arise. The bill provides also that the remainder of a former appropriation of $2,500,000, the unexpended balance of it, for foot-and-mouth disease, may be available for the fiscal year of 1919. We provide for the emergency, we appropriate an insurance fund, as it is called. No provision of this bill can be defended on any such theory.

The gentleman from South Carolina is mistaken. This bill carries money for particular purposes that the Secretary of Agriculture asks for, some of which were allowed by the Committee on Agriculture and some were not. I insist, as I have insisted before, that there is no possible way by which these activities of the Agricultural Department may be supervised or in any way restricted by Congress unless these appropriations are itemized. I am surprised that gentlemen on the other side of the aisle have invariably voted against amendments, because they are in line with demands made by them year after year, whenever appropriation bills have come before the House that they should be itemized.

We are charged with playing politics, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], who is here a part of the time, but away, as he says, making liberty speeches in sections of the country where it is necessary to stir up the people to do their duty during the war, occasionally coming back here and lecturing the House and telling us we are playing politics. If there is anything except politics that has prompted the gentlemen on the other side to stand against these amendments, which many of them must know are right, I do not know what it is. It seems to me that they should vote for some of these things that in private they must concede are right. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the appropriations provided for in this paragraph are miscellaneous expenses for the office of the Secretary himself. They are under his personal supervision, for which he is absolutely responsible, and certainly, it seems to me, if there is any appropriation for which all the Members would be willing to vote it would be appropriations to be placed in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture for the administration of the affairs in his own office. If you can not give him discretion in reference to that, for what could you give him discretion?

That is all there is in the consideration of this item. The gentleman from New Jersey, as usual, as he has in reference to other paragraphs in the bill, moved to itemize it, so that the Secretary in his office, in the miscellaneous expenses connected with his office, the salaries connected with his immediate supervision, is told that he must not spend any money for this or that, only so much and not a dollar more. I presume it may get to the point where we will be asked to prescribe that the Secretary may spend a dollar and a half, but can not spend a dollar and six bits. It is only another effort to segregate the items and take the discretion away from the Secretary of Agriculture. While there might have been some justification, although I have not seen it, for dividing up and segregating other items, certainly there is no justification for segregating the items for the administration of the Secretary's own office and payment of salaries under his immediate direction. I can state, without any criticism, that when the committee reached the consideration of this item, be it said to their credit and good judgment, everybody said that is for the Secretary's office, we have no objection to it; let us consider something else, which we did. It is proposed now to divide it up and take another view in reference to it. Therefore I ask that the amendment be voted down. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUTCHINSON) there were—ayes 21, noes 40.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 22, strike out the figures "$1,105,980" and insert "$905,980."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, when the food-survey bill, or the act of August 10, 1917, was passed it carried an appropriation of $650,000 for this particular item now under consideration. The testimony in the hearings shows that $234,800 of the $650,000 was used for the purpose of publishing and distributing emergency leaflets, posters, and other publications. In the statement of Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Clarence Owsley, made to the committee, he says that it is the purpose of the department to use $235,000 next year in the publication and distribution of these emergency leaflets, posters, and publications. The inquiry naturally arises, What is the nature of these emergency leaflets, posters, and publications? And Mr. Owsley explains that in his testimony on page 172 of the hearings. He says:

I may say that the character of the publications under the emergency or food-production act differs from the regular publications only in the respect that the emergency publications are addressed to the particular needs of the moment, and we do not use that fund for any of the regular publications.

In other words, the emergency leaflets and posters are of the same nature as the ordinary farm bulletins that are distributed from the Department of Agriculture, except, as Mr. Owsley says, they are addressed to the particular needs of the moment. I have no criticism whatever to make of the distribution of farm bulletins or of the Department of Agriculture in its important work. I have assisted as best I could in their general and practical distribution in my own district. I have always found the available supply quite ample to fill all the demands I have had for these bulletins, and certainly no additional appropriation for that kind of work is needed, other than the regular appropriation which is carried in the sundry civil bill. I do not think my experience in this particular matter is any different from that of other Members, and I believe that you will agree that it is our general experience. Again, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Owsley, states, in referring to the regular fund for printing bulletins, that probably all of it would not be expended. He assigns the reason as follows:

Mr. Chairman, on account of the congestion in the Government Printing Office, we will perhaps not use all of the required fund.

When we observe the tons and tons of printed matter constantly pouring out of Washington, some of it good and some not so good, it is no wonder to us that there is congestion in the Government Printing Office. The wonder is that it is able to keep up at all. It is also no mystery to us that the cost of white paper is so high. How are these emergency publications distributed? What is the method? Mr. Owsley tells us in his statement in the hearings:

They are distributed mainly through our county agents that now are found in nearly every agricultural community in the United States. Then we use the councils of defense for this purpose.

In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I want to state that already the councils of defense for the different States have come before Congress and asked that we give them the franking privilege in the use of the mails. It so happens that I am the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads that has under consideration a bill at this very time along the lines I have just mentioned. It was introduced by Mr. MCKEOWN, of Oklahoma, and provides that the franking privilege shall be granted to the chairmen of the State councils of defense as well as the county chairmen. And I submit in all good conscience, if we continue to call upon them to distribute quantities of such matter as has been sent them by the various departments of the Federal Government we ought to grant them the franking privilege. We ought not to expect them to distribute it at their own cost and expense. I have a letter here which I have just recently received from one of the most alert and active of these State chairmen. I am not going to quote his name, because perhaps it would not be proper to do that in the absence of his permission, but he incloses me a copy of a letter which he recently wrote to the Council of National Defense, and I want to read a portion of it to you. I will state that he lives in a near-by Democratic State, is a very patriotic worker, and is not in any sense a critic of our administration. But he is calling attention to a condition which we know exists and ought at least to be corrected to some extent. He says:

For a year now we have been engaged assiduously in organizing the Nation for war, and we have laid great stress upon coordination, correlation, efficiency, and the elimination of nonessentials, and yet in spite of all this well-directed effort there is much useless waste in man power and resources in the unnecessary volume of printed matter sent out from Washington to newspapers and numerous war activities. While in the main the stuff is all good, yet the newspaper offices are so gorged with this volume that they can not spare the time to read it or even brief it or publish remote parts of it, and the result is that very little of it is printed. As to the various activities I can only imagine they are in the same condition as we are and that they complain about it. That is, we receive an enormous volume of this matter, that we can only glance at the headlines and throw it aside. Very little of it is available, for the reason that we can not spare the man power and the money necessary to assimilate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK (continuing the reading)—

There is a cry made that this multiplicity of communications be simplified and reduced in volume. The duplication can not be entirely eliminated, but it can be wonderfully improved, and it is my earnest hope that the State council section will take hold of this, with a view of supervising the system of emanation and distribution, and as far as possible control and make available a large source of information that is now going to waste.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Has the gentleman also noted that some of the congestion in the mail is being caused by the practice of many gentlemen who are temporarily serving on liberty bond committees, and so forth, sending out under frank of the Treasury Department speeches they have made on the war and all sorts of literature which they seem to think important?

Mr. BLACK. Well, those things have not come under my observation.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have seen a number of those instances.

Mr. BLACK. Well, to say the least of it, a great deal of this literature could be simplified and curtailed to great advantage. But, in further argument in support of my amendment, I submit that the statement of Mr. Owsley himself shows that this $235,000 is to be used for the publication of pamphlets and leaflets substantially the same as our ordinary Farmers' Bulletins. As I have heretofore pointed out, the sundry civil bill carries an ample appropriation for that purpose, and I think this is one of the places where we can use some sensible and proper economy and save unnecessary duplication. Now, the amendment I have offered will still leave $35,000 that the Secretary may use in case of a real emergency, and I believe that that is all that will be needed in view of the ample and sufficient regular appropriation for farm bulletins, carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill. I put the question squarely to you, gentlemen of the House, Shall we put forward any effort to check this waste of printed matter that has been called to our attention and is being called to our attention day by day? What are we to do about it? Are we going to shut our eyes and tell the various departments of the Government to "Go to it; Congress will vote the money." And then when we observe what we think is unnecessary matter going out, shall we stand here on the floor of the House and criticize them for doing what we have authorized by law to be done? The thing to do is to scrutinize these appropriations when the bills are before us and eliminate those items which we think are unnecessary and improper and appropriate only the money that we think is necessary for the purpose to be effected and then the cause for criticism will not arise. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 22, strike out "$1,105,980" and insert "$705,980."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] has made an argument that ought to be convincing and conclusive to the House with regard to the reduction of this estimate by $200,000. No one in this House appreciates more the value of the farm bulletins and other publications of the Agricultural Department than I. No one makes a larger use of them than I, but, as the gentleman has well said, we are already getting a sufficient supply of those valuable documents, and in these days when the price of print paper is mounting higher every day and the Government Printing Office is taxed beyond its capacity in printing articles necessary for the carrying on of the war, we ought not to make these additional unnecessary appropriations. Now, the amendment offered by the genteman from Texas proposes to reduce the appropriation $200,000. I propose to reduce it $200,000 more or $400,000 in all, so as to provide for the reduction he proposes and also to reduce by $200,000 one of the items of expenditure contemplated under this appropriation, the item of special work in crop estimates. Why, the members of the committee and the best informed members of the committee were so little informed as to the necessity of the expenditure of this additional sum for special crop estimating, that when I asked so well informed a member of the committee as the gentleman from New Jersey his views about it a moment ago, he had forgotten for the moment that there was any such expenditure contemplated under this item. The gentleman from Minnesota informs me that the item for the regular crop estimate in the pending appropriation bill is $346,000, but there are other items carried in the bill which are used indirectly for the purpose of crop estimates. Now, I know of no condition at this time that warrants the expenditure of an additional $234,000 as contemplated under this item for that purpose. I propose to reduce the $234,000 to $34,000, leaving that sum that can be used for special estimating, which added to the sum carried in the regular appropriation bill will make the sum available for this particular purpose about $386,000, nearly $400,000, in addition to the other sums carried in the bill which can be used directly or indirectly for that purpose. Now, these days, when we are asking the people to economize, when we are asking them to reduce the consumption of provisions of all kinds, when we are taxing them heavily, and when we are asking them to buy liberty bonds to and beyond their capacity, is no time for a useless and unnecessary expenditure even under so worthy a department as the Department of Agriculture. We are hoping to have a larger crop than ordinary this year, but it does not require a doubling of appropriations to estimate a larger than an ordinary crop.

A large crop can be estimated very nearly as cheaply as a small crop. As a matter of fact it may be easier and cheaper to estimate a large than a small crop, because that means in the main your production is well up to the maximum. Now, I would not cut out a dollar of this appropriation which is really necessary and essential, and I have inquired of members of the committee as to whether or not they were impressed with the necessity of these additional sums. I found none of them had been so impressed, but that they felt as the department had asked for it they, out of abundance of caution and liberality, should perhaps grant them these sums. We can not afford to legislate in that way. We can not afford to legislate in that way particularly in these days when we are trying to keep down unnecessary expenditures in order that we may have funds available for those expenditures that are absolutely necessary and essential. I trust that the committee will accept my amendment, which includes the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted, either the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming or the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. The reduction which the amendment proposes to make as offered by the gentleman from Texas is for literature that is sent out directly from the office and under the supervision of the office of the Secretary of Agriculture himself. It is not farm bulletins, it is an entirely different class of literature intended to reach a different class of people and intended to accomplish a different purpose entirely.

Mr. CRAMTON. Has the gentleman seen any of them which he thinks are half as valuable as the farm bulletins? Most of them are entirely uninteresting and without value. I think they are publications of the various bureaus, of little value, and not to be classed at all with the farm bulletins, which are of great value.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The farm bulletins are very valuable, and there is a great demand for them throughout the country. I have requests for them daily. These are temporary emergency publications and are published at the time under the direction of the Secretary to accentuate conditions and stir up interest in a community or in a section of the country where it may be necessary to attract specific attention to some immediate necessity.

Now, that is the object and the purpose of these publications, and they are sent out under the direction of the Secretary himself. Now, I do not believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] ought to be adopted, for the reason that the purpose of this bill is to increase the crop of foodstuffs, and these estimates become more valuable now than at other times, when no such condition exists. There is a great difference between conditions in the country at the present time, when things are to be done quickly and information has to be obtained in the most expeditious manner, than in normal times. Therefore, it is proposed, as I stated a while ago, to have the work which is being done and which will be done under the direction and immediate supervision of the Secretary himself, and I do not believe any activities which he directs himself and which he feels necessary for his department should be limited, especially when they are administered directly under his own supervision. [Applause.]

I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MONDELL. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 34.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote now recurs on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 25.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin sends an amendment to the desk, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Page 4, line 5, after the word "Columbia," strike out the remainder of the sentence and insert: "occupied by any bureau, division, or any branch of the Department of Agriculture."

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. May I ask the gentleman a question before he begins? Does this limit the commandeering section to the Agricultural Department?

Mr. STAFFORD. It limits the authority of the Department of Agriculture to commandeer only those premises which are now in the occupation of any bureau, division, or other branch of the department.

Mr. RUBEY. You give them the right to commandeer a dwelling?

Mr. STAFFORD. Now occupied by the Department of Agriculture for any of its activities.

Mr. RUBEY. This amendment excepts any house occupied as a dwelling?

Mr. STAFFORD. But the Agricultural Department to-day is in possession, in the work of the department, of some dwellings. The provision recommended by the committee would grant them authority to commandeer any space anywhere in the District except dwelling houses now occupied for dwelling purposes, or other buildings when occupied by some other branch of the Government.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It especially excepts those.

Mr. STAFFORD. I stated that.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. The purpose of the Committee on Agriculture in putting this section in the bill was to reach a certain building, which is a building down here on F Street, occupied by the Forest Service, for which the Government has been paying $18,000 annually. Now, the lease is about to expire, and on addressing a note to the people who own this building they made a curt reply that they did not care about the Government having it at all, but if they wanted it they could have it at an annual rental of $34,000. We thought we ought to have some right to say to those people that they could not profiteer in war times.

Mr. STAFFORD. The amendment I propose would reach that case, but it would not confer the blanket authority to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to go throughout the city and commandeer any office space he saw fit when not used by any other branch of the Government. I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG] whether he can inform the committee as to how much money in the case instanced by him is paid by the owners for light, heat, and other purposes?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I have no figures at hand. All I know is that they have been satisfied with $18,000 a year, and not a dollar of improvement has been made on the building and there is not a foot more of space taken, and yet they put it up from $18,000 to $34,000 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I may proceed to explain my position, I wish to say that the legislative subcommittee has jurisdiction, virtually, of the rental of buildings in the District used by the Government, except of those used by the Agricultural Department. Our committee has been confronted with the very problem with which the Committee on Agriculture has been confronted. There are instances where the owners have with good reason demanded an increase of rental. There are many instances that have been called to our attention where the department, perhaps, should have had the authority to commandeer buildings generally; but we have not given nor have the heads of the other departments requested our committee to give this authority to the heads of the departments, or even to the President, to commandeer buildings for these purposes. Take, for instance, the case of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, which has grown so rapidly since its creation last October. Part of their clerks are housed in the New National Museum Building, a part in the Convention Hall, and in the armory and in the old Elks' building, and yet the Secretary of the Treasury did not come to us for authority to go into the District and commandeer expensive office space that is now used by private persons. If we grant the authority to commandeer this office space we will have to pay a reasonable price for it. It will not be the price as fixed by the heads of the departments. It will be the price as fixed by the courts; and under this provision they will be paid 75 per cent forthwith of that which is determined by the head of the department, and the balance they can go into court and collect. I question whether we should even go to the extent that we are going here, to grant to the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to commandeer buildings now occupied, as is proposed by my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Just for a question. I want to proceed with my argument.

Mr. RUBEY. Suppose the present building occupied by the Department of Agriculture, a very large building, should be destroyed by fire, and it should be necessary for the department to get another building. If we did not adopt an amendment, would not the department be at the mercy of somebody?

Mr. STAFFORD. Even in that exigency I do not think we should grant this authority without limit to any department. We should not authorize the department to go and select quarters in these expensive office buildings.

Mr. RUBEY. This amendment would prevent the department from doing that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It would prevent the department from doing that, but it would permit the Department of Agriculture to commandeer for continued use these premises that are now occupied by the department. As I understood the purpose of the committee provision, it was to cover the case instanced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG], referring to the Atlantic Building, where the rental to-day is $18,000, and where the owners contribute $9,000 of expense for heating and lighting and other service, and where they propose to charge $34,000 and make the price 55 cents per square foot rental. I do not propose to argue that case, and yet 55 cents per square foot rental, from my knowledge of this question obtained in the Committee on Appropriations, is not an exorbitant figure. The Department of Agriculture here is paying as high as $1.13. Take the Munsey Building, for instance. Of course the rate will be greater for the Munsey Building because of the location. This Atlantic Building is in a quarter where there is demand for space for commercial purposes, but there are other buildings where the location is not as good, and yet in such locations the Agricultural Department is paying as high as 86 cents per square foot, without any allowance for light or heat.

But I want to state that it is not wise for the committee to grant this blanket authority to the department to go into the District and commandeer office space. If they want to reach and effect the purpose stated let them adopt my amendment and allow the department to remain in possession of its present quarters, and if they can not arrive at satisfactory terms of rental, then they will submit their proposal to the owner and allow the owner to accept 75 per cent of it, and have the owner go into court for the other 25 per cent and such additional amount, if any, as the court determines to be a reasonable amount.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Suppose the department needs the space and must have it, but can not get it. Then what would you do?

Mr. STAFFORD. There are cases of that kind in the experience of the State Department and the Treasury Department. But the Department of Agriculture is not engaged to any extent in war activities. We have thrown additional activities on the Treasury Department in the creation of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau and the additional income and excess-profits taxes. They have gone ahead and met those conditions, and met them wisely, by taking all the available space of buildings which could be found—the Convention Hall, the National Museum, and the armory over Center Market, and the Elks' building; so that we should not, I respectfully contend, grant this power to commandeer.

There is no pressing reason why you should grant this great authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to go and take space wherever he wants it. We know the common tendency of bureaus. They want to be housed in as good a place as can be found. The Department of Agriculture is not pressed in its war activities as some of the other departments are.

Those buildings used by the department are mostly fireproof buildings. It is a case that is difficult to conceive of. I believe that this amendment should be adopted, so as to protect the Government and provide necessary space for the Department of Agriculture in case it is held up outrageously by any landlord, and still not give the department such great authority that it can go and take places anywhere and say they are necessary for the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes—5 minutes to go to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and 5 to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto shall close in 10 minutes, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] to have 5 minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to have 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the commandeering feature ought to be retained in the bill. I am not sure that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin ought not to meet the approval of the committee. That still retains the commandeering idea in the bill to a certain extent. I want to call the attention of the committee for a few minutes to the abnormal price of everything, which is expressed also by this exorbitant requirement in the form of rents. I do not think for a moment that the proprietor who demands the increased rental is justified; but there is one side of this question that the Government in a degree is probably responsible for. It might be that it can not help it, that the advance in the current price of everything is inevitable, incident to the war. However that may be, the increase in the price of everything with which the Government deals is very noticeable. It is pertinent to ask whether it is necessary.

When I called attention to the high prices paid for material and for labor in connection with the aviation fields and the numerous cantonments, especially those with which I had acquaintance, at first the fact was disputed, and when the evidence was produced it was admitted. But the explanation was offered that the Government could not do otherwise; that it had to have the labor and the material at whatever price demanded. It was observed that we took the labor from a permanent employment and placed it in this temporary employment, and consequently before acceptance it necessarily would demand a very high wage. This scale of prices is very noticeable in the Capital. The Government is doing more, undoubtedly, in the city of Washington than in any other city in the country. It is therefore making Washington more or less a barometer of expense by giving expression to the rate of outlay, which will naturally reflect itself in the price of rentals, in the price of everything we have to pay for as our necessaries here in the District.

Here are a few figures that are illuminating. A gentleman writes me to-day. He is a builder:

> A carpenter recently working for me at $5 a day worked last week on a Government building at Sixth and B Streets, and drew $104 for the week's labor, including overtime. An electrician who formerly worked for me recently drew $120 for one week's pay on a Government building.
>
> Many laborers not trained mechanics have been taken from my force and put to work on Government buildings under the guise of carpenters; they are put to work doing common labor, and with allowance of time and a half and double time frequently draw $75 and $90 per week.
> Material and labor have gone up over 100 per cent on all of the above. Carpenters who two years ago were paid $3.50 now get $5 and $6; painters two years ago who were paid $3 now get $5 and $6; laborers who were formerly paid $1.50 per day now get $3.50 to $4 per day.

What I desire the committee to note is the comparative price the Government pays. In this time under the claims of imperative necessity the Government attracts all the labor available at fabulous prices, and on the cost-plus plan makes the highest cost rather than the lowest the chief item of the contract. We hear it said that companies which have been utilized by the Government on the cost-plus plan have at once increased their managerial charge, including overhead, as much as 100 per cent.

These charges are made frequently and ought to be items of investigation. Be these statements true or false, the Government is certainly an extravagant employer in war times. The facts here revealed show what part of the responsibility the Government must shoulder for the exorbitant expense in Washington.

This letter also proceeds to give the increase in the rates of insurance and various exactions for the men who own the property. I do not excuse property holders here, I condemn them for what they demand. I rose simply to call attention to this phase of it, that while these prices are abnormal—and it is claimed as inevitable—it might be that we can not avoid it. However, I assert that the Government is very largely responsible for establishing this large increase on the basis that it proceeds according to the theory that we must pay any price that anybody should demand. If the outlay is high, then the whole price current will be high. We are not ready to conscript labor, we do not enlist it by law, and therefore when employers are making great profits most naturally labor becomes persistent, and if they ask these enormous prices like $104 a week, and the Government pays them, everything else found in the market as a mere matter of sympathy goes up in accordance, and therefore it is not all on one side. While the landowner here is in part to blame, the Government must take its share also. I am in favor of the commandeering feature as a protection to the Government, even if it is in great part to blame. I insist there are two sides to the question. In so doing I do not exculpate the guilty. The truth about the matter is, in this time of stress, when we all wish to be patriotic to the last demand, we are too prone to attempt to make hay while the sun shines—to get all we can while the getting is good.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, if adopted, would confine the Government in commandeering property to that which they now already occupy, and would not permit the Government to vacate any property they now occupy and go out in the city anywhere and secure other property.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. This commandeering proposition was put in the bill for the purpose of meeting a situation existing on F Street at the present time, where the Forestry Service is now located. The Government for some years has been paying $18,000 a year for what is known as the Atlantic Building. The lease expires on the 30th day of June, and the owners of the building, or those in control of it, have notified the Agricultural Department that unless they pay $34,000 a year, which is an increase of $16,000, or 87 per cent, they must get out and go somewhere else. This provision, therefore, was put into the bill for the purpose of meeting that situation, so as to not permit these people to demand of the Government this exorbitant rent.

The objection that I have to the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is that if, by his provision, he confines the department to the building already occupied by the Government, of course that would confine the department absolutely to the commandeering of this one building. It might be possible before the time arrives that a better building might be found which could be obtained at a reasonable rental, and, if not, that could be commandeered, which would answer the purpose of the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the blanket authority contained in the provision as reported by the committee, would not the Agriculture Department have the right to go down and commandeer the entire Munsey Building?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Oh, yes. They could go wherever they wanted to, but the Department of Agriculture would not do that, as evidenced by their record heretofore. I had occasion last year and the year before to give a list of the rentals paid by the Department of Agriculture, and they were paying less per square foot than any department of the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware that the department has occupied space, and is to-day occupying space, in the Munsey Building?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I know that it has in time past.

Mr. STAFFORD. And is at present.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. By some division of the Bureau of Markets.

Mr. STAFFORD. And paying $1.35 a square foot.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. And occupying just as little space as possible. The department would be glad to get out to-morrow if they could get accommodations elsewhere. The rentals paid by the Department of Agriculture, on the average, are less per square foot than any of the departments of the Government.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Perhaps it has not been called to the attention of the House that this bill limits the right of the Secretary of Agriculture to pay rent for property which is now occupied by the department, or which may be commandeered later by the department, to the amount of money carried in the bill and the regular annual appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture for rent.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I thank the gentleman for that suggestion. I had intended to call the attention of the House to that fact. The Secretary is confined to the appropriation, and he could not go out and commandeer extravagant property, and, as shown by the record of the department, would have no inclination to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 16, noes 42.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MADDEN. We will take the vote on this to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, no; the vote has been taken.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Will not this vote be taken when we meet again?

Mr. GARNER. The amendment has been defeated.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. And the vote was announced.

Mr. MADDEN. But I was on my feet making the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it the gentleman's intention to make the point of order with a view to having the vote taken when we meet again?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Then I withdraw my motion to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MADDEN (interrupting the count). I withdraw the point of order, so far as the question of the vote is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote on this amendment is—ayes 16, noes 42, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11945 and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3911. An act authorizing national banks to subscribe to the American National Red Cross.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 8696. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919; and

H. R. 11628. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, and safety, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia," approved September 25, 1914.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MOORES of Indiana was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of the correction of the military record of James Andy Wallace, H. R. 18427, Sixty-fourth Congress, no adverse report having been filed thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 22, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the director of purchase, storage, and traffic, United States Army, for salaries of employees of his office for the balance of the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1115), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HELM, from the Committee on the Census, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 581), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RAGSDALE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6955) to provide for the abandonment of Piney Branch Road between Allison Street and Buchanan Street NW., in the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 584), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 290) extending the provisions of act of Congress approved December 20, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 586), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MONTAGUE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6979) to regulate the personnel of the Coast Guard, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 587), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHALEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 70) providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 590), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. RAKER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3786) for the relief of C. R. Shaw, Allen Shaw, and Robert Shaw, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 580), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MERRITT, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4458) for the relief of Frank H. Walker and Frank E. Smith, a part of whose real property was taken and is now occupied by the United States for the foundation of the west wall of the Government Printing Office, in the city of Washington, and the remainder not taken damaged by reason of the construction and operation of said Printing Office, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 582), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 22, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, it is our will to do Thy will. We have inherited high and holy principles from our fathers, and we desire to keep inviolate that which has been intrusted to us out of their achievements in the past. We desire to face the new day with courage, with faith, with confidence. We pray Thee to lead us on in the discharge of our duties to accomplish all of God's perfect will in the earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. OWEN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3911) authorizing national banks to subscribe to the American National Red Cross, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STERLING. I have here resolutions passed by the South Dakota Sunday School Convention held at Watertown, S. Dak., May 14, 15, and 16. The resolutions relate to a proposed State constitutional amendment and also to the Federal suffrage amendment now pending. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the State legislature at its recent session submitted amendment "E," which reads as follows:

"Every person resident of this State who shall be of the age of 21 years and upward, not otherwise disqualified, belonging to either of the following classes, who shall have resided in the United States 5 years, in this State 1 year, in the county 90 days, and in the election precinct where such person offers his vote 30 days next preceding any election shall be qualified elector at such election.

"First. Citizens of the United States.

"Second. Persons of foreign birth who have become naturalized citizens in conformity to the laws of the United States upon the subject of naturalization": Therefore be it

Resolved, That in recognition of the splendid lives and noble work of the women of our State we urge the voters of South Dakota to give them full citizenship by voting for this amendment.

Whereas the Federal suffrage amendment has passed the National House of Representatives, we therefore ask the Senate to bring it up for immediate and favorable action; and we request our secretary to send a copy of this paragraph to the President of the Senate and to our Senators from South Dakota.

Mr. BORAH. I ask leave to present a telegram in the form of a petition and have it referred to the appropriate committee.

The telegram was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CALDWELL, IDAHO, May 21.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Washington, D. C.:

The price of wheat being fixed at shipping point the price of cereal substitutes are regarded in a fair ratio with the price of wheat. And price of farm implements be regulated during period of the war recommendations unanimously adopted to-day at meeting of executive committee Canyon County Farm Bureau. Kindly present to House Committee on Agriculture.

C. B. ROSS,
President.
AMOS J. MILLER,
Secretary.
R. P. MUSSER,
County Agricultural Agent.

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition of the Kansas State Osteopathic Association, praying for recognition by Congress of the science of osteopathy, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Central Labor Union, of Coffeyville, Kans., and resolutions adopted by the executive board of the Kansas State Federation of Labor, favoring the enactment of legislation to provide for the reeducation and rehabilitation of crippled soldiers and sailors, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina presented a petition of the Twentieth Century Club, of Bennettsville, S. C., praying for the repeal of the present zone system of postage rates on second-class mail matter, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NELSON presented resolutions adopted by the National Association of Specialty Advertising Manufacturers, of the State of Minnesota, relative to the distinction between commercial bribery and specialty advertising, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of the Anti-Saloon League, of Lesueur Center, Minn.; of the Congregation of the First Baptist Church, of Kasson; and of sundry citizens of Kasson and Barnum, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

WAR FILMS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a day or two since I presented a telegram from the governor of Michigan relative to certain war films. I then stated that when I heard from the chief of the bureau I would submit his reply. I called up Mr. Hart, of the Bureau of Films, over the phone the next morning, and he assured me that there was some misunderstanding which he would have corrected. I desire now to send to the desk and have read his telegram.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK, May 17, 1918.

Senator CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
Washington, D. C.:

Confirming telephone conversation to-day, will write you a letter after my return from conference with Gov. Sleeper and Mr. Duff detailing entire situation. Thank you for your courtesy in matter, and I assure you that equitable arrangements will be made which will be satisfactory to all concerned. I greatly appreciate your kindness in volunteering to read my letter in the Senate.

CHAS. S. HART,
Director Division of Films Committee on Public Information.

Mr. TOWNSEND. On the same day I received a telegram from the governor of Michigan, which I also ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

LANSING, MICH., May 19, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Film matter amicably and satisfactorily adjusted yesterday at Chicago between Mr. Hart and Mr. Duff. Division of films lives up to its agreement by giving War Board sole and exclusive picture rights outside of city of Detroit. This is perfectly agreeable to us.

ALBERT E. SLEEPER, Governor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GRONNA, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 641) for the relief of Mary C. Mayers, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 453) thereon.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3258) for the relief of Ethel Proctor, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 455) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3944) for the relief of Emma H. Ridley, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 454) thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11185) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 457) thereon.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2088) to consolidate certain forest lands within the Cache National Forest, Utah, and to add certain lands thereto, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 456) thereon.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Pensions I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 9959) increasing rates of pensions of soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, together with a report (No. 452) thereon.

I simply wish to make a brief statement as to the bill. The bill reported is the House bill commonly known as the Sherwood bill. The Committee on Pensions has stricken out all after the enacting clause and inserted the provisions of Senate bill 3783, known as the Smoot bill, Order of Business 230 on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

ELIZABETH MARSH WATKINS.

Mr. GRONNA. From the Committee on Claims I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2896) for the relief of Elizabeth Marsh Watkins, and I submit a report (No.

458) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the bill.

Mr. STERLING. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500, to compensate Elizabeth Marsh Watkins, of Wakpala, S. Dak., for permanent bodily injuries sustained by her on the 9th day of November, 1908, at the Government Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there not an amendment to the bill?

Mr. GRONNA. For the information of the Senator from Utah I will say that during the last Congress the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] introduced the bill appropriating $5,000. The bill was passed in the Senate, appropriating $2,500. It went to the House and was favorably reported. During this session of Congress the Senator from South Dakota reintroduced the bill providing for the appropriation of the same amount that was allowed by the committee the last time—$2,500. So it is only for the same amount.

Mr. SMOOT. The same amount that passed the Senate at the last session?

Mr. GRONNA. The same amount that passed the Senate at the last session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4575) granting an increase of pension to Carrie Crockett (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 4576) granting an increase of pension to Theophilus Rock (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 4577) granting a pension to Susan E. Guyn (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4578) granting an increase of pension to Sylvester L. Duff (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4579) granting an increase of pension to Mary Melissa Anderson (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4580) granting an increase of pension to Susannah C. Timmons (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4581) granting an increase of pension to Omer A. Arnold (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4582) granting an increase of pension to William McDonald (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4583) granting an increase of pension to Philip H. Nickelson (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4584) granting an increase of pension to Josiah Wonsettler (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4585) granting an increase of pension to John W. Huffman (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4586) granting an increase of pension to August Berndt (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4587) granting an increase of pension to John P. Williams (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 4588) granting an increase of pension to Caroline G. Sickels; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 4589) granting an increase of pension to Bowman R. Butcher (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

RETURN TRANSPORTATION AFTER THE WAR.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I offer a resolution, which I ask may be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 246) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate, a coordinate part of the treaty-making power of the United States, is of the opinion that an agreement should be made between the nations cooperating with each other and now engaged in war with Germany providing, in effect, that for the return of troops and war material to their respective countries at the close of the war the shipping of all such allied powers shall be used, without discrimination, and to the exclusion of ordinary commerce until the return is complete, it being understood that reasonable compensation will be paid for transportation and that due consideration will be given to the carriage of the necessaries of life from and to the several countries; be it further

Resolved, That a properly authenticated copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I intend to ask in a moment that the resolution be referred or committed to the Committee on Foreign Relations, but I desire the indulgence of the Senate for a very brief word of explanation.

Some day the combined strength of the allies will crush the German power and some day will see a victory for the United States and her allies. When that happy day comes we shall probably have in Europe three, four, five, six million men, with an almost inconceivable volume of war material. These men and this material must be at that time returned as speedily as possible to our shores. Great Britain will be but 30 miles from home; France will be at home; Italy will be at home. If we must depend when that hour comes upon our own shipping for the return of our troops and our war material, it is probably not an exaggeration to say that two years will be required before our men and our material are again at home.

In that period our shipping must substantially abandon the commerce for which it is ultimately to be used. The keen rivalry in business which will spring up the moment peace is declared is obvious to any thoughtful person. I believe that the return of the troops from the scene of action and the return of the material necessarily accumulated in or near the battle fields of Europe ought to be a common cause for all the nations engaged in the war, just as the transport of troops to the battle fields and to the points at which it must be used has been a common cause.

I think we ought to be able to make an arrangement now that will enable us to begin the race for the expansion of our commerce upon even terms with our allies. Prevision and foresight are necessary in order to accomplish this very just and equitable end.

It is the object of my resolution to bring on that subject for consideration, and I very respectfully ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where I hope it will receive the attention which I am sure it deserves.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to take up Senate resolution 241. Before preferring that request I wish to state that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, having charge of the resolution, have reached a unanimous agreement in reference to it, and have directed the chairman to report a substitute resolution, which has been found satisfactory not only to the committee but I believe entirely satisfactory to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs and to every one interested. I therefore, without having anything further to say about it, ask unanimous consent to take up Senate resolution 241.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to know if it is going to occasion debate and consume the morning hour.

Mr. McKELLAR. None whatever. I imagine there will not be the slightest debate. It will not take more than three minutes; probably not that long.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and lays before the Senate Senate resolution 241, which will be state.

The SECRETARY. A resolution directing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into and report to the Senate the progress of aircraft production in the United States.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, as stated by my colleague on the committee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], I am authorized and directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report the following amendment in the nature of a substitute for Senate resolution 241, as reported to the Senate May 16, 1918, which has the unanimous approval of the committee. I trust it will pass without extended debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The substitute reported from the committee will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to substitute for Senate resolution 241 the following:

That any expenses incurred by the Committee on Military Affairs under the provisions of Senate resolution 48, heretofore adopted, including the expense of employing assistants and traveling expenses, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I accept that substitute for Senate resolution 241.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I wish to say just about three words. I have considered that resolution carefully and have conferred with Senators on both sides of the Chamber, and consider it not only free from objection but helpful. I hope it will be passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment submitted as a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That any expense incurred by the Committee on Military Affairs under the provisions of Senate resolution 48, heretofore adopted, including the expense of employing assistants and traveling expenses, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I ask in this connection to have printed in the RECORD without reading Senate resolution 48.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Senate resolution 48, submitted by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN April 23, 1917, reported with an amendment by Mr. THOMPSON April 30, 1917, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and agreed to by the Senate April 30, 1917, is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and that expenses contracted hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10854, the naval appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia. [Putting the question.]

Mr. OWEN. I rose before the motion was put and addressed the Chair. We expected this morning to have until the hour of 2 o'clock to dispose of bills on the calendar.

Mr. SWANSON. All day yesterday was given to the calendar. The naval appropriation bill is of the utmost importance, and it can not be delayed. I can not consent to lay the bill aside for the consideration of other matters until it is disposed of.

Mr. OWEN. I think under the circumstances the naval appropriation bill is entitled to precedence, and I shall not insist.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10854) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the Senate consider first the amendments reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the head of "Pay, miscellaneous," on page 4, line 4, after the word "property," to insert "of inhabitants of any European country not an enemy or ally of an enemy"; in line 7, before the word "occasioned," to strike out "and"; and in the same line, after the words "in the," to strike out "Navy and Marine Corps of the United States in European waters" and insert "naval service," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay the amounts due on all claims for damages to and loss of private property of inhabitants of any European country not an enemy or ally of an enemy when the amount of the claim does not exceed the sum of $1,000, occasioned and caused by men in the naval service during the period of the present war, all payments in settlement of such claims to be made out of "Pay, miscellaneous."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 11, to insert:

The act entitled "An act to provide additional protection for the owners of patents of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, shall be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows, namely:

"That whenever an invention described in and covered by a patent of the United States shall hereafter be used or manufactured by or for the United States without license of the owner thereof or lawful right to use or manufacture the same, such owner's remedy shall be by suit against the United States in the Court of Claims for the recovery of his reasonable and entire compensation for such use and manufacture: Provided, however, That said Court of Claims shall not entertain a suit or award compensation under the provisions of this act where the claim for compensation is based on the use or manufacture by or for the United States of any article heretofore owned, leased, used by, or in the possession of the United States: Provided further, That in any such suit the United States may avail itself of any and all defenses, general or special, that might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for infringement, as set forth in title 60 of the Revised Statutes, or otherwise: And provided further, That the benefits of this act shall not inure to any patentee who, when he makes such claim, is in the employment or service of the Government of the United States, or the assignee of any such patentee; nor shall this act apply to any device discovered or invented by such employee during the time of his employment or service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 14, to insert:

The accounting officers of the Treasury shall relieve any disbursing officer of the Navy of responsibility on account of loss or deficiency while in the line of his duty of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in his charge where such loss or deficiency occurred without fault or negligence on the part of the officer, but where he has been held responsible therefor: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall have determined that the officer was in the line of his duty, and that the loss or deficiency occurred without fault or negligence on his part: Provided further, That the determination by the Secretary of the Navy of the aforesaid questions and for any question pertaining to the status or duty of any person in the naval service shall be conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 3, to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized hereafter, in leasing waterfront property from the city of New York, to provide, as a part or all of the consideration therefor, that improvements placed thereon by the United States shall become the property of the lessor upon the expiration of the lease or any renewal thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 9, to insert:

That hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to cause vessels under his control adapted to the purpose to afford salvage service to public or private vessels in distress: Provided, That when such salvage service is rendered by a vessel specially equipped for the purpose or by a tug, the Secretary of the Navy may determine and collect reasonable compensation therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 23, after "$150,000," to insert:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for special allowances for maintenance to officers of the Navy serving under unusual conditions outside the United States and its insular possessions.

So as to make the clause read:

Contingent, Navy: For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department, or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, $150,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for special allowances for maintenance to officers of the Navy serving under unusual conditions outside the United States and its insular possessions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 17, before the word "transportation," to strike out "or" and insert "for," so as to make the clause read:

Investigation of fuel oil: For an investigation of fuel oil and gasoline adapted to naval requirements, including the question of supply and storage and the availability economically and otherwise of such supply as may be afforded by the naval reserves on the public domain, and for such other expenses for transportation and hire of vehicles in connection with naval petroleum reserves as the Secretary of the Navy may deem appropriate; for the purchase of necessary instruments and appliances; for the extension of the naval fuel-oil testing plant at the navy yard, Philadelphia, Pa., and the temporary employment of civilian experts and assistants, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 5, after the words "naval purposes," to strike out "$188,042,969" and insert "$220,383,119," and in line 9, after "$300,000," to insert:

Provided further, That the Secretary is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft.

So as to make the clause read:

Aviation: For aviation, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for procuring, producing, constructing, operating, preserving, storing, and handling aircraft, establishment and maintenance of aircraft stations, including the acquisition of land by purchase, donation, or condemnation; and for experimental work in development of aviation for naval purposes, $220,383,119: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for drafting, clerical, inspection, and messenger service for aircraft stations shall not exceed $300,000: Provided further, That the Secretary is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 16, before the words "the State," to strike out "and"; in the same line, after "$25,000," to insert "and the State of Washington, $25,000"; and in line 22, after the words "in all," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$75,000," so as to make the clause read:

State marine schools: To reimburse the State of New York, $25,000, the State of Massachusetts, $25,000, and the State of Washington, $25,000, for expenses incurred in the maintenance and support of marine schools in those States in accordance with section 2 of the act entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1911; in all, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Navigation," on page 10, line 2, after the word "parties," to strike out "$5,100,000," and insert "$12,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

Transportation: For travel allowance of enlisted men discharged on account of expiration of enlistment; transportation of enlisted men and apprentice seamen and applicants for enlistment at home and abroad, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentice seamen discharged on medical survey, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of sick or insane enlisted men and apprentice seamen to hospitals, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of enlisted men of the Naval Reserve Force to and from duty, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of civilian officers and crews of naval auxiliaries; apprehension and delivery of deserters and stragglers, and for railway guides and other expenses incident to transportation; expenses of recruiting for the naval service; rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same; purchase, rental, maintenance, operation, exchange, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use; advertising for and obtaining men and apprentice seamen; actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers on duty with traveling recruiting parties, $12,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 12, after the word "boys," to insert "including civilian employees," so as to make the clause read:

Contingent: Ferriage, continuous-service certificates, discharges, good-conduct badges, and medals for men and boys, including civilian employees; purchase of gymnastic apparatus; transportation of effects of deceased officers and enlisted men of the Navy, and of officers and enrolled men of the Naval Reserve Force who die while on duty; books for training apprentice seamen and landsmen; maintenance of gunnery and other training classes; packing boxes and materials; books and models; stationery; and other contingent expenses and emergencies arising under cognizance of the Bureau of Navigation, unforeseen and impossible to classify, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 13, after the words "naval officers," to strike out "not exceeding four," so as to make the clause read:

Ocean and Lake surveys: Hydrographic surveys, including the pay of the necessary hydrographic surveyors, cartographic draftsmen and recorders, and for the purchase and printing of nautical books, charts, and sailing directions, $155,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail such naval officers as may be necessary to the Hydrographic Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 18, after the word "repealed," to strike out: "that all members of the National Naval Volunteers are hereby automatically transferred to the class 'the Naval Reserve,' of the Naval Reserve Force, for general service, and confirmed in the rank, grade, or rating they now hold in the National Naval Volunteers, without examination, regardless of their being members of a State military force," and insert: "The President is authorized to transfer as a class all members of the National Naval Volunteers to the class 'the Naval Reserve,' 'the Naval Reseve Flying Corps,' or 'the Marine Corps Reserve' of the Naval Reserve Force or the Marine Corps Reserve, for general service, in the confirmed rank, grade, or rating they now hold in the National Naval Volunteers, regardless of their being members of a State military force, and without examination and the necessity of executing or filing a new oath and acceptance of office; that until such transfer is effected members of the National Naval Volunteers shall retain their present status and be entitled to receive the same pay, allowances, gratuities, and other benefits as heretofore provided by law, and shall continue subject to the laws prescribed for the government of the Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 17, to strike out:

That all members of the National Naval Volunteers for aeronautic duties only are hereby transferred to the Naval Reserve Flying Corps, and that all members of the National Naval Volunteers of the Marine Corps branch are hereby transferred to the Marine Corps Reserve under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 4, after the word "grades," to strike out "rank, and seniority," and insert "and ranks," so as to make the clause read:

That all laws heretofore enacted by Congress relating to the Medical Reserve Corps and Dental Reserve Corps be, and the same hereby are, repealed: Provided, That members of the Medical Reserve Corps and Dental Reserve Corps may be enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force in their present grades and ranks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 4, to insert:

That the act approved August 29, 1916, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes" (39 Stats. L., ch. 417, pp. 573, 574), be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all of said act following the caption "Naval Dental Corps," on page 573, but preceding the caption "Dental Reserve Corps," on page 574, and by substituting therefor the following:

"That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint and commission, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, dental officers in the Navy at the rate of one for each thousand of the total authorized number of officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, in the grades of assistant dental surgeon, passed assistant dental surgeon, dental surgeon, and dental inspector, who shall constitute the Naval Dental Corps, and shall be a part of the Medical Department of the Navy. Original appointments to the Naval Dental Corps shall be made in the grade of assistant dental surgeon with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), and all dental officers now in the Dental Corps appointed under the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 22, 1912 (37 Stats. L., p. 345), or under the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stats. L., p. 573), or who may hereafter be appointed, shall take rank and precedence with officers of the Naval Medical Corps of the same rank according to the dates of their respective commissions or original appointments, and all such dental officers shall be eligible for advancement in grade and rank in the same manner and under the same conditions as officers of the Naval Medical Corps with or next after whom they take precedence, and shall receive the same pay and allowances as officers of corresponding rank and length of service in the Naval Medical Corps up to and including the rank of commander: Provided, That dental surgeons shall be eligible for advancement in pay and allowances, but not in rank, to and including the pay and allowances of captain, subject to such examinations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, except that the number of dental inspectors with the pay and allowances of captain shall not exceed 4½ per cent and the number of dental inspectors with the rank, pay, and allowances of commander shall not exceed 8 per cent of the total authorized number of dental officers: Provided further, That dental officers shall be eligible for advancement to the pay and allowances of commander and captain when their total active service as dental officers in the Navy is such that if rendered as officers of the Naval Medical Corps it would place them in the list of medical officers with the rank, pay, and allowances of commander or captain, as the case may be: And provided further, That dental officers who shall have gained or lost numbers on the Navy list shall be considered to have gained or lost service accordingly; and the time served by dental officers on active duty as acting assistant dental surgeons and assistant dental surgeons under provisions of law existing prior to the passage of this act shall be reckoned in computing the increased service pay and service for promotion of dental officers herein or heretofore authorized.

"All appointees authorized by this act shall be citizens of the United States between 21 and 32 years of age, and shall be graduates of standard medical or dental colleges and trained in the several branches of dentistry, and shall, before appointment, have successfully passed mental, moral, physical, and professional examinations before medical and professional examining boards appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, and have been recommended for appointment by such boards: Provided, That hereafter no person shall be appointed as assistant surgeon in the Navy who is not a graduate of a standard medical college.

"Officers of the Naval Dental Corps shall become eligible for retirement in the same manner and under the same conditions as now prescribed by law for officers of the Naval Medical Corps, except that section 1445 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be applicable to dental officers, and they shall not be entitled to rank above commander on the retired list or to retired pay above that of captain.

"All dental officers now serving under probationary appointments shall become immediately eligible for permanent appointment under the provisions of this act, subject to the examinations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy for original appointment as dental surgeon, and may be appointed assistant dental surgeon with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) to rank from the date of their probationary appointments: Provided, That the senior dental officer now at the United State Naval Academy shall not be displaced by the provisions of this act, and he shall hereafter have the grade of dental surgeon and the rank, pay, and allowances of lieutenant commander, and he shall not be eligible for retirement before he has reached the age of 70 years, except for physical disability incurred in the line of duty: Provided further, That no dental officer in the Navy who on original appointment as dental officer was over 40 years of age shall be eligible for retirement before he has reached the age of 70 years, except for physical disability incurred in line of duty.

"All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act relating to the Dental Corps of the Navy are hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to legislate out of the service any officer now in the Medical Department of the Navy or to reduce the rank, pay, or allowances now authorized by law for any officer of the Navy."

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to allow that amendment to go over in order that I may examine it a little further.

Mr. SWANSON. I will consent that the amendment may go over at the request of the Senator from North Carolina in order that he may examine it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 20, line 2, after the word "ratings," to strike out "and," so as to make the clause read:

That the age limits for the several ranks, grades, and ratings on first enrollment in the Naval Reserve shall be as prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 11, after the words "Naval Reserve," to insert "and transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve," and in line 24, after the word "duty," to insert "or on the completion of 30 years' service," so as to make the clause read:

That the annual retainer pay of members of the Naval Reserve Force, except officers in the Naval Auxiliary Reserve, and transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve after confirmation in rank, grade, or rating, shall be the equivalent of two months' base pay of the corresponding rank, grade, or rating in the Navy, but the highest base pay upon which the retainer pay of officers of the Naval Reserve Force shall be computed shall not be greater than the base pay of a lieutenant commander. Service in the Navy, Marine Corps, National Naval Volunteers, and Naval Militia shall be counted as continuous service in the Naval Reserve Force, both for the purpose of retirement and of computing retainer pay: Provided, That no member of the Naval Reserve Force shall be eligible for retirement other than for physical disability incurred in line of duty or on the completion of 30 years' service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 1, after the word "accept," to strike out "temporary" and insert "or have accepted," so as to make the clause read:

That no part of the clothing gratuity credited to members of the Naval Reserve Force shall be deducted from their accounts where said members accept or have accepted appointments in the Navy in time of war or other national emergency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 19, before the word "particular," to strike out "their" and insert "his," so as to make the clause read:

No officer of the Naval Coast Defense Reserve or officer of the Naval Reserve Flying Corps shall exercise command except within his particular department or service for the due performance of his respective duties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 2, before the word "National," to strike out "and," and in line 3, after the word "Volunteers," to insert "Marine Corps Reserve, or United States Army," so as to make the clause read:

Members of the Naval Reserve Force when employed in active service, ashore or afloat, under the Navy Department shall receive the same pay and allowances as received by the officers and enlisted men of the Regular Navy of the same rank, grades, or ratings and of the same length of service, which shall include service in the Navy, Marine Corps, Naval Reserve Force, Naval Militia, National Naval Volunteers, Marine Corps Reserve, or United States Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 16, after the word "therefor," to insert "including the purchase of the necessary land," so as to make the clause read:

That the unexpended and unobligated portion of all moneys heretofore appropriated, and the appropriation authorized by section 10 of Public No. 57, Sixty-third Congress, approved February 16, 1914, for the training and equipment of the Naval Militia and the National Naval Volunteers, for the clerical force and the office expenses of the Division of Naval Militia Affairs, and the property loaned by the Navy Department for the arming and equipping of the Naval Militia shall be, and hereby are, made available for training and equipping the Naval Reserve Force and for the purchase, rental, and maintenance of suitable armories therefor, including the purchase of the necessary land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 5, to strike out:

That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 9, to insert:

That the authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Navy is hereby increased from 87,000 to 131,485.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 23, after the word "from," to strike out "87,000" and insert "131,485"; on page 31, line 1, before the word "thousand," to insert "one"; in the same line, after the word "thousand," to insert "four hundred and eighty-five"; and in line 16, after the word "authorized," to insert:

Provided further, That the President is authorized, at any time during the period of the present war, when in his judgment it becomes necessary, temporarily to increase the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy, as provided for herein, by the addition of 50,000 men.

So as to make the clause read:

That the act approved May 22, 1917 (40 Stats. L., p. 85), entitled "An act to temporarily increase the commissioned and warrant and enlisted strength of the Navy and Marine Corps, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all of the first and second sections of said act, after the enacting clause, and by substituting therefor the following:

"That the authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Navy is hereby temporarily increased from 131,485 to 181,485; the authorized number of apprentice seamen is hereby temporarily increased from 6,000 to 24,000; and the authorized number of enlisted men of the Flying Corps is hereby temporarily increased from 350 to 10,000: Provided, That the phrase 'authorized enlisted strength,' as applied to the personnel of the Navy, shall mean the total number of enlisted men of the Navy authorized by law, exclusive of the Hospital Corps, apprentice seamen, those sentenced by court-martial to discharge, those detailed for duty with Naval Militia, those furloughed without pay, enlisted men of the Flying Corps, and those under instruction in trade schools: Provided further, That the number of enlisted men for instruction in trade schools shall not at any time exceed 14,000, which number is hereby temporarily authorized: Provided further, That the President is authorized, at any time during the period of the present war, when in his judgment it becomes necessary, temporarily to increase the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy, as provided for herein, by the addition of 50,000 men."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 32, after line 6, to strike out:

The rank and title of major general is hereby created in the Marine Corps, and the President is authorized to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint one major general, who shall at all times be junior in rank to the major general commandant, and also one temporary major general in the Marine Corps, who shall at all times be junior to the permanent major general.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 13, to insert:

During the period of the present war the commandant of the Marine Corps shall have the rank and title of lieutenant general commandant and shall receive the pay and allowances of a lieutenant general in the Army, and the rank and title of major general is hereby created in the Marine Corps, and the President is authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint one permanent and one temporary major general: Provided, That the major generals of the Marine Corps, both line and staff, shall at all times be junior in rank to the commandant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 8, after the words "of the," to strike out "Navy and"; and in line 11, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "four captains and seven commanders in the Navy selected for promotion under provisions of existing laws and," so as to read:

That the said act of May 22, 1917, Statutes at Large, volume 40, page 85, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word "lieutenant" in lines 5 and 14 of section 4 thereof, and substituting therefor the words "lieutenant commander" and adding at the end of section 4 the following proviso: Provided further, That based on the temporary increase of enlisted men of the Marine Corps herein authorized, the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized, in his discretion, temporarily to appoint not exceeding 6 brigadier generals, 22 colonels, and 22 lieutenant colonels in the Marine Corps in addition to the number permanently allowed by law in those grades.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 35, line 13, before the word "existing," to insert "heretofore"; in line 19, before the words "Marine Corps," to strike out "Navy and"; and in line 22, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "four captains and seven commanders in the Navy selected for promotion under provisions of existing law; and," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. Additional commissioned officers in the Navy and Marine Corps, based upon the temporary increases herein authorized in the number of enlisted men, shall be temporarily appointed by the President in his discretion, with the advice and consent of the Senate, not above the grades and ranks of lieutenant commander in the line and staff of the Navy and major in the Marine Corps, the distribution in said grades and ranks to be made in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916: Provided, That all temporary original appointments shall be made in the lowest commissioned grades of the line and staff of the Navy and Marine Corps, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, and that there shall be no permanent or temporary appointments in or permanent or temporary promotions to any grade or rank above that of lieutenant commander in the Navy or major in the Marine Corps by reason of the temporary appointment of officers authorized by this act in excess of the total number of officers authorized by existing law or on account of the increase of enlisted men herein authorized: Provided further, That, during the period of the present war, the deficiency existing prior to the passage of this act in the total number of commissioned officers of the Navy and Marine Corps authorized by the act of August 29, 1916, may also be supplied by temporary appointments in the lowest grades and by temporary promotions to all other grades until a sufficient number of officers shall be available for regular appointment or promotion in accordance with existing law: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be held or construed to limit or abridge the use or service of the officers of the Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list or of the officers of the Naval Militia and National Naval Volunteers, Naval Reserve Force, and Marine Corps Reserve, as provided and authorized under heretofore existing law: Provided further, That temporary chaplains and temporary acting chaplains in the Navy may be appointed for service during the period of the war in the proportion of the personnel of the Navy as now prescribed by existing law: Provided further, That, based on the temporary increase of enlisted men of the Marine Corps herein authorized, the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized, in his discretion, temporarily to appoint not exceeding 6 brigadier generals, 22 colonels, and 22 lieutenant colonels in the Marine Corps in addition to the number permanently allowed by law in those grades; said temporary appointments shall continue in force only until otherwise directed by the President or until Congress shall amend or repeal the same and not later than six months after the termination of the present war.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 36, line 21, after the word "herein," to insert "who were chief warrant officers in the permanent Navy on July 1, 1917, and were not given such temporary appointments as of that date because of age restriction or ill health"; on page 37, line 6, after the word "rank," to strike out "candidates for assistant surgeon"; and on page 38, line 2, before the word "seventy-six," to insert "and"; and in the same line, after the word "clerks," to strike out "and twenty-nine additional clerks for assistant paymasters in the Marine Corps," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the additional temporary officers authorized in the various grades and ranks of the Navy and Marine Corps in accordance with the next preceding section may be temporarily appointed to serve in the grades or ranks to which appointed or promoted by the temporary advancement of officers holding permanent and probationary commissions, by temporary appointment of commissioned warrant officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Navy and warrant officers, noncommissioned officers, and clerks to assistant paymasters of the Marine Corps, commissioned and warrant officers of the United States Coast Guard, citizens of the United States who have had previous naval or military service or training, and other citizens of the United States specially qualified: Provided, That such chief warrant officers as are given the temporary appointments provided herein who were chief warrant officers in the permanent Navy on July 1, 1917, and were not given such temporary appointments as of that date because of age restriction or ill health, shall take rank and precedence with the other chief warrant officers temporarily appointed as of July 1, 1917, and according to their seniority as chief warrant officers in the permanent service: Provided further, That in making appointments authorized herein the maximum age limit shall be 50 years for enlisted men to ensign, enlisted men of the Navy to warrant rank, noncommissioned officers of the Marine Corps to commissioned rank, members of the Marine Corps branch of the Naval Militia and National Naval Volunteers, Marine Corps Reserve, and civilians specially qualified to commissioned rank, and temporary chaplains and temporary acting chaplains: Provided further, That graduates of the Naval Academy and warrant officers duly commissioned in the Navy or Marine Corps in accordance with existing law shall not, by virtue of this act, be required to receive temporary appointments; and the class of midshipmen graduated from the Naval Academy on March 29, 1917, and the classes to be graduated hereafter, may be commissioned effective from date of graduation: Provided further, That temporary appointments as warrant officers of the Navy may be made by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided further, That temporary appointments as chief warrant officers may be made by the President with the consent of the Senate: Provided further, That the temporary appointment for the war of 76 additional Marine Corps gunners and 76 additional quartermaster clerks is authorized: Provided further, That lieutenants (junior grades) and ensigns may be considered eligible for temporary promotions to the grades of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade), respectively, without regard to length of service in grade.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to the provision on page 8 of the bill. I want to ask him why the provision relating to State marine schools is put in the form of a reimbursement to the States, instead of an appropriation similar to that made by the States?

The law under which these schools was organized reads as follows:

That a sum not exceeding the amount annually appropriated by any State or municipality for the purpose of maintaining such a marine school or schools, or the nautical branch thereof, is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of aiding in the maintenance and support of such school or schools.

As I understand that, if a State appropriates $25,000 to maintain one of these schools, it authorizes us to appropriate a similar amount, not to reimburse the State, but to assist in carrying on the school; and it seems to me that our appropriation should be made in that way.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, at the present time that would be correct. Heretofore, Massachusetts and New York have made these appropriations for nautical schools, and they have not asked the Government for reimbursement. About two years ago we repaid them the amount that they had spent, and consequently it had that phase; it appeared in that way. I think possibly in Boston and New York they pay the expenses, and then the Government reimburses them; but I have no objection to the language being changed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think it would be well to change it, but that has been the practice. The States have spent the money in the past, and then have been reimbursed by the National Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But that is not really what this provision is intended to do now.

Mr. LODGE. No; I think the Senator's point is a good one.

Mr. SWANSON. I think this is the first time the State of Washington has complied with the conditions authorizing this payment. I have no objection to the language being changed. It ought to be changed now. The Government has paid them back.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I offered an amendment and had it printed, reading in this way with reference to my State. I did not know but that this provision with reference to Massachusetts and New York was a real reimbursement provision, that they had probably advanced money and were reimbursing them, but I have offered an amendment as follows:

To aid the State of Washington in the maintenance and support of its marine school, in accordance with the provisions of said act, $25,000.

But I see the committee has put that in as a reimbursement.

Mr. SWANSON. Just make it read "and to pay the State of Washington."

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will insert the word "pay," that will cover it.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not think the State of Washington has spent it, and I have no objection to the amendment. If the Senator will perfect it, I will accept it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then I will do that and recur to it later. I simply wanted to ask the chairman about it now. I did not notice just how it was when we passed it over. I will recur to it in a little bit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 17, after the word "Navy," to insert "and the heads of existing staff corps of the Marine Corps," so as to make the clause read:

That hereafter the Chief of Naval Operations shall receive the allowances which are now or may hereafter be prescribed by or in pursuance of law for the grade of general in the Army, and the officers of the Navy holding the rank and title of admiral and vice admiral in the Navy while holding such rank and title shall receive the allowances of a general and lieutenant general of the Army, respectively. And hereafter chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department, including the Judge Advocate General of the Navy and the heads of existing staff corps of the Marine Corps, shall, while so serving, have corresponding rank and shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by or in pursuance of law for chiefs of bureaus of the War Department and the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 24, after the words "contained in," to strike out "this section" and insert "the preceding amendments of the act of May 22, 1917," and, on page 39, line 4, after the word "Navy," to strike out "and all laws inconsistent with the provisions of this section are hereby repealed," so as to make the clause read:

That nothing contained in the preceding amendments of the act of May 22, 1917, shall be construed to reduce the pay or allowances now authorized by law for any commissioned, warrant, or appointed officer or any enlisted man of the active or retired lists of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 18, to insert:

That during the present emergency any commissioned or warrant officer of the Navy or Marine Corps of the United States on the retired list may, while performing active duty pursuant to law, be temporarily advanced to and commissioned in such higher grade or rank on the retired list not above that of lieutenant commander in the Navy or major in the Marine Corps as the President may determine, and any officer so advanced shall, while on active duty, be entitled to the same pay and allowances as officers of like grade or rank on the active list: Provided, That any such commissioned or warrant officer who has been so advanced in grade or rank by reason of this act shall, upon his relief from active duty or in any case not later than six months after the termination of the present war, revert to the grade or rank on the retired list and to the pay and allowance status, except as to longevity pay, which he would have held had he not been temporarily promoted as provided by this act: Provided further, That a retired officer whether or not employed on active duty shall receive longevity pay according to his total service on the active list plus his total period of active duty while on the retired list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 14, to insert:

That the naval appropriation act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stats. L., p. 579) be, and the same is hereby, amended by the insertion of a new proviso immediately after the clause that "On and after June 30, 1920, no captain, commander, or lieutenant commander shall be promoted unless he has had not less than two years' actual sea service on seagoing ships in the grade in which serving, or who is more than 56, 50, or 45 years of age, respectively," the proviso reading as follows: "Provided, That in exceptional cases where officers are specifically designated by the Secretary of the Navy as performing, or as having performed, such highly important duties on shore that their services can not be or could not have been spared from such assignment without serious prejudice to the successful prosecution of the war, the qualification of sea service in the cases of those officers so specifically designated shall not apply while the United States is at war or during a national emergency declared by the President, or within two and one-half years subsequent to the ending of such war or national emergency."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 10, to insert:

That the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, is hereby amended as follows:

Strike out the whole of the fifth paragraph under the subcaption, "Pay, Marine Corps," and substitute the following:

"That prior to January 1, 1920, any officer holding a permanent appointment in any staff department may, upon his own application, with the approval of the President, be reappointed in the line of the Marine Corps in the grade and with the rank he would hold on the date of his reappointment if he had remained continuously in the line: Provided, That such officers as shall be so reappointed shall take rank and precedence next after those officers of the line of the Marine Corps in the grades so augmented at the time of the passage of this act, and they shall thereafter be carried as additional numbers to the numbers of the grade to which they may be appointed or to which they may at any time be promoted and each such officer shall thereafter be promoted contemporaneously and to take rank next after the officer immediately above him: Provided further, That such staff officer shall, before being reappointed in the line of the Marine Corps as above provided, perform line duties for one year, at the expiration of which time he shall as a prerequisite to reappointment in the line be required to establish to the satisfaction of an examining board consisting of line officers of the Marine Corps his physical, mental, and professional fitness for the performance of line duty."

That officers of the line and staff of the Navy, who have been or may hereafter be permanently appointed in the various grades and ranks of the Navy, shall take rank and precedence ahead of all officers temporarily appointed in the same grades and ranks in accordance with the act of May 22, 1917, or any amendments thereto.

The provisions of existing laws with reference to promotion by selection in the line of the Navy are hereby extended to include and authorize advancement to the ranks of commander, captain, and rear admiral in the Staff Corps of the Navy under the same conditions in all respects except as may be necessary to adapt the said provisions to such Staff Corps: Provided, That boards of selection shall in each case be composed, when practicable, of not less than five members of the corps concerned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 11, after the word "employees," to insert "or other persons in civil life"; and in line 14, after the word "employee," to insert "or other persons in civil life," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to pay cash rewards to civilian employees of the Navy Department or the Naval Establishment or other persons in civil life when due to a suggestion or series of suggestions by them there results an improvement or economy in manufacturing process or plant or naval material: Provided, That such sums as may be awarded to employees or other persons in civil life in accordance with this act shall be paid them out of current naval appropriations in addition to their usual compensation: Provided further, That no employee or other persons in civil life shall be paid a reward under this act until he has properly executed an agreement to the effect that the use by the United States of the suggestion or series of suggestions made by him shall not form the basis of a further claim of any nature from the United States by him, his heirs, or assigns.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 4, before the words "Marine Corps," to insert "Navy or," and in line 16, before the words "Marine Corps," to insert "Navy or," so as to make the clause read:

That any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps upon the retired list who has been ordered into active service since April 6, 1917, or who may hereafter be ordered into active service, shall be eligible for promotion, and he shall be entitled to the pay and benefits of continuous service of such rank and for such length of time as he is or has been employed in active service, and when relieved of active service shall retain upon the retired list the rank and service held by him at the time of such relief, with the pay and allowances of such rank on the retired list; and the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed to allow in the accounts of any enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps who resigned from the retired list in order to reenlist for appointment in a higher grade, the same continuous service pay and the benefits of such rank to which he may have been appointed upon reenlistment, as if his service had been continuous, and any difference in pay from the date of reenlistment shall be credited to his account.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 24, before the words "per centum," to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five," and on page 50, line 3, before the words "per centum," to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five," so as to make the clause read:

(d) That whenever the United States shall cancel or modify any contract, make use of, assume, occupy, requisition, or take over any factory or part thereof, or any ships or war material, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b), it shall make just compensation therefor, to be determined by the President, and if the amount thereof so determined by the President is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as added to said 75 per cent shall make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 14, before the word "satisfactorily," to strike out "to," and in the same line, after the word "satisfactorily," to insert "to," so as to read:

That the act approved October 6, 1917, to provide for the acquisition of an air station site for the United States Navy at Cape May, N. J., be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"And provided further, That in the event the Secretary of the Navy is unable satisfactorily to consummate the negotiations for the purchase thereof under the provisions of said act approved October 6, 1917, the President is hereby authorized and empowered to take over for and in behalf of the United States the immediate possession of and title to such land, including all easements, rights of way, riparian and other rights appurtenant or appertaining thereto deemed by him to be necessary for the purposes aforesaid, and to make compensation therefor under the terms and provisions of the legislation contained in this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Ordnance," in the item of appropriation for ordnance and ordnance stores, on page 51, line 25, after the words "in all," to strike out "$24,194,045" and insert "$30,522,279," so as to read:

Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, watchmen, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and naval ammunition depots for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, shall not exceed $2,950,000; in all, $30,522,279.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 10, after the word "merchantmen," to strike out "$48,309,523.50" and insert "$93,847,235.50," so as to read:

New batteries for ships of the Navy: For batteries and outfits for naval vessels, auxiliaries, patrols, aircraft, naval stations, and merchantmen, $93,847,235.50.

Mr. SWANSON. I received yesterday afternoon a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a letter from Admiral Sims, which is very confidential and which necessitates an increase of that appropriation $11,166,876. I have shown this communication to each member of the committee I have been able to see and they all concur in the importance of the appropriation being increased. I therefore move to insert $105,014,110.50 in lieu of $93,847,235.50.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 11, after the word "That," to strike out "$28,059,523.50" and insert "$41,259,523.50," and in line 14, after the word "seventeen," to insert "and March 28, 1918," so as to read:

Provided, That $41,259,523.50 of this amount shall be available to meet obligations authorized under this heading in the act of October 6, 1917, and March 28, 1918.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 17, after the word "vessels," to strike out "$39,259,180" and insert "$73,789,530," and in line 18 after the word "That," to strike out "$15,146,120" and insert "$23,210,120," so as to read:

Ammunition for vessels: For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ammunition for vessels, $73,789,530.

Mr. SWANSON. In a cablegram from Admiral Sims he desires this appropriation to be increased $10,500,000. I have shown his communication to all the members of the committee I could see and they all concur in its being a matter of the utmost importance and that it ought to be done. I therefore move as a substitute for the figures "$73,789,530" to insert "$84,289,530."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 18, after the word "That," to strike out "$15,146,120" and insert "$23,210,120," and in line 21, after the word "seventeen," to insert "and March 28, 1918," so as to read:

Provided, That $23,210,120 of this amount shall be available to meet obligations authorized under this heading in the act of October 6, 1917, and March 28, 1918.

Fuel and transportation: Coal and other fuel for steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same; maintenance and general operation of machinery of naval fuel depots and fuel plants; water for all purposes on board naval vessels; and ice for the cooling of water, including the expense of transportation and storage of both, $49,400,000. $1,000,000 of which, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may in his discretion, be used by the Secretary of the Navy in mining coal, or contracting for the same in Alaska, the transportation of the same to Seward, Alaska, and the construction of coal bunkers and the necessary docks for use in supplying ships therewith; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to select from the public coal lands in Alaska such areas as may be necessary for use by him for the purposes stated herein: Provided, That when, in the opinion of the President, the prices asked for the charter of vessels for the transportation of fuel are excessive, he is authorized to purchase vessels suitable for the purpose, and, if money is not otherwise available, to pay for them from the appropriation "Fuel and transportation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Construction and Repair," in the item of appropriation for the construction and repair of vessels, on page 77, line 1, before the word "superintending," to strike out "officers" and insert "offices," so as to read:

Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, drafting, inspection, watchmen (ship keepers), and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and offices of superintending naval constructors for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, shall not exceed $3,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, after line 11, to insert:

So much of the naval appropriations for the fiscal years 1918 and 1919 as is necessary may be transferred on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the regular appropriations of the Coast Guard and Lighthouse Services.

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized during the period of the present war to promote temporarily, with the advice and consent of the Senate, commissioned line officers and engineer officers of the United States Coast Guard below the rank and grades of captain and captain of engineers to the ranks and grades of the Coast Guard not above captain and captain of engineers, respectively, without regard to number or length of service in rank or grade: Provided, That such temporary promotions may be to such rank and grade in the Coast Guard not above captain or captain of engineers as correspond to the rank and grade that may be attained in accordance with law, either permanently or temporarily, by line officers of the regular Navy of the same length of total service: Provided further, That constructors of the Coast Guard now authorized by law who shall have had as much total service in the Navy Department or in the Coast Guard as the officer of the Construction Corps of the Navy at the foot of the permanent or temporary list of those with the rank of lieutenant commanders may be temporarily promoted to the rank of captain of the Coast Guard: And provided further, That for the purposes of this act service in the Coast Guard to be counted must have been continuous: And provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall operate to disturb the relative position of officers in the Coast Guard with reference to precedence or promotion, but all such officers otherwise qualified shall be advanced in rank with or ahead of officers in the Coast Guard who were their juniors on the date of this act.

The next amendment was, on page 80, after line 20, to insert as an additional section:

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized during the period of the present war to promote temporarily, with the advice and consent of the Senate, officers of the Coast Guard holding permanent commissions above the rank and grade of first lieutenant and first lieutenant of engineers as follows: Not to exceed two-fifths of the captains authorized by law, and not to exceed one-third of the captains of engineers authorized by law, to have the rank of senior captain in the Coast Guard; and not to exceed one-third the senior captains authorized by law, to have the rank of captain in the Navy and colonel in the Army: Provided, That the senior captains, captains, and captains of engineers to be temporarily promoted as herein provided shall be selected as provided by law for promotion by selection in the Navy.

That during the period of the present war the captain commandant of the Coast Guard shall have the rank of commodore in the Navy and brigadier general in the Army, and the engineer in chief of the Coast Guard shall have the rank of captain in the Navy and colonel in the Army.

That during the period of the present war the senior district superintendent, the three district superintendents next in order of seniority, the four district superintendents next below these three in order of seniority, and the junior five district superintendents shall hereafter have the rank, pay, and allowances of captain, first lieutenant, second lieutenant, and third lieutenant in the Coast Guard, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 21, to insert:

SEC. 3. That the permanent and probationary commissions of officers of the Coast Guard shall not be vacated by reason of the temporary promotions and advancements authorized by this act, nor shall said officers be prejudiced in their relative lineal rank in regard to their promotion as provided for in existing law: Provided, That no officer who shall receive a temporary promotion or advancement under this act shall be entitled to pay or allowances except under such promotion or advancement: Provided further, That upon the termination of the temporary promotions and advancements authorized by this act, the officers so promoted and advanced shall revert to the rank and grade from which temporarily promoted or advanced, unless such officers in the meantime, in accordance with law, become entitled to promotion to a higher grade or rank in the permanent Coast Guard, in which case they shall revert to said higher grade or rank, and shall, after passing the prescribed examinations, be commissioned accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 15, to insert:

SEC. 4. That all temporary promotions and advancements authorized by this act shall continue in force only until otherwise directed by the President, and not later than six months after the termination of the present war.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 19, to insert:

SEC. 5. That any officer of the Coast Guard temporarily promoted or advanced in grade or rank in accordance with the provisions of this act who shall be retired from active service under his permanent commission while holding such temporary grade or rank, except for physical disability incurred in line of duty, shall be placed on the retired list with the grade or rank to which his position in the permanent Coast Guard at the date of his retirement would entitle him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, after line 3, to insert:

SEC. 6. That officers of the United States Coast Guard on sea duty or on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States during the period of the present war shall receive the same increase of pay and allowances in all respects as are now or may hereafter be provided by law for officers of the Navy of corresponding rank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, after line 9, to insert:

SEC. 7. That nothing contained in this act relating to the Coast Guard shall operate to reduce the rank, pay, or allowances that would have been received by any person in the Coast Guard except for the passage of this act.

And insert:

All unexpended balances of appropriations made for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal year 1918 in the naval appropriation act and the several acts making deficiency appropriations are hereby continued and made available for the fiscal year 1919. The balances existing, after all payments made prior to the passage of this act have been charged, shall be transferred to and merged with the corresponding appropriations contained in this act: Provided, That prior to the transfer there may be charged against these balances the expenditures prior to July 1, 1918, on account of the accrued pay of officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, accrued pay of civilian employees, and supplies issued from the naval supply account.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the amendment which I have asked to have passed over is a very long one. I do not know exactly what it means or what will be its effect. I have not had time to study it, and therefore I am going to ask the Senator from Virginia to accept an amendment to the amendment which, I think, will cover the case as I think it ought to be covered. My suggestion may be already provided for in the law, but it will not hurt to insert the language here. I therefore move to add to the amendment:

That all appointments and promotions provided for in this amendment shall be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. What is the amendment that is now proposed by the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is that all of these appointments and promotions shall be confirmed by the Senate. That is the law now, but I do not know whether or not the language reported by the committee may repeal the existing law.

Mr. LODGE. That language ought to be embodied in the amendment if it is not already there.

Mr. SWANSON. I accept the amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire that his amendment shall come in at the end of the committee amendment?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I suppose the matter in italics is all one amendment and, if so, my amendment comes at the end of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, at the end of the committee amendment, on page 18, line 8, after the word "duty," to insert:

That all appointments or promotions provided for in this amendment shall be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. I accept the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask what is the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. I presume it would be better to have the language read "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," as that is the usual phraseology. I ask that that modification of my amendment to the amendment of the committee be made, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment of the committee as now proposed to be modified by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 18, line 8, after the word "duty," it is proposed to insert:

All appointments or promotions provided for in this amendment shall be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. I should now like to have the amendment agreed to as amended.

Mr. LODGE. One moment. There are one or two verbal amendments which are made necessary by the changes which the committee has made. On page 16, at the end of line 6, I move to strike out the words "commander and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On the same page, line 10, I move to strike out the word "rank."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On the same page, in line 10, I move to strike out the words "commander or."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On the same page, line 11, after the word "captain," I move to strike out the words "as the case may be."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 15, line 13, after the word "their," I move to strike out the words "respective commissions or."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts what is the purpose of these amendments?

Mr. LODGE. The purpose of these amendments is simply this: The bill as drawn limited the promotions of dental surgeons to the rank of lieutenant commander, but gave them the right to have the pay and allowances of commander and captain without the rank. The National Dental Association are very anxious that we should amend the bill so as to give these officers promotion to the rank and pay of captain. The committee, however, did not feel able to do that for reasons which it is not necessary now to go into—the likelihood of a conflict of authority in hospitals was one of the reasons—and therefore they went so far as to give them the grade of dental inspectors with the rank of commander. This was overlooked, and the amendments are to make the bill conform to that change. As it stood before, it provided for both the pay and allowances of commander and of captain. They have the rank and pay of commander, anyway, under the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question, in order that I may understand the situation? What will be the opportunities for promotion under this bill for a dental surgeon who has passed the examination and been appointed and is now serving in the Navy?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator means how high he can go?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. He can go as high as dental inspector, with the rank, pay, and allowances of commander.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, although I am not very well informed upon the subject, I can understand, at least, some of the reasons relating to the rank; but I can not understand why a dental surgeon, who leaves a lucrative practice at home, should not be permitted to have the same privileges as a medical officer so far as pay is concerned. What is the reason?

Mr. LODGE. What he is deprived of, Mr. President, so far as pay and allowances are concerned, is this: A medical officer can be promoted to the rank of medical inspector and medical director. A medical director carries the rank, pay, and allowances of captain. Under the provisions of the last bill it is possible in the Medical Corps for medical directors to become admirals. Under this bill a dental surgeon may rise to the rank, pay, and allowances of dental inspector, with the rank of commander in the Navy, but he is also entitled to have the pay and allowances of a captain—as high as in the Medical Corps—but he does not get the rank.

The reason that the granting of higher rank was resisted by the department was that in a hospital, which must be under the charge of a member of the Medical Corps, it might easily occur that if the dental officer had the rank of captain and the medical officer the rank of commander, the dental officer would be in control of the hospital. That was the reason.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that reason so far as rank is concerned, although I do not mean to say that I approve it; but how does the Senator expect to get experienced and competent dental surgeons without adequate pay?

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator with great frankness that so far as I was personally concerned I was prepared to put them on an exact equality with the Medical Corps; but the department has taken the ground that they ought not to go higher than the rank of lieutenant commander, and the committee, as so often is the case, compromised it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish to ask the Senator a question about another part of the bill, although along the same line.

Mr. LODGE. May we dispose of the pending amendment? It is merely a small amendment to the amendment, and I think was not disposed of. I refer to the last amendment which I offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Chair has been waiting to see how the Senator from Massachusetts got along with the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Iowa said he was going to speak of something else.

Mr. CUMMINS. I intended to ask a question about something else, not about that particular amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Then, if the Senator has no objection, I should like to have the amendment to the amendment disposed of.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the object of the Senator's amendments. What is sought to be accomplished by these verbal changes?

Mr. LODGE. These verbal amendments were offered to make the bill conform to the idea of the committee. The bill was drawn up by the department on the basis in possibility of promotion of a limitation of rank to that of lieutenant commander. We raised it to commander. Under the original bill as drawn the dental surgeons were given the right to the pay and allowances of commander and captain; but as we give them the rank, pay, and allowances of commander, we had to amend the provision so as to provide that they might have the pay and allowances of captain without the rank. It was simply to make the bill harmonize.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. That is my amendment on page 15?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia or the Senator from Massachusetts—they are both experts in dental surgery——

Mr. LODGE. Experts on everything in this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. A question with regard to the original proviso on page 14, which reads:

Provided, That members of the Medical Reserve Corps and Dental Reserve Corps may be enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force in their present grades, rank, and seniority.

Mr. LODGE. That was the House provision.

Mr. CUMMINS. That was the House provision. The committee propose to strike out the words "rank and seniority," so that it would read:

Provided, That members of the Medical Reserve Corps and Dental Reserve Corps may be enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force in their present grades and ranks.

What is the reason for striking out "seniority"?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in both the Medical Corps and the Dental Reserve Corps there were many members who were out of the service for a number of years and rendered no service at all, a large part of them. If "seniority" is left in, they will come back and take rank over men who have been serving all the time.

Mr. SWANSON. Then, in addition to that, if the Senator will permit me, you see this is a transfer. Some of them might not be promptly transferred—perhaps not for a year or two years—and with the word "seniority" left in the law, if they come in two or three years from now, they will take rank over people who go immediately into active service. Therefore the department have asked, in a memorandum made in regard to it, that that go out, because they thought it did an injustice to those who were going into immediate service.

Mr. CUMMINS. You would do an injustice, possibly, if it were left just as the House provided, but you will do a much greater injustice if you enact the bill as it is now proposed to be amended. I will give an illustration:

We have organized—and I will confine it to dental surgeons, as we have been speaking of them—a Dental Reserve Corps. In it have been enrolled many accomplished, skillful, experienced dental surgeons of mature age. They have not been called into active service, many of them. The war comes on, and there are called into the service a great number of young men, just from their schools, without any experience whatever, and without any income whatever that they are compelled to abandon when they enter the service. They are all appointed as of the same grade—that is, I take it, it is the grade of assistant dental surgeon, with the rank of lieutenant, junior grade.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Lieutenant commander.

Mr. CUMMINS. We then have this position: The Government calls into active service a dental surgeon, we will say, 40 years of age, who has practiced dentistry successfully for 10 or 15 years He has the rank of lieutenant of the junior grade. He takes his place by the side of a young man without any experience whatever, and with ability yet to be demonstrated; and yet you give the elder man, who comes into the service of the country fully equipped, no advantage at all because for four, six, or eight years he has been enrolled in the Reserve Corps.

That is not right. I recognize that there ought to be a difference between the surgeon who is permanently in the service and one who is not; but there ought to be no such discrimination as this between men who are called in for this war, and I assume that the corps is to be very greatly enlarged, or has been very greatly enlarged, on account of the war.

I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that there ought to be some way of doing justice to these surgeons who have been parts of the Dental Reserve Corps—and I think what I say would be true of the Medical Reserve Corps, too—and not do an injustice to those who are permanently in the service.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, as I understand the matter, I think the Senator is mistaken. This is a transfer of the entire reserve, both in the Regular Naval Reserve, the Marine Corps, and the Dental Corps, to make them conform more than the original law did. The Dental Corps is made in the Medical Reserve by this act. Those words "and seniority" were put in on the floor of the House, not by the Naval Committee; and the effect of that is that a man can wait a year or two years or other length of time before he expresses his willingness to take advantage of the provisions of this act, and he would supersede men who have become active at once.

Here is what the department says about it. I should like to read the letter, which will explain it:

It is, of course, contemplated that all the members of the Medical Reserve Corps and Dental Reserve Corps will be enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force at the same time.

Now, you see we make that a Naval Reserve Force—

However, should one or a number of the members of either of these corps delay their request for enrollment in the reserve for a considerable time, possibly several years, if the word "seniority" is retained in the bill these members will still have to be given seniority with the other members of the corps who were enrolled upon the approval of the appropriation act. This would not be justice to those members who had requested enrollment in the reserve promptly.

That is the reason why they desire to have it changed. The word "rank" will take care of any of them according to their precedence of commission at the time they come in. The word "seniority" was put in there in order to take care of men who would not come in promptly, it was understood, and that is the reason why the department has insisted upon its being eliminated. Does the Senator think it would be just to let a man wait two years and have other men of the same grade come in promptly, and then, if he comes in two years from now, take seniority over a man who had served two years?

Mr. CUMMINS. But that is not the situation, as I understand it. These men do not come in; they are called in. The members of the Dental Reserve Corps are already under obligation to respond whenever the demand is made by the authorities, and if they are not in it is because their services have not been requisitioned. They stand ready to come in. Now, if the Government or the Naval Board, or whoever determine the matter, see fit to call in Mr. John Smith, and he is in two months, and then they call in Mr. John Jones, who has had his commission for four years, there is no injustice in giving seniority to John Jones.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is right. The injustice, if the Senator will permit me to read this now, is in this—the provision reads:

That all laws heretofore enacted by Congress relating to the Medical Reserve Corps and Dental Reserve Corps be, and the same hereby are, repealed.

Now, you see, you do that for the reserve and the Marine Corps and also for the Fleet Reserve:

Provided, That members of the Medical Reserve Corps and Dental Reserve Corps may be enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force.

Now, you give a new name——

Mr. CUMMINS. Does that mean that all these surgeons who have been hitherto enrolled and have been examined and have become members of the Dental Reserve Corps or the Medical Reserve Corps are now legislated out of the service entirely?

Mr. SWANSON. Except that they can make an application at once and come into a new thing, known as the Naval Reserve Force, with their grade and rank. They come right in if they just make the application.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not understand that part of it; but the effect of that would be to lose to the Government the services of a highly skilled and, I am sure, very patriotic body of men——

Mr. SWANSON. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. Because you can not expect these men who have held commissions in the Dental Reserve Corps or Medical Reserve Corps for years and have put themselves at the service of the Government to come in on the same terms with the boy who has just been graduated from college.

Mr. SWANSON. They are not to do that. If the Senator will permit me, this language transfers them to what is known as the Naval Reserve Force at the same grade and rank they then possessed. Now, this word "seniority" is put in there. Some of them do not want to apply until two years from now. They might want to reconsider. They might want to come in after the danger is over. If a man does make an application and go in, then he takes seniority. Not his grade and rank, but his seniority would put him over men who have served two years, because this bill gives him the grade and rank which he possessed at that time. The department has insisted that the word "seniority" shall go out, because it would encourage some of them to delay and not come in at once.

I am satisfied that if the Senator will read what the department says in reference to that matter he will see the situation. I do not know whether he has read it or not.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not read the report. I believe that the difficulty has not been in securing men, but the great difficulty has been in keeping men out. I know of a dozen instances in which the department has examined applicants, has certified to their efficiency, has induced them to leave their customary work and abandon their ordinary offices, and yet has kept them there in a state of uncertainty and suspense until it has become intolerable.

I do not know enough about this subject to propose an amendment, but I simply want to record my opinion that you are about to do a very great injustice to a very honorable profession, and that the result will not be for the good of the service but will be a distinct impairment of the service.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, this proposition or change has been agreed to by the Dental Association. I am satisfied that it gives them entire relief and justice to transfer them with their grade and rank; that the word "seniority" as included in there, from my investigation, would enable people to wait until after this war is over, and then apply for their transfer to the Dental Corps, and then get seniority over men who served for a year or six months. If that is cut out, it will induce them to promptly apply for the transfer, as directed in this act. If it does not accomplish that, I am fully in accord with the Senator, and will see that no injustice is done to any of these dental surgeons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended, found on pages 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, there was another amendment passed over in connection with the appropriation of $25,000 for the nautical school of the State of Washington.

Mr. TILLMAN. To reimburse the State of Washington.

Mr. SWANSON. It was thought possibly they had not spent it, but that it was simply to equip the school to measure up to the statute. The Senator from Washington has an amendment to propose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I have an amendment that I shall propose.

Mr. SWANSON. What amendment is it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The one I submitted to the Senator a while ago.

Mr. SWANSON. That is all right. Just read it to the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will send it to the desk, and the Secretary can read it. I suppose we will have to reconsider the action on the committee amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be reconsidered. The Senator from Washington offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, in the committee amendment, on line 17, before the words "the State," it is proposed to insert the words "to aid," so that it will read:

To aid the State of Washington, $25,000.

Mr. SWANSON. I accept the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On line 17, after the word "incurred," it is proposed to insert the word "and."

Mr. SWANSON. I accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On the same page, line 18, after the word "schools," it is proposed to insert "or nautical branches thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer this amendment at the end of the bill. It was eliminated at an earlier part of the bill:

All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The House had a provision of that kind, but it was in the earlier part of the bill, and possibly applied to a paragraph and not to the entire bill; so I offer that amendment at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill, on page 101, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the chairman of the committee if all the committee amendments have been acted on?

Mr. SWANSON. All the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to offer an amendment. On page 99, commencing on line 15, I move to strike out the language going down to line 4, on page 100; and before doing so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hale	McNary	Smith, Mich.
Calder	Harding	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Hardwick	New	Smoot
Culberson	Henderson	Nugent	Sutherland
Cummins	Hollis	Overman	Swanson
Curtis	Johnson, Cal.	Page	Thomas
Dillingham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Thompson
Fall	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Tillman
Fernald	Kendrick	Ransdell	Townsend
Fletcher	Kenyon	Reed	Trammell
France	King	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Gallinger	Lewis	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Goff	Lodge	Sheppard	Walsh
Gronna	McCumber	Shields	Wilfley
Gulon	McKellar	Smith, Md.	Wolcott

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Secretary to read the language in the bill that my amendment proposes to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. On page 99, beginning at line 15, strike out the following words:

That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, no Member of this body is more anxious than I am to have this session come to a close at as early a day as the public interests will justify. For that reason and for the reason that I have discussed this same proposition several times before I am not going to occupy much time in calling attention to what I think is a very unfortunate proposition in the bill; that is, the insertion of the language that I have moved to strike out and which has just been read from the desk.

I apprehend that the stock arguments that have heretofore been used that great outrages are being committed upon the workingmen where the efficiency system is used in manufacturing concerns will be repeated to-day. Indeed, I shall be surprised if the term "industrial serfdom," which has been uttered from high places in this country, will not be applied to the workingmen unless this provision remains in the bill.

"Industrial serfdom," Mr. President, does not appeal to me when no such condition exists in our country. It does not appeal to me from the circumstance that in almost all the large manufacturing establishments in the United States controlled by individual initiative and individual or corporate capital this system is in operation, and no complaint has reached my ears from the men who are employed in those establishments that they are being unduly dealt with or that anything unfair is being imposed upon them.

During the last week I have received a great many telegrams and letters from manufacturers and business men, men not only from my own State but from other States as well, expressing the hope that notwithstanding the effort to strike this provision from former bills had failed in this war time and in view of the emergency that exists to have the highest efficiency in our manufacturing establishments, whether they are private establishments or Government establishments, the provision would be stricken from the bill.

Mr. President, we are constantly hearing the word "efficiency." We are hearing tributes paid to Germany because of her efficiency, and the fact is recorded that the great progress she has made in the unfortunate war in which we are engaged, and which she has forced upon the world, is largely due to efficiency in her manufactures and in all things connected with the war. Yet in the midst of this great war, when we are appropriating a billion and three-quarters of money for our Navy to strengthen and fortify it, and make it more formidable, a provision is deliberately inserted in the bill that efficiency shall be thrown to the winds, and that the standard of work shall not be based upon the most efficient man but upon the least efficient man, because that is exactly what this means.

I hope, Mr. President, that Senators will give pause to the necessities of the hour, and whatever their predilections may have been or their previous views on this subject may have been that in this hour of our peril, in this hour of our dire necessity, we will not appropriate such an enormous sum of money to be used in our navy yards and our arsenals and in the construction of our ships and then deliberately put in the bill a provision that efficiency shall be discarded and that the laboring men will be permitted to work pretty much as they please, as it has been asserted they have been doing in some of the Government establishments during the past few months.

Mr. President, a much more eloquent speech than I could make on this subject is found in the last issue of the Scientific American of date May 18, 1918, and I am going to request that it be read from the desk. I hope every Senator who feels the least interest in this matter will listen attentively to what this great newspaper has to say on this subject and will give it the consideration that its importance demands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). The Secretary will read the communication.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Scientific American.]

RESTRICTION OF EFFICIENCY BY ORDER OF CONGRESS.

With characteristic inconsistency, our Congress, having recently instituted a search for inefficiency in the construction of the emergency fleet, and about to search for inefficiency in the manufacture of airplanes and Browning guns, is at the same time considering a proviso of the naval appropriation bill which will prohibit the use of efficiency methods in work for the Navy and will prevent the payment of bonuses to workers in Government factories. The situation would be amusing were it not so serious. That such a proviso should be considered for a moment is inconceivable; that it should actually have been adopted by the House passes understanding.

Who had the temerity to introduce this proviso into the naval appropriation bill? How was it that Representatives from all parts of this land could have agreed to such a measure? Was it fear of the I. W. W.? Did they really fail to recognize the fine hand of the Hun in inserting this subtle clause which would hamper the work in our construction yards?

The only possible excuse for such a stupid bit of legislation is that of ignorance. Apparently Congressmen are not up to date. They are still imbued with the idea that efficiency is a scheme for robbing the American laborer of his liberty. They do not realize that the industrial engineer of to-day is a very different man from the blundering pioneers of yesterday. It is now well recognized that efficiency which does not concern itself with the welfare and interests of the workman is not efficiency. The industrial engineer of to-day is a coach, much like the coach of our athletic teams, whose duty it is to show men how to improve their work, with the result that the output is of superior quality and quantity; and in this superiority the workman himself shares.

We hear much these days of German efficiency without realizing that it was introduced into Germany from America, and there is found a fertile field. England, where opposition to efficiency was strenuous before the war, now recognizes that the study of improvement in manufacturing methods is absolutely essential to the winning of the war. We are engaged in a death struggle. We can not for a moment countenance any measure which will hamper our output at this critical period. American laborers are beginning to understand the benefits of efficiency methods and the purpose behind them. A campaign of education is being conducted among the workers in our shipyards, and they are coming to realize that their work is just as much a part of this war as that of their sons fighting in the trenches. It is high time that a similar campaign of education was instituted among Congressmen.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I might ask to have inserted in the RECORD similar declarations from some of the great newspapers of the country; but I will not do so. I will content myself by saying that I sincerely hope the motion I have made will be agreed to, and that we will not do anything to hinder the most efficient methods that can be properly employed to facilitate the work in the navy yards of the country at this critical period when the winning of the war is paramount in the minds of all true Americans.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it is very seldom that I am in accord with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and therefore I am glad to say a word in support of his motion at this time, the substance of which I have invariably supported during the short period of my service in this body.

Mr. President, there is nothing which, in my judgment, has been essential to the welfare of labor that I have not advocated sincerely since the labor question became an acute one in our industrial and social life. That it has needed much in the way of legislation and protection no man will deny. That, however, is more true in times past than it has been in more recent years when labor has become strong enough and public opinion educated far enough to enable these ends to be achieved by the progress of events.

I have, on the other hand, steadfastly opposed those demands of labor which, in my judgment, were unjust and unfair and which would ultimately react upon instead of promoting the cause it was designed to assist.

I think it was in 1913 that this provision first appeared in the Army bill of that year. Since that time it seems to have been accepted as a matter of course in both these great measures whenever they have come before the Congress for consideration. Some one then ventured the prediction that once this method of legislation received the approval of Congress it would be cited and invoked as a precedent for its repetition for all time to come, and that seems to have been one of the few predictions made here which has thus far been verified by succeeding events.

At the time this matter was first discussed upon the floor I was in receipt of many letters and one or two petitions from men working in the Government establishments protesting against the insertion of the provision, and giving as their reasons that they were not only satisfied with the policies which controlled and operated these institutions, but that they were enabled to earn added money, additional compensation, largely through piecework, and upon the assumption that their right to continue that class of work would not be interfered with many of them had purchased little homes upon the installment plan and were dependent upon their extra earnings to meet the installments as they should fall due, and that if they were interfered with by such legislation it would be extremely difficult for them to comply with the requirements of their contracts, and many of them would probably lose their homes because of the consequent default. That appealed to me.

I then felt, and I now believe, Mr. President, that this legislation is not desired by the large body of the men whom it will affect. It may be that at present it will be not so onerous as heretofore because of the widespread demand for labor and because also of the wages which labor commands, but independently of that no man can successfully assail the proposition that this is class legislation. It is class legislation of the most obnoxious character at this particular time. Those of us who profess allegiance to democratic principles and who therefore are or should be opposed to class legislation are, however, quite as responsible as those who do not so believe for crystallizing it into the legislation of the country, not because the principle is not obvious, but largely because of the pressure brought to bear upon them as representatives of the American people.

The article read from the Scientific American assigns our action in this regard to ignorance. That, Mr. President, is wrong. Every man who has voted for and who will continue to vote for this provision can not seek the shelter of ignorance, because if that were so I do not think he would be qualified to represent a constituency in this body or in the one at the other end of the Capitol.

Let us be perfectly frank with regard to the causes of legislation of this character. We all know the reason for class legislation, whether for labor or capital, and this is only one illustration. We do it largely because we are afraid of the political power which stands behind it, and which directly or indirectly threatens the political future of the men who oppose it. We do it as Democrats because we want the labor vote or some other body of votes, and you do it as Republicans because you want the labor vote or some other collective vote. That is the fact about it. It is not ignorance, but politics. Of course this is not a universal condition, there are exceptions.

Mr. President, this is not the only legislation, nor the only sort of class legislation, which is controlled and determined by political reasons. The custom is nowadays honored far more in the breach than in the observance; but that is the fundamental basis of this legislation and of class legislation whatever its character. My experience is, Mr. President, that if a public man will support what he believes in and oppose what he does not believe in——

Mr. TILLMAN. The people will stand by him.

Mr. THOMAS. I was going to say that the first to recognize his independence and appreciate it will be the great body of laboring men in the country. So, Mr. President, we are gaining nothing by this sort of legislation. I am speaking now purely upon the question of expediency, because in my judgment if a measure be fundamentally wrong then the man so believing should vote against it regardless of ultimate consequence. That is what he is sent here for, if I properly understand the attitude and the obligations of a Senator of the United States.

Mr. President, this legislation is bad enough in times of peace. In times like these it is criminal. It smacks of legislation in aid of the enemy, although those who support it do not so believe and do not so intend. We are said to have half a million men on the French front holding at present 35 miles of the line. Every man upon that front must receive, if we are to stand behind him as we must, 50 pounds of food, clothing, ammunition, and equipment per day, or 9 tons per year. If we are to have there an Army of a million men before the snow flies next November, as we have promised, that means that we must have 9,000,000 tons of shipping to be devoted to the sole purpose of supplying them with those things which are essential to their preservation. We are short on tonnage and the Government is building a great many ships. The program needs the time and the energies of every man in the shipyards. In addition, Mr. President, we must have artillery. We are producing it in distressingly small quantities. We must have airships, and a great many of them, of which so far our production is negligible. We must produce wheat and corn and oats and rye, and all the other necessities of life, not only for that Army and for our people but for the noncombatant population of our allies.

I undertake to say that we are confronted with the mightiest task that ever confronted any nation since the dawn of civilization, and we must therefore mobilize to the utmost extent every resource which this country may yield. We are fully capable of performing that task, Mr. President, if we go at it right, and then keep at it. We must increase our Navy, and the Naval Committee in its wisdom has reported a bill here carrying for that purpose one and three-quarter billion dollars, a most stupendous sum, but essential for the crisis which confronts us to maintain our dignity and preserve our independence as one of the free nations of the earth.

Yet that identical bill carries a provision which penalizes the representatives of the Government if they take steps which are designed to secure efficiency in production. Not only so, but the Government is forbidden to pay "premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee, in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant." We have established an eight-hour day; we have provided for extra pay for overtime and double pay for work upon Sunday for the purpose of encouraging production. Yet the Government can not under this provision pay one of its employees a dollar in excess of his actual pay for an eight-hour day of labor except for suggestions regarding improvements in the operation of the plant.

In other words, this bill goes further than to prohibit the adoption of any rule which may make for efficiency on the part of the representatives of the Government. It penalizes the workman himself if he dares aspire to the earning of more money by the doing of extra work in this crisis except for suggestions regarding improvements in operation.

Mr. President, it is inconceivable to me how a provision of this kind can at this time receive the support of any citizen of the United States in or out of Congress who will give the subject one moment's serious reflection. This is the time when every energy should be mobilized for the benefit of the Republic. This is the time when the white man and the black man, the Jew and the gentile, the native-born citizen and the naturalized citizen should, forgetting everything else, bend his energies, and all of them, to the winning of this war.

Let me say, Mr. President, the combined and collective forces of the Republic may all be required before we can see victory in sight and feel that the world is saved and made secure for modern civilization.

Therefore, Mr. President, without taking the time of the Senate any longer, I join in the protest against the appearance of this clause, and earnestly join the hope expressed by the venerable Senator from New Hampshire that his motion may be sustained.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I want to add my voice to what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has said.

There may be some excuse, although I could never see any, for legislation of this character when our country is at peace with all the world; but when we are asking so many of our young men to leave our shores to fight for our country overseas, and asking them to devote to its service not 8 hours but 24 hours a day, for a compensation of $30 a month, it seems to me that no one should do the slightest thing to retard the greatest possible efficiency in the Government plants here on this side of the ocean.

It was my privilege, Mr. President, last Saturday to be present at Shooters Island, N. Y., and to see two Government vessels launched—one for the Fleet Corporation and one for the Navy. The opportunity was afforded me of saying a few words to the 6,000 workingmen gathered there. I presented to them the thought that they were supplying ships to carry the materials necessary to their brothers across the sea to win this war. I told them that I was in favor of giving every man engaged in Government work the highest wage to which he was entitled, and asked those assembled if they did not believe it was their duty in these days to give the best that they had to the Government. When I requested those who agreed with me to raise their hands every man responded and a cheer went forth that could be heard a mile away. Mr. President, I doubt very much if the workingmen in this country engaged in Government work in these days desire any such provision as that proposed in the pending bill.

I am in receipt of hundreds of communications opposing this provision, and have resolutions adopted by nearly every chamber of commerce and board of trade in the State of New York, urging its defeat. In my opinion the adoption of this provision will do much to discourage the country's workmen from doing their best in these war times. When the patriotic people of the country are being asked to buy liberty bonds, when our men and women are this week raising $100,000,000 for the Red Cross fund, it is indeed a very serious question for this Nation when Congress will enact legislation forbidding efficient management of the country's workshops.

I am sure that in these war days the vast majority of the men employed in our navy yards and arsenals have no desire for legislation of this character.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I reported this bill and was supposed to indorse everything in it. I do not, however, indorse the whole of this item. If some Senator will propose to separate it, I shall be glad to vote to retain the prohibition against the use of the stop watch and against the prohibition of the bonus system. No free man ought to be subjected to such an indignity as is involved in the use of the stop watch. It is for slaves; it is not for free white men.

I am, however, heartily in favor of paying a bonus or a cash reward for good work. Why shall we not do that? The Navy needs the ships, and we can get more ships by encouraging our workmen than we are getting by the stop-watch device. If the Senator from New Hampshire will divide his motion to strike out the whole provision and move to strike out the stop-watch provision, I shall vote for doing so with a great deal of pleasure; but I can not vote for striking out the provision for the bonuses.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from South Carolina if he knows of an industrial establishment where they actually use the stop watch?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not. I do not think any of those things are used in the South.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a very convenient thing——

Mr. TILLMAN. It was nothing but pure cowardice that put it in the bill. It has been in three or four laws for three or four years. I may have voted for it at some time in the past, but then I have not been myself.

Mr. GALLINGER. It really prejudices the case against the provision by putting the words "stop watch" in it. I am not responsible for that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the amendment which has been offered by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] striking from the bill the antiefficiency provision. I have opposed this sort of provision in times past. I was strongly in opposition to it after I had heard much testimony and listened to arguments on both sides of the question. The term "stop watch," which has been mentioned by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], however, as used in the pending bill is not a relic of barbarism nor is it employed to take from any workman any proper right which belongs to him. That word is used by the enemies of efficiency legislation to make the provision obnoxious. It has got into the legislation for this reason and in this way: For a great many years there has been an honest, intelligent effort made to conserve labor and to make it efficient by preventing unnecessary effort and making necessary effort greatly effective. Efficiency is an essential to the proper education of every boy and girl. It was thought that if a fair day's work for the average man could be determined—not for the most expert and the most efficient, but for the average man—that that day's work could be used as the basis of pay for other men of all classes who wished to strive for it. According to the testimony that was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations some three or four years ago this method was adopted in the Watertown Arsenal. The way the stop watch was used was this: An ordinary man, an average man, was selected from among the employees, one who was fairly familiar, as familiar, perhaps, as anyone with the work that was to be asked of him, and was set at a particular task, and while he was at work he was timed by the watch. Every display of energy, every minute of time was observed and registered. It was not compulsory work, but the watch was held on him for the purpose of determining how long it took him to perform a certain task and every stage of it. After he had performed that task and it had been repeated by two or three other average men, so that it was determined about how much time it took to perform it, then that amount of time was enlarged 75 per cent; that is, if it took him an hour, they gave any other man an hour and three-quarters. They even enlarged that to some extent, and then said to their men, "If you can perform this task in one and three-quarter hours"—or whatever time was fixed—"you shall receive a bonus in addition to what you received before." It was an encouragement to men to help themselves and their employer, the Government.

The only argument that I have ever heard that was worth considering in opposition to this plan is that it might possibly induce men to work harder than they ought to work; that men, anxious to obtain the additional compensation offered, might imperil their health or injure themselves by putting forth this extra effort; but there is no argument that can stand the light of logic against paying a man who does extra work extra compensation. In this stressful time of emergency I am not so much disturbed over the possibility that men may work too hard as I am that they will work too little. More evil comes from idleness and slacking than from overwork.

It was discovered in the Watertown Arsenal that through this efficiency system production was increased more than 25 per cent, and the men were happy and prosperous. Outside influences sought to disturb it. Leaders of organized labor in some parts of the country tried to create dissatisfaction among the men in that arsenal with what was being done there. The men themselves were called before their overseers and asked if they were dissatisfied, if they were being injured, if anything occurred under this method that was unsatisfactory to them, and there were only two men out of the whole lot who made any complaint. It is doubtful if any proposition of management could have been presented to these men that would have had as few protestants as this one had. Every man who was interviewed privately said, "I am satisfied." But after the matter had been sufficiently agitated outside, a sort of round robin was circulated among the men and, as I believe, coercively presented, protesting against this efficiency service. That is the way the matter finally reached the department.

Mr. President, I am satisfied, as stated by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], that the men themselves want this provision. It gives them an opportunity to earn more money. It presents an opportunity at this time to demonstrate their patriotism.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator refer to the bonuses?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I refer to the bonuses. The men want them; they want efficient methods established whereby they can obtain them. That is the only way they can obtain them. You have got to first fix the day's work; you have got to establish the standard, and for that purpose alone the watch is used; and so long as it is not lengthened beyond reason or beyond the possible legitimate objection of anyone who finds fault with it, it is certainly a proper method for the Government to employ. If evils develop, Congress will hasten to correct them.

In this time of emergency, when every patriot is called upon to sacrifice and to do for his country, it ill becomes Congress even to offer the suggestion to labor that it is not to put forth its best efforts. It is no argument to say that there are a lot of rich slackers in the country, and there are plenty of the capitalistic order. I am not excusing them. Every man ought to put forth his best efforts in this struggle. The fact is that one or two or three million of our boys have been and will be called into the Army to work, not 8 hours a day, but 24 hours, it may be, in the service of their country. Out here at Camp Washington—I think it is called Camp Washington—out at the American University, I saw some 1,200 or 1,300 young men in the drill an evening or so ago. I was told by the major in command that two-thirds of those boys were college graduates, and that about one-half of them had given up positions paying $5,000 a year or more to accept the job of a common soldier at $30 a month. I saw those men building roads—they are engineers—shoveling road material, digging road trenches, working not eight hours a day, but working whatever time it is necessary to complete the task. It is a crime against the soldier, whose very existence is at stake in Europe at this time, to lessen the preparation in the United States. The extra cost of everything, the profits which are unduly reaped, lessen the amount of our preparation and increase the danger to our boys abroad.

Mr. President, Senators may consult the emergencies of politics and think that possibly it will be a mistaken political policy to allow the Government to get what is only its right and what the men themselves want in this matter or preparation; but as for myself, sir, I oppose this, as I did other similar provisions in times of peace, as un-American, unpatriotic, and unwise. The old arguments now come to me with greatly increased force against any antiefficiency measure in this or any other bill connected with our war preparations. Let us forget our personal political fortunes and try to keep constantly in mind the welfare of our country. I sincerely trust that the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will prevail.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the policy of the United States and of the United States Government has become well settled in regard to what we now have under consideration. It was voted several years ago to prohibit the stop-watch system in our arsenals and in the Navy. That was done, not as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] charges, in order to get votes; I have not so poor an opinion of the Members of either House as to believe that; and it does not strengthen the argument at all when my distinguished friend turns around and tells you that you will get more votes if you vote the other way, because that is a bid for exactly the same sort of advantage to you. I might say parenthetically, as I have said once before and as I shall demonstrate before this session is over, that there is no one in this Chamber or out of it who cares less for labor votes than I do.

Now, the burden is on the other side to show that an exception is needed at this particular time. This is not an amendment put into the bill by the Committee on Naval Affairs; it is a part of the bill as it comes to us from the other House, following the precedents of the last few years.

Mr. TILLMAN. It has been in every naval appropriation bill for the last three or four years.

Mr. HOLLIS. So I understand.

Mr. THOMAS. It has been in bills of one kind or another since 1913.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes, Mr. President, and our late friend from New Jersey, Senator Hughes, used to have the laboring oar when it was before the Senate.

I think we are all for efficiency, and if I believed it would make us more efficient for winning the war to strike this provision from the bill I would vote to do so, because I am as anxious to bring the war to a successful and speedy conclusion as anyone. I think my colleagues will concede that; but the worst way to attempt to bring efficiency is to disrupt the channels that have already been plowed out in which labor may move as a mass. It is true that we might be able to get more work for a few days or for a few weeks or even for a few months out of a certain man or out of a certain body of men if we should hold stop watches over them or induce them to superhuman effort by bonuses; that might be so; but the same argument might be brought forth in advocating the repeal of the eight-hour law. There is no doubt that if you should get men to work 10 hours a day next week they would turn out more work at the end of the week than they will by working 8 hours a day.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator think that we now offer a bonus for work in excess of eight hours by offering time and a half for that overtime work?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; that is not a bonus; that is part of the regular wage scale which goes to a man, not because he increases his hours of labor but because he is required to work more than we have decided is a fair day's work.

When a man is stimulated for any reason to work harder than he ought to work, as I believe the men in this Chamber have worked harder than they ought to during most of their lives, they begin to show it by breaking down and having their efficiency decreased instead of increased. If that were not so we would repeal the eight-hour law; we would repeal the child-labor law; we would repeal the workmen's compensation law; we would repeal all the great humane measures that have been built up after years of struggle and with so much difficulty.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from New Hampshire yield to his colleague?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am somewhat surprised to have my colleague say that if we compelled a man to work 10 hours a day instead of 8 hours, the result would be more satisfactory to the employer. It has been constantly argued here and elsewhere by laboring men as well as by legislators that during a day of 8 hours actually more work was performed than in a day of 10-hours; that has been the stock argument always. Does the Senator really take the opposite view? Has he thought it out and does he believe we would get more work by requiring 10 hours labor instead of 8?

Mr. HOLLIS. My distinguished colleague evidently misunderstood what I said, or, rather, I was not permitted to finish what I was trying to say. I say we would get more work out of a man to-morrow if he works 10 hours a day than if he works 8 hours; we would get more work out of him next week if he works 10 hours a day than if he works 8 hours a day; but there will come a time when we would get actually less work out of a man by working him 10 hours a day than by working him 8 hours, because he will be a tired man and will be unable to give his best qualities to his task.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARDING. I should like to ask if the Senator from New Hampshire would favor putting an amendment in this bill or any other bill prohibiting any man from working more than eight hours a day under the excess-time pay provision?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; I should not, because that is what we have worked out as the result of experience as the settled policy of this Government.

England became a little hysterical on this question at the outset of the war and undertook to do away with the limitation of the hours of labor and the other conditions that had been imposed upon labor, not, however, because labor asked it, but which had been imposed upon labor to give in the long run greater efficiency. England, however, very soon had to reverse that policy, because when men are put at top speed they do not run a long race. The mile runner who undertakes to run the first hundred yards of his mile in 11 or 12 or even 15 seconds will not get to the milepost as quickly as the man who starts out at a 1:10 per quarter gait and keeps it up until the very finish.

If we had an unlimited supply of labor and could put in fresh men, as is done in battle, to fill up the gaps, as fast as one man falls at his machine put in another, we would get more work, we would get more efficiency, but we would come to the end of our man power; we would stop before the race is half run; and sit down with throbbing hearts and with no air to carry us through. That has been tried.

The distinguished Senator from Colorado says that there are men who want to work under a stop watch; that there are men who want to work for bonuses; that there are men who want to work a little more than the average man in order to pay for their little homes. That is perfectly true; and the people who opposed the eight-hour law most vigorously, the people who opposed the child-labor law most vigorously, were the people who wanted to work their children long hours, so that they could take their pitiful little wages to secure homes or other comforts. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

It is not an easy question. Here is a widow left with four or five children, and she has hard work to sustain them, but the law steps in and says that none of those children shall work in a mill until he is 12 or 14 years old. That is a hard case; it is hard on that widow; but we as legislators of the United States say that those little children shall not be worked until they are 12 or 14 years old. Why do we do it? We do not do it for the widow; we do not do it primarily for the children; we do it for the good of our country as a whole, for the good of the race; and that is the reason why we provide public schools and other benefits for people in general, so that the race will be uplifted.

I do not consider this a hard-and-fast proposition. There are arguments that can be made on both sides of it; but when it is charged in a magazine like the Scientific American, devoted to the interests of the capitalistic class, owned by capitalists who are always watching for the chance to instill a little poison and a little fear in some man's mind—when it is charged by them that this is a device of pro-Germans to make the war less efficient, it is a ridiculous proposition, because this is not injected into legislation this year as a war measure. This is part of our well-settled policy that we adopted before the war; and the pro-German effort is the one that would inject something into this bill that will make labor dissatisfied and destroy the efficiency for which we have long struggled.

I have received a few letters and a few telegrams from a few manufacturers and a few chambers of commerce in my State asking me to vote to strike out this provision. I have also received a great number of telegrams and letters from labor unions and labor organizations asking me to vote the other way.

I do not know a workingman or a labor-union man who wants this provision stricken from the bill. There may be some; there may be a very strong, capable man, without a family, who is willing to work night and day at top speed for a while to get more money; but the great mass of the laboring people, the great mass of the laboring union people, the great mass of humanitarians generally, know that to undertake to work a man under a stop watch, to work him with the hope of getting a bonus, is going to be detrimental to the cause of labor and in the long run to the cause of this country.

It is because I believe that, and not because I care to get labor votes, that I express the hope that the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague, in perfect good faith, I have no doubt, may be defeated.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will not prevail. The universal consensus of opinion is that the Navy has done splendidly in every direction; every department of the Navy has made a magnificent record; and in its professional zeal, its war energy, and in its construction work it has received universal commendation. Everyone feels that the Navy has been efficient and has performed its work successfully and well.

The request to eliminate this provision comes from no one in the Navy; it comes from no one I know of who has a contract with the Navy; it has been in the law ever since the 3d of March, 1915. This matter has been fought out in Congress every time the naval bill and other bills carrying this provision have come before the Senate and the House. The question was fought out in the House on this bill, and, I understand, by an overwhelming majority the House considered it wise to include this provision in the naval appropriation bill, as it has been included in that bill for the last three continuous years.

I am not going to enter into any discussion as to the relative merits or demerits of the Taylor system. Congress, after hearing all sides of the question, reached the conclusion that the Government ought to be a generous employer of labor, that the Government ought to set a model for other employers to follow in the treatment of their employees, and that the Government ought not to be a hard taskmaster. The time has come when the Government can not ask others to treat their employees, laboring people, generously, kindly, and to give them an opportunity to better their condition if the Government establishes a record as a hard taskmaster.

There has been no trouble with labor in the Navy. The Navy has had no strikes. Its work has been progressing satisfactorily to everyone and at a high rate of speed. This effort to demoralize the labor conditions that have prevailed in the Navy does not come from anybody, as I understand, connected with the Navy; and I ask the Senate not to experiment with the Navy at this time. If you want to make such experiments, do not do it at this time, with the prospect of making labor dissatisfied and of leading them to believe that the Government is a hard taskmaster. Do not try to produce dissatisfaction; do not try to disarrange what the Navy has been doing for the last two or three years most successfully.

I have a letter here from the Secretary of the Navy, addressed to Hon. N. J. GOULD, a Member of the House of Representatives, on this question, which I will read. It is dated April 24, 1918, and is as follows:

> MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Upon my return to the department from a speaking tour of the liberty loan I find your letter of April 15, 1918, in re the provision in the pending naval appropriation bill prohibiting time studies in manufacture.
>
> This provision is a continuation of one incorporated in the naval appropriation act approved March 3, 1915, and carried in all subsequent naval acts, and while its inclusion in the bill now pending was made without the recommendation of the department the department is not opposed to it, and, in fact, advocated it at the time the naval act of March 3, 1915, was under consideration.
>
> Its continuation from year to year has not operated to prevent satisfactory ascertainments by other means of the comparative efficiency of employees.
> Very sincerely, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Mr. President, the salaries of the employees of the Navy Department are fixed by law. Under the law they must pay the wages that are current in the community where they work. They have classifications that give efficiency. Those classifications and grades apply to metal workers, carpenters, ship riveters, and so on; and in this way they have enough grades to ascertain the efficiency, the relative merit or demerit of employees. Under these conditions, with everything working satisfactorily in the Navy Department, with this great construction program, with no labor troubles that have come to the Navy Department during the pendency of this war, it seems to me whatever other gentlemen's conclusions and theories may be at other times, it is not wise at this time to endeavor to disarrange this matter, knowing nothing about how the experiment will result; and I hope the provision will be retained in the bill.

Now, I should like to say something else.

I have information—I can not speak accurately about it, but I have been informed—that when the adjustment board for the Emergency Fleet Corporation rendered their decision in the labor controversies with regard to the Delaware River and the Baltimore shipyards on February 14, 1918, they incorporated in the subsequent contracts they made practically the provisions contained in this bill as it came from the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, how is that? That adjustment board could not legislate.

Mr. SWANSON. They could not legislate, but the contracts that were made, as I understood, included practically this provision. They thought it was the best way to get results, the best way to have peace and harmony, the best way to get ships. Now, I see no occasion of experimenting with the Navy; and whatever theories gentlemen may have, whatever may be their ideas, the Navy has been so efficient that I hope that any experiments they want to make in the future will be made at other times and not now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Outside of the Navy, has the Senator observed what Mr. Schwab is doing in facilitating the building of ships?

Mr. SWANSON. I understand that in the contracts he made with the employees under the decision of the board which adjusted the differences there they are to operate with a prohibition that is practically the same as that contained in this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SWANSON. I can not speak accurately, but I have been informed that the adjustment board included that as section 3 in their contracts. I may be misinformed; I can not speak accurately; but we do know that the Navy has been constructing its work well, and that it has had no labor differences and troubles except of a slight character. Feeling as I do that the Navy may be our first and last line of defense in the great crisis of the present, I say it is no time to have theoretical experiments carried on with work which is being done well and being done satisfactorily.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia is not absolutely correct in his statement of the arrangements made between the adjustment board and the shipbuilders. The policy of piecework production was assented to with assurances on the part of the Government adjusters that the records established by rapid workers would not be the standard of work, nor would wages be adjusted to individual records in the driving of rivets. The observation I wanted to make in that connection was that the argument of the Senator from Virginia does not hold, because the Government has demonstrated very clearly that it can adjust its differences with labor organizations and labor forces without any difficulty and without the necessity of Congress stepping in and making improvements in efficiency methods by the processes of legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words on the motion made by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] has said that this has become a policy of the Government. It may be that provisions of this sort have been included in the naval appropriation bills, and perhaps in some others, although my recollection is not accurate upon that point. Perhaps they have been in the Army appropriation bills. But if this is to be the policy of the Government I think the junior Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Virginia will confess that it should extend and apply to all plants doing work for the Government; and I doubt if the Senator from Virginia or the junior Senator from New Hampshire would seriously propose that every manufacturer in the United States now building guns for the United States Army, or guns for the United States Navy, or any of the vast quantity of supplies that those two branches of the service now require, should be placed upon any such basis as this. Were that to be done, the situation which prevails to-day and has prevailed for some years in the past would no longer exist; and I mean by that the recognized efficiency of private plants as compared to Government plants.

I shall not attempt to single out any particular Government plant and state that it is less efficient than a particular private plant; but it is a fact, Senators, recognized by every manufacturer in the United States who has any knowledge of the situation, recognized by foremen and superintendents and by laboring men themselves, that, on the average, privately operated plants are more efficiently operated and produce more goods within a given time, with no more hardship upon the workmen, than are produced within a given time by a Government plant; and it is largely because the spirit of initiative and of experiment is smothered out in Government plants, as a rule, and there is no incentive, either on the part of the workingmen or of the foremen, or even of the officers in command, to develop time-saving devices in the way of mechanical operation.

It so happens that I have visited some of the private plants that are now making munitions for the Government, and have had an opportunity to see some of the things that a private manufacturer, with the help and cooperation of his own workmen, has been able to put into operation; and when I have been told about those things and have seen them, as I have, all this talk about hard taskmasters and slavery and driving to exhaustion does not appeal to me at all, because in practically every instance those improvements in operation are labor-saving in their character and are of benefit to the workingmen, and are so conceded by them.

For instance, we talk about "the stop watch or any time-measuring device." The term "stop watch" seems to be a bogey which is used here in discussions in the Senate, and seems to be placed in the same category as some medieval torturing machine. Now, what is the fact? I think I can give an illustration of it.

About a month ago I visited a plant doing work for the Government. Practically all the work is machine work, but in one process of the manufacture of a certain part of a machine gun some handwork has to be done upon that part; and a long bench was erected, and this particular part of the gun was coming from a machine, and carried to that table, and there some operatives performed some handwork on it. It is a very light and brief operation; but the piece of metal weighs quite a few pounds, and the superintendent of the factory and the foreman of that particular shop, with the hearty cooperation of the employees working at that bench, were contriving ways and means, by the building of grooves and little wooden tracks upon that working bench, to enable the operatives to slide that piece of metal along those grooves from one to another and back and forth across the table, and time was kept upon the operation. It had a double purpose, one of which was to save muscular effort; and the people employed were women, not men. The effort was to relieve the women from the necessity of lifting that piece of metal; and to accelerate the operation, of course, time must be kept upon the operation. Under this provision such a thing could not be done; it could not even be attempted. The foreman of the shop, the superintendent of the factory, were they working in a Government plant, could not draw any salary.

The proposal seems to me to be absurd. There is no hardship connected with it. It has nothing to do with child labor. It has nothing to do with the restriction of the hours of labor. It has no connection whatsoever with an eight-hour law or time and a half for overtime. The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] endeavors to draw parallels and fit them to this particular provision of the bill, which do not exist at all, in my humble judgment. He states that it should not be the policy of the Government to offer any bonus for any man to do a little more or a little better work; and yet he knows just as well as I do that the Government does authorize the offering of a bonus for overtime work—time and a half for overtime—and double pay for work on Sundays. It is authorized in the statutes of the United States; and what is that but a bonus?

The men do not have to do it. The men do not have to work on Sunday, but the Government authorizes Government contractors to offer that bonus. And has there been any great hardship as the result of the offering of that bonus? Do you find men in great numbers refusing to work more than eight hours? My observations have been, in a good many plants that are doing work for the Government, that the men want to work overtime and earn the bonus; and they have been doing it, not for a day only, not for a week only, as the Senator from New Hampshire suggests, but for a year, and there is no sign of fatigue or exhaustion. At the biggest munition plant in the United States one shift—and they work two shifts a day—works more than 11 hours a day five days a week. The men want to do it, and they earn a great, big bonus by it; and there is no suggestion from the Army inspectors—who inspect everything that comes out of that plant, who are familiar with the labor conditions existing in it, whose principal concern is to see that labor is contented—that there is exhaustion existing among those men. There is no contention that there is discontent among those men.

The Government authorizes this practice in its statutes; but this provision would prevent a naval officer or the superintendent of a naval arsenal from employing any time-measuring device in making a study of the job that a workman performs, a suggestion that would not be tolerated for a moment in private manufacture. I venture to say it is the existence of this kind of legislation upon the statute books that makes it possible for private plants to employ greater efficiency, not only among the workingmen, but by time-saving machinery, which is installed in private plants, on an average, six or eight years before it is ever heard of in the arsenal at Springfield, Mass.

I myself have seen machines operating in private munition plants, employing the efforts of only one man, that do six times the amount of work that is done by a similar machine in a Government arsenal employing the efforts of one man. It is because the private munition plant has been able from time to time to make experiments, and in making those experiments to use time-measuring devices in measuring the efforts that are necessary to be put forth by the workman and in measuring what can be saved in the way of effort by that same workman—it is by reason of that privilege, which private plants have, that they vastly excel, in many instances, in their efficiency anything that any Government machine shop has ever achieved.

It has been truly said that a provision of this sort should not be placed in a statute of this kind during the war. I myself do not think it should be placed upon the statute books in time of peace or war. It is a curious thing to hear some Senators say that they would not mind a provision of this kind in time of peace, but they do not want it in time of war, and to hear another Senator say that he would not mind cutting this out in time of peace, but he insists that it shall stay in in time of war. One argument destroys the other, and both are destroyed by any such course of reasoning.

I say the truth is, Senators, that this proposal was originally introduced in the Congress as part of a settled policy to limit production in industrial plants, with the hope that if the Government once established it as its policy it would eventually spread to private industries. In my humble judgment, it will never spread to private industries, because the workingmen in private industries do not want it. There is no question but that this thing will act as a brake upon any increase of the present-day efficiency of the Navy machine shops. It can have no other result.

It may be, as the Senator from Virginia has said, that the Navy has done exceedingly well. I grant him that. I am just as proud of it as he is; but I do not want to see anything placed upon the statute books which will even tend to prevent their growing more efficient.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator gave an illustration a few moments ago of an attempt to secure a more efficient method of performing a certain piece of work in a shop which he visited some time ago, and he was of the opinion that if this provision went into the bill it would preclude such things as that being done. If I understood the Senator's description of the work which was being done, and the object and purpose of its being done, I do not think this would prohibit it. This provision says:

> That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work.

Now, the original evil, if we may call it an evil—and I think it was an evil—which this was intended to inhibit was where the parties secured a man of more than ordinary efficiency and capacity, and undertook to gauge the amount of work which he could do, and then to require everybody else in the shop to come up to that measurement; but it was never intended in its original purpose, in its introduction into the legislation of this country, to prevent such things as the Senator has been speaking of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It may not have been the intention, but it most distinctly does it.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator said that the matter was originally introduced into legislation with a view of preventing an increase of output, greater production, and so forth.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is my view of it.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think so, Mr. President. Several years ago, when I was chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, I had occasion to go into the history of this legislation and the reason of it.

Now, whatever its virtues or its vices may be at this time, and whatever the necessities may be for ameliorating the situation or changing the situation because of the war conditions which prevail, that is one thing; but the original proposition was brought into legislation by reason of the doing of precisely what I say. They would take a man of extraordinary efficiency and capacity and they would measure his ability to perform a piece of work within a specified time, and they would require all other men to come up to that standard in order to get the same pay.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Idaho say in what shop or in what naval shop that was ever attempted?

Mr. BORAH. I can not say offhand now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that question because it seems to me that any shop superintendent or any head of a naval industrial plant who would attempt such a thing is a fit candidate for a lunacy asylum.

Mr. BORAH. I thought so, too, and that is the reason why I was in favor of the legislation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am wondering, therefore, if it really occurred. I never have had it identified.

Mr. BORAH. There is a report upon file, if I can get it—and I think I can—which will throw some light upon this matter. The entire history of the matter is revealed in that report, and I know that that is the presentation of it which was made in its inception as a basis for this legislation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have never yet, Mr. President, found the basis for that presentation. I venture to say that no such thing was ever done in a naval plant.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course the Senator says that he has no personal knowledge of the doing of such things. In that respect I am on an equal basis with the Senator. I have no personal knowledge of it. The only knowledge which I have was that which was brought to the attention of a committee which was investigating the matter, and such information as I have reason to believe was correct information; and I still believe that that was the origin of the trouble.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume that the Senator did not hear the statement made by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. The junior Senator from Michigan called the attention of the Senate to the fact that this device was first used in the Watertown Arsenal, and that when the greatest efficiency had been developed so far as one workman was concerned, then the other workmen were allowed three-fourths longer time than the very efficient man used to secure a given result. That is, if he did it in an hour, if another man did it in an hour and three-quarters he was considered efficient. That was the statement of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have just been discussing that matter with the Senator from Michigan in private conversation. Permit me to say that that was one of the ameliorations of this rule which came about by reason of discussion and agitation. The original proposition, in my judgment, was just as I have stated it. When it came to be more thoroughly discussed, and when the matter came more thoroughly to public knowledge, certain modifications of the original rule in its most drastic form were adopted.

For instance, they say now that they take an average man. Well, who knows anything about an average man until you have a measurement somewhere of the highest and the lowest man? That is an amelioration which came into it by reason of having first secured the amount of work that the best man could do, and then they undertook to average between that and their lowest man. I have no doubt but that some of those modifications have been made; but I do not believe that the history of this legislation will show that that was the origin of the legislation. I think it was by reason of a real evil which needed correction. Now, I do not in these times want to stand in the way of efficiency—indeed, at no time—but the principle of the stop-watch system as it was originally and as it will come to be if not modified by legislation is that kind of brutal efficiency which smacks of a leaf from "Kultur."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, this question has been with us for a good many years. For a long time I voted against the proposition. Then it seemed to be the fixed determination of Congress to put it in the bills, and I accepted it as a part of the legislative system. I would not say anything at this time; I would go along and accept the conclusion that has been reached heretofore, and that probably will be reached to-day, in reference to that matter, if we were not involved in war.

So far as my record is concerned, I want to have my record stand for sacrifice at home as well as sacrifice on the fields of France. I am not willing to vote for men to go to the battle fields of France and give their lives for their flag and their country and then say, so far as my record is concerned, that I am not willing to drive men to efficiency in accomplishing results at home that must win this war.

I do not care what criticism may be made of my course, as to whether a man may say that I stand for labor or that I stand against labor. I think this question of putting labor continually, in the passage of these bills, between the accomplishment of efficiency and the accomplishment of victory for our country is the greatest libel and the greatest slander that has ever been laid at the door of American labor. There may be some overzealous representative of the interests of labor who thinks that he must stand at the door and ring the bell whenever labor is called on to make a sacrifice trying to prevent the sacrifice. So far as I am concerned, I believe the great body of American labor is just as willing to make its sacrifice for the purpose of this war as any other class of citizens in the United States.

The Secretary of the Navy says he does not oppose the injection of this provision into the bill, but he gives a very significant reason as to why he does not oppose it. It has been said here on the floor that the Navy has been most efficient in this war, most capable of doing its part, and I am willing to accept the verdict and to say that that is true. Well may America be proud of its Navy and proud of the results obtained. But this letter throws some light on the accomplishment of that result. What does the Secretary say? He says:

This provision—

Referring to this efficiency provision that is carried in the bill—

This provision is a continuation of one incorporated in the naval appropriation act approved March 3, 1915, and carried in all subsequent naval acts; and while its inclusion in the bill now pending was made without the recommendation of the department, the department is not opposed to it and, in fact, advocated it at the time the naval act of March 3, 1915, was under consideration.

Now listen:

Its continuation from year to year has not operated to prevent satisfactory ascertainment by other means of the comparative efficiency of employees.

In other words, if Congress desires to play politics, if Congress desires to pretend that it stands on the side of labor and wants to cut out the efficiency machinery by the incorporation of this particular provision in this particular bill, the Secretary of the Navy says "All right, go to it; if that suits you it suits me; but understand, gentlemen, it does not prevent me from adopting another system by which I obtain the same result, and I am obtaining the same result, and propose to continue to do so." So we have reached and found out the reason why the Navy is efficient.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HOLLIS. If it is true that the Secretary of the Navy is satisfied with present conditions and that all concerned are satisfied, why does the Senator desire to impose upon the Navy or the employees a system which is obnoxious, for some reason, to very many?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I say to the Senator candidly I really do not desire to impose it on them. I realize that this is a mere camouflage, that this is a mere political play on the surface; but, thank God, the Secretary of the Navy is not performing it.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDING. I want to direct the attention of the Senator from Alabama, and at the same time of the Senator from New Hampshire, to the fact that the elimination of this clause from the bill does not impose anything on the Secretary of the Navy, but leaves him free to administer it according to his own sense of justice.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Surely. I was coming to that very statement, if we do eliminate it from the bill. There is nothing in the bill to require the Secretary of the Navy to enforce this provision, and, as he has already stated, he has other satisfactory methods, and there is no reason to believe that he would observe it.

Mr. TILLMAN. It does not cripple him in the least.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No. I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire, as far as I am concerned, if the question had not arisen I would not have said anything, because I think the Secretary of the Navy is working at efficiency in a capable way. He is not putting all men on the same basis. He recognizes that one man can do better work than another man and that he who does the best work and accomplishes the most for the Government is entitled to the most pay. He does that by classification. He does it in his own way.

I do not regard the clause as material as to the result to the Government, but I do not want any misunderstanding as to my own position in the matter, and that is the only reason why I am speaking. I do not want anybody hereafter to say that I let this bill go through when my country was at war, when every ounce of manhood either on the battle field or in the shops and factories is required for my Nation's good, for my country's salvation, and that I am going to vote for a provision or countenance a provision which does not require every man to do his full part in this hour of peril.

That is all I want to say about it, except that I want to say to the Senate I had a letter a day or two ago from a young officer on the battle fields of France, and a clause in that letter said:

> The other morning just at daybreak I came into a front trench, and I saw one of our boys lying there, the rain pouring down on him, lying in the mud, the slime, the dirt, and the blood, with his rifle pointed at the German trenches watching for German snipers. He had probably laid there for three or four hours without moving for his country's cause.

And this officer said:

> I can not understand when all these men are making this sacrifice how our people at home can consent to labor strikes in the shipyards when we need ships so vitally to win the war.

That is the whole story. When those boys are making the sacrifice can you and I maintain our own self-respect if we are not willing to drive the engine of production at home to its utmost capacity?

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I hope the distinguished Senator from Alabama will answer that gallant officer that every Member of the House and every Member of the Senate agrees heartily with him, that every effort should be made to put efficiency into this war, but that to undertake to prevent strikes by statute would, in the opinion of the majority of Congress, do more harm than good, that to undertake to interfere with the well-established labor policies of the United States Government would be very likely to disrupt labor, so that there would be less efficiency in the Navy and in the arsenals than there is now. If I believed that to prevent strikes by legislation would tend to more efficiency in this war, if I believed that the striking of this provision out of the naval appropriation bill would create more efficiency for winning this war, I would vote gladly for both. But honest men, intelligent men, disagree as to what will make labor more efficient for the war, and, in the vote that we are about to take I hope each will decide how he stands on the question as to what will be most efficient.

Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to say that this would not handicap the Navy Department.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say it would not.

Mr. BORAH. If it makes no difference one way or the other as to the efficiency of the department, what is there to this debate?

Mr. TILLMAN. Nothing except camouflage that I know.

Mr. BORAH. If that is all there is, why did the Senator permit his committee to bring this camouflage in here?

Mr. TILLMAN. I was called home. I was on the subcommittee which considered the bill. I did not agree to this provision, but I do not want to go back on my committee.

Mr. BORAH. I was somewhat at a loss to understand it, and that is the reason I asked about it. If the Secretary of the Navy is of opinion that it makes no difference one way or the other, so far as I am concerned I see no reason for continuing the discussion; but I had supposed it was a matter of some vital concern, in view of the fact that one of the first committees of this body had brought in the bill in this shape.

I simply want to say in reference to the original proposition which I suggested a few moments ago, in answer to the Senator from New York, if the Senator from New York will recur to a brochure written upon this matter by Mr. Taylor, the author of the system, he will find that I stated quite accurately the test that was first applied in order to bring about this efficiency. It is found in a report which was filed on the 17th day of July, 1912, and Mr. Taylor is quoted from there at length. That is precisely what Mr. Taylor said—that they took the most efficient, the speediest man, and held the watch on him or kept the time upon him until it was ascertained within what time he could do a piece of work, and they then undertook to bring the others up to that limit.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] asked why this discussion? I can only answer for myself. I am opposed, in a serious time like this, to a continued declaration of Congress which is entirely out of harmony with human industrial progress. I do not know whether all Senators are aware of the fact or not, but one of the most important departments in our State universities of to-day throughout the country is that of efficiency engineering. It has come to be one of the most important studies in American educational life. I venture, for the diversion of Senators, if not strikingly pertinent to this discussion, to tell a little story of the Ford factory, which is one of America's very famous and presumably highest class industrial institutions.

A young son of a friend of mine was taking a course in efficiency engineering at the University of the State of Michigan. After having spent one year at his study he decided to take a day off and run over for a practical inspection of the Ford plant at Detroit. He bore with him credentials of members of the university faculty connected with his department, presented them at the office of the superintendent of the Ford factory, and was finally accompanied by an assistant superintendent over the plant, from the very beginning of the production of a motor through all the varied processes of completion. When the young man had concluded his trip in company with the assistant superintendent he said to his host, "You are busy. Will you give me an opportunity once more to follow the processes of production by myself? I am not quite satisfied with my trip." He was given a permit to make a second round of the factory, and he did it much more leisurely and more studiously. When he had gotten to a certain point that had attracted his attention on the first trip he stopped to study at some length. He took out a pencil and a piece of paper and he made a draft of the situation at that particular point of production, then finished his course, and reported to the superintendent. He said, "I have just finished my investigation of your plant and I have been very much interested at a certain point where 12 men are employed. I think if you will take this drawing and rearrange your machinery there you can find that 4 men will do the work of 12, and do it more quickly." The superintendent of the plant was called in, took a hasty glance at the plan suggested, and turned to this boy, who was only 18 years old, and said, "Young man, you can go to work to-morrow in our plant at $2,400 a year."

The young man was interested in his profession and declined the position, whereupon he was informed, "We are so keen to establish efficiency throughout this plant that you may finish your course, if you like, and come back any day you choose, and there is a place here for you to begin at $2,400 a year and the sky is the limit to what you can earn." I tell the story, because it comes within my personal experience, to emphasize the tendency in American industrial production to attain the highest degree of efficiency.

My objection to the clause in the bill which is under discussion is that it puts a congressional prohibition against the Naval Establishment of the United States doing anything in that direction against any efforts toward efficient production.

If I may make another application, while I am on my feet, I will show another reason why I am opposed to this provision. I think Senators have been reading the current newspaper reports relating to the international and American contests in riveting—rivet driving. You can measure the production of ships by the record of rivets driven. In some of our American plants there is a prohibition against the piecework plan. That is provided in the contract with union labor employed. In other yards the piecework plan prevails and men are paid according to the number of rivets they drive.

I remember interrupting the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] one day, relating to the shipbuilding program, to say that I had just learned that day that in one of the shipyards on the Great Lakes, where they are constructing 4,500-ton steamships, the riveters, working in gangs of three, were driving a sufficient number of rivets to earn approximately $80 per day per gang. No one was finding any fault with that enormous earning, because they were producing the number of driven rivets to render a return for that large compensation.

When the Commerce Committee was investigating the tardiness of the ship production program we went into the rivet question. I remember having asked the question of Mr. Gompers, when he was before the committee, what the objection of labor leaders could be to the piecework plan of pay for rivet driving, and he said the objection was that it had been the practice in the past to allow a liberal piecework compensation until a standard of day's production was fixed, and then they would insist on that standard of production and reduce the wages. Where the question was raised the matter was compromised by the Federal adjustment board in providing that wherever the piecework plan was put in operation there shall be no alteration of the wage after a standard day's work was established.

When the Commerce Committee got to inquiring about the matter of driving rivets we found that many a gang of riveters, perhaps a little more efficient than the normal, were driving as high as 1,200 rivets a day, and that was considered a very fine day's work. Since the American contest has arisen we have found that American gangs of riveters, working probably under very favorable conditions, I will allow, have driven as high as 4,000 rivets in a day. When that fact was published in England, anxious and urgent in her need of ships as we are, the pride of her riveters was appealed to. They entered the contest and a gang of English riveters drove a little less than 4,800 rivets in one day, while in our American shipyards throughout the country where there was no bonus to spur the men on they were driving an average of 120 to 240 rivets per day. There is a part of the explanation of your failure to get ships more rapidly.

I do not contend, Mr. President, that the average American workmen constituting a gang of three can drive 1,200 rivets a day—certainly not 4,000 to 4,800—and no extraordinary gang of riveters can drive that many and continue to work; but if it is possible for a gang of three men to drive anything like 3,000 to 4,000 rivets in a day, then it is conceivable that a reasonably efficient gang of workmen can drive at least 500 a day, and I would like to see a method employed in the construction of ships that would impel or inspire these workmen to drive that many a day, and pay them for the driving.

That brings us around to the particular theme involved in this clause of the bill. I was very much interested in the controversy between the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. If I had the records, I could reveal an interesting tale to this body. There have been workmen in the naval establishments of the United States who have earned by their ordinary, conscientious endeavors bonuses amounting to from one to four hundred dollars per year, and they are not permitted to draw these bonuses, although they and their families are righteously entitled to them, because some forces of labor have insisted that that system must not be accepted.

It may be wise for labor—I can not say, though I do not believe it ever can be—to insist on limited production in ordinary times of peace. But, Mr. President, America is calling loudly for ships for its cargo carriers and America is calling loudly for ships for the enlargement of the Navy. You can take any young man in the United States who is subject to draft and service in the Army at $30 per month, and if he only chooses to walk over to a shipyard and enroll his name as an employee he can immediately earn from $120 to $300 per month and escape military service by such enrollment. In this hour of extreme need, in this moment when every American ought to do his most and best, in this hour when, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] so aptly said, we must all consecrate ourselves to the task at hand, I believe the Government ought to refrain from any policy that is calculated to limit production. Let us leave the Navy Department free to encourage the highest output of our naval institutions.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest that the committee says this will not impede the Navy Department.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, it is no revelation of anything improper to say that the Naval Committee did not give this matter any consideration. I think I am correct, am I not, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. TILLMAN. I can not say that, but the committee appointed a subcommittee to consider and report the bill to the full committee.

Unfortunately I was called away, and only returned to the city in time to call the committee together last Monday and make the report. The whole committee has considered the bill, but I do not think any discussion arose on the stop-watch provision. While I was away the subcommittee considered the bill, and I agreed to all it had done during my absence.

I will say that I am opposed to the stop watch, but I am heartily in favor of bonuses.

Mr. HARDING. I like the statement of the distinguished chairman of the committee. In reply to his last statement, when he uses the term "stop watch," I venture to suggest it is only an offensive term injected into this provision to insure its adoption.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is more reason then why it ought to go out.

Mr. HARDING. I want it stricken out. I want the whole thing stricken out.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then you will vote against what you are arguing for.

Mr. HARDING. I may not make myself clear, Mr. President: I am sorry, but I should like the Senator from South Carolina to join me in expessing a befitting confidence in the head of the Navy Department to run the productive end of that department without restrictive legislation. If this clause is stricken from the bill the Secretary of the Navy is perfectly free to adopt such efficiency methods as he chooses, and it does not require him to use a stop watch or any other method of ascertaining efficient production. He remains a free administrative agent. The simple truth about this matter is that this clause has been inserted in the naval bill for the past two or three years at the insistence of the labor radicals. It has not been discussed heretofore, and, in my humble judgment, this is a very reasonable time and a fitting time to eliminate such a provision from the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] that the bonus proposition stands upon an entirely different footing from the other proposition; but the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] says that the stop-watch term is used in this debate, inserted in the bill, and so forth, so as to make the whole thing offensive.

Mr. President, originally that is precisely what it was, a stop-watch proposition. I want to read a statement from the real author of this system. It is found in his Shop Management, page 1358. He says:

> His first step was to place an intelligent, college-educated man in charge of progress in this line. This man had not before handled this class of labor, although he understood managing workmen. He was not familiar with the methods pursued by the writer, but was soon taught the art of determining how much work a first-class man can do in a day. This was done by timing with a stop watch a first-class man while he was working fast. The best way to do this, in fact almost the only way in which the timing can be done with certainty, is to divide the man's work into its elements and time each element separately. For example, in the case of a man loading pig iron onto a car, the elements should be: Picking up the pig iron from the ground or pile (time in hundredths of a minute). Walking with it on a level (time per foot walked). Walking with it up an incline to car (time per foot walked). Throwing the pig down (time in hundredths of a minute) or laying it on a pile (time in hundredths of a minute). Walking back empty to get a load (time per foot walked).

Mr. President, that kind of a proposition can not have any possible place in American industry.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. HARDING. That is only a description of the basis of ascertaining efficiency under the Taylor system.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. HARDING. Certainly the Senator from Idaho does not argue that an efficiency system involves the employment of a stop watch over the men in their employment?

Mr. BORAH. Efficiency is entirely too free to use in connection with this amendment, because there may be vast efficiency, and there may be efficiency without using this system at all. You do not necessarily destroy efficiency by destroying the stop-watch system, in my judgment.

Mr. President, what I say is, and what I said to the Senator from New York, to which the Senator from Ohio called attention, was that that was the origin of this proposition and that was the evil which it was designed to eliminate. The Senator from Ohio will not contend that an American workman should have above him and about him a man timing his steps to the highest possible movement and then bringing every other man on that job up to that position.

Mr. HARDING. Well, the Senator from Idaho is overlooking the fact that the elimination of this provision makes no such requirement as that. The paragraph under discussion is a prohibition of any efficiency system. If we eliminate the paragraph, then it is a matter for the determination of the head of the Navy Department what efficiency method shall be employed in that department.

Mr. BORAH. I do not quite agree with the Senator. The language reads "to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job." That is precisely what they were doing here.

Mr. HARDING. I do not want the Senator from Idaho to give the impression that Congress is trying to legislate the adoption of the stop-watch system. Those of us who are to-day contending against the adoption of this paragraph are asking only that Congress shall not prohibit any efficiency method; and then it is a matter of administrative judgment.

Mr. BORAH. But that is not what the provision of the bill provides. The provision of the bill, outside of the question of bonuses, which I am not now discussing, and concerning which I have an entirely different opinion, possibly deals specifically with the stop-watch proposition.

Mr. HARDING. Well, the Senator from Idaho will not contend that the use of a stop watch is involved if this paragraph is eliminated from the bill?

Mr. BORAH. It is not involved, except that it is the system which has been adopted by a number of the departments, which was only stopped by a prohibition which went into a statute, and at the time that this prohibition went into the statute this system was being inaugurated in all of the departments, and it was being adopted as the governmental system. In my humble opinion this system was founded upon a principle as drastic as anything that ever accompanied American labor or labor in English prisons.

Mr. HARDING. It is quite possible that in the early days there may have been abuses in the system by the enthusiasts in favor of the system and of its adoption.

But the point I insist on making is that the elimination of this paragraph leaves all efficiency methods in our naval institutions to the determination of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BORAH. And including this particular stop-watch system.

Mr. HARDING. Including it; certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I agree with the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator enlighten me, if I am in error with regard to my understanding of what is meant by the stop-watch system. My understanding is that for the purpose of measuring efficiency a timing device is used, and for that purpose only; but that it is not used day by day upon all the workmen engaged in any particular institution which has the Taylor or some other efficiency system, but it is simply an original device, a yardstick, so to speak, for the purpose of determining questions of efficiency measured by the time movements that were required to perform a given task; and after those periods of time were tested by a number of experiments additional time was added to the sum of the time of those various movements, and that was established as an efficient time for the thing to be done, the watch then being discarded, just as the yardstick is thrown aside after the cloth is measured. If I am mistaken about that, I should like to be set right.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand that a superintendent stood there during the day and during the week holding the watch upon the man performing the work.

Mr. THOMAS. I perhaps misunderstood the Senator's remarks.

Mr. BORAH. What I claim is, that in its origin it consisted of that particular fact, to wit, the timing of a very speedy man to ascertain within what time he could perform a certain job.

Mr. THOMAS. And the timing also of a man who was not speedy?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know about that.

Mr. THOMAS. That has been my understanding.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. Taylor does not refer to that. He says that they took a speedy man, a man who was peculiarly fitted to make time, and they timed him to find out within what time he could perform a task. Then they required the others to come up to that point.

Mr. THOMAS. I am as much opposed as the Senator or anyone else can be to the system oultined in his last statement; that is to say, the establishment of a very high rate and compelling everybody to come up to that rate, regardless of the amount of time necessary to do it. In other words, the establishment of a system miscalled "efficient," but a system really designed to get the most work out of the laborer for the least money.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. THOMAS. I am opposed to that.

Mr. BORAH. Well, that was the origin of this legislation.

Mr. THOMAS. That was the origin of the legislation; there is no question about that; but I think that the remarks of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] are quite appropriate, that our aim is to eliminate restrictions upon the officials of the Government, leaving them, then, to adopt such methods of efficiency as may be just and proper in their opinion.

Mr. BORAH. I am not myself willing that they shall adopt the stop-watch system.

Mr. THOMAS. I am willing that they shall adopt any system which may be necessary for the purpose of securing efficiency without injuring the individual—stop watch or anything else.

Mr. BORAH. Of course I accept the Senator's standard when thus qualified. I want efficiency, but I do not want that harsh, driving, brutal efficiency from which the human soul is excluded.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to see if I understand the system correctly. The Senator has given an illustration of a worker and the time method of determining how long it required in the hundredth of a minute to pick up a bar of iron, how much time it took per foot to walk a certain distance, and the length of time necessary to lay the bar down and return and pick up another; and that requirement was for a good, competent man—that is, one capable, we will say, of doing the very best. Do I understand the Senator to mean to convey the idea that that was fixed as the standard of an efficient day's work?

Mr. BORAH. Originally it was, but since that time——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have understood——

Mr. BORAH. Wait a moment. Since that time it has been modified, as I understand, by reason of the fact of allowing a certain amount of time in addition to that within which other persons might perform it; but originally that was the test, as the Senator will find from reading the book of the author of this system; that was the standard which he sought to fix, but after a certain amount of discussion had taken place and after the matter had been investigated by two committees of Congress there were certain modifications made in regard to it, in which the system was ameliorated to a considerable extent. The Senator from Michigan stated to me that they had adopted a different rule to some extent.

Mr. McCUMBER. My understanding was that they would say: "If this man"—a very competent worker—"can within an hour's time handle 100 of these bars, then an average good workman ought to handle the same number in an hour and three-quarters." The basis, therefore, was in order for the average man to receive the full average pay, not to do what this best man could do in an hour, but to do in an hour and three-quarters what he could do in an hour. Am I in error about that?

Mr. BORAH. I understand that that rule has now been adopted. I am not familiar with that fact. That, however, was not originally the proposition.

Mr. President, may I ask if this question is divisible?

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to see it divided, so as to eliminate the stop watch and to retain the bonuses.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are two propositions to strike out.

Mr. BORAH. If it is divisible, I ask for a division of it, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair believes it is divisible by a motion to strike out down to the semicolon on line 23, and that the other part of the motion to strike out is another question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have not read the early history of the Taylor system, as described by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], but I know what the system now is, and how it has been employed and was employed until Congress stopped it in the Government workshops. It is not the best man who is taken, for an example, but simply the average workman in the shop. He is taken and put at a certain task; a watch is held upon him in order that it may be determined just how long it takes him to do every part of that work. Not only that, but he is assisted by some competent man who makes suggestions to him as he goes along, to the end that he can do the work a little quicker and more efficiently without the expenditure of unnecessary effort. The object is to find how quickly it is possible for the average man to do a certain task. When it has been discovered how long it takes him to do that work when he was assisted, then there is added at least 75 per cent more time than it took him to do it, in order that allowance may be made for the suggestions which were given to him and for any circumstances which may have happened that would have been favorable to the work. So that, instead of being an expert's task, it is the average man's task.

Senators should also understand that the wage of the workman is not reduced in the least by this system. For instance, if the wages at the Watertown Arsenal are $3 a day, that wage is not changed. The man who does not measure up to the efficiency task continues to get his $3. It is only the man who has the ambition and the ability to earn more who gets the bonus, and therefore benefits himself and the Government. It is upon this principle that success is attained. It is the incentive that makes employers out of employees.

I repeat that I do not know what the system was in the beginning, but such is the system with which we are now dealing. It would be as obnoxious to me as it is to the Senator from Idaho, if a watch were to be held over every workman and he were compelled to perform an unreasonable or harmful task; but the task is reasonable and set for the man who wishes to get the extra reward. If he does not accomplish that task or more he does not get the bonus, but he gets the average day's pay just the same as before. The stopping of the efficiency system in our arsenal at Watertown greatly increased the cost of production to the Government, and the laboring men who in their hearts wanted it continued were denied the extra compensation.

The question is asked, Why should we not keep this provision in the bill? I inquire, Why should we not eliminate it if we do not believe in it? The stop watch, I repeat, is but a part of the system, in the first place, in determining the task. That is the system now. The man does not have to work according to the watch. If he works eight hours and completes a task under the time limit set for that particular task, he gets the bonus.

I can conceive of no reason why the Senate at this time should enact this kind of legislation, which is an injustice to the millions of men who are working in the trenches to-day. Aye, it may be a menace to their very lives and to that of the Government as well.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been requested and seconded. The vote will be on the motion to strike out the first part of the paragraph.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I inquire what the vote will be upon, the question having been divided?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first vote will be on the motion to strike out that part of the paragraph which commences in line 15, with the word "That" and ends at the word "work," in line 23.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Gronna	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Guion	McNary	Smoot
Calder	Hale	Martin	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Harding	New	Swanson
Culberson	Hardwick	Nugent	Thomas
Cummins	Henderson	Page	Thompson
Curtis	Hollis	Poindexter	Tillman
Dillingham	Johnson, Cal.	Ransdell	Townsend
Fall	Johnson, S. Dak.	Saulsbury	Trammell
Fernald	Jones, N. Mex.	Shafroth	Underwood
Fletcher	Jones, Wash.	Sheppard	Vardaman
France	Kirby	Shields	Wadsworth
Gallinger	Lodge	Smith, Ga.	Wilfley
Gerry	McCumber	Smith, Mich.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is necessarily absent in connection with the Red Cross campaign. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], on account of a death in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to ask if I am correct in my understanding that the first vote comes on the motion to strike out the stop-watch prohibition, and the second vote will come on the striking out of the premium prohibition?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to strike out of the bill all that portion thereof beginning in line 15, page 99, and extending down to and including line 4, on page 100. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the paragraph containing two provisions, has asked for a division of the question. The yeas and nays have been requested and ordered, and the first vote will be upon striking out that portion of the bill from line 15, on page 99, to the word "work," in line 23, of the same page.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMPSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I inquire if the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. LODGE. My colleague [Mr. WEEKS] is necessarily absent from the Senate. He has a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is unavoidably absent. On this vote he is paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is temporarily absent from the Chamber on business.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] is detained by illness.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] are detained on official business.

Mr. HOLLIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is detained by illness in his family.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Baird	Fletcher	McCumber	Townsend
Calder	France	New	Underwood
Curtis	Gallinger	Page	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Gronna	Smith, Mich.
Fall	Hale	Smoot
Fernald	Harding	Thomas

NAYS—38.

Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Poindexter	Swanson
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene	Thompson
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Tillman
Gerry	Kirby	Reed	Trammell
Guion	Lodge	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Hardwick	McKellar	Shafroth	Walsh
Henderson	McNary	Sheppard	Wilfley
Hitchcock	Martin	Shields
Hollis	Nugent	Smith, Ga.

NOT VOTING—37.

Ashurst	Kendrick	Norris	Sterling
Bankhead	Kenyon	Overman	Sutherland
Beckham	King	Owen	Warren
Brandegee	Knox	Penrose	Watson
Colt	La Follette	Phelan	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Robinson	Williams
Goff	Lewis	Sherman	Wolcott
Gore	McLean	Simmons
James	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Kellogg	Nelson	Smith, Md.

So the Senate refused to strike out the first part of the paragraph.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in reference to the remainder of the paragraph, I trust that a different vote will be cast. The remainder of the paragraph reads:

> Nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. President, all that that includes is the proposition that, if stricken out, it will be allowable to give premiums or cash rewards or bonuses for added efficiency in the work in the navy yards of our country. It seems to me that there should be no objection to eliminating that provision from the bill. By doing so we will simply allow the Government of the United States to do what is done in every large industrial establishment in the United States; and, so far as I know, no complaint has come from a single workingman in those establishments that any harm has been done him; but, on the contrary, complete satisfaction has been given to the workmen in those industrial plants.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDING. Before the Senator sits down, so that the Senate may vote with a full understanding, I wish to ask the Senator a question. While I am in favor of the bonus system, I wish to ask how the Naval Establishment can pay a bonus without efficiency methods for the establishment of a standard on which the bonus is paid?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, it has been suggested that the Secretary of the Navy has methods of establishing efficiency; but however that may be, I think methods will be found whereby the more efficient can be better compensated than the least efficient, even in the navy yards of the country. I think it desirable that this part of the paragraph should go out of the bill, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to strike out the remaining portion of the paragraph, on which the Senator from New Hampshire asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I make the same transfer as before and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMPSON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my pair as heretofore and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to make the same announcement in reference to my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] that I made on the last vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I make the same announcement with reference to my colleague [Mr. GOFF] that I made on the preceding vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]; and

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—37.

Baird	France	Kenyon	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Gallinger	Lenroot	Smoot
Calder	Gerry	Lodge	Thomas

So Mr. GALLINGER's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, at the request of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who has been unavoidably called from the Chamber, I desire to offer an amendment for him.

The amendment is, on page 39, line 20, after the word "Navy," to strike out the word "or," and after the words "Marine Corps" to insert "or Coast Guard," so that it will read:

Warrant officer of the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard.

Also, in line 25, after the words "Marine Corps," to insert "or captain in the Coast Guard."

In other words, the Senator informs me that the purpose of his amendment is to put the Coast Guard on the same basis as the Army and the Navy.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question is on the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, and prior to its reading I wish to make a very brief statement concerning it. It provides for the case of a young ensign in the Navy who by inadvertence made no assignment of his protection to a dependent mother and lost his life at Pensacola in the service something like a year ago; and if he had made this assignment she would have been entitled to a year's pay. The department can not pay it without the insertion of this amendment in the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Upon that statement of facts I will accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, after line 25, it is proposed to insert the following paragraph:

The Paymaster General of the Navy shall cause to be paid to Mrs. Susie A. Van Kirk, mother of the late Dean R. Van Kirk, ensign, National Naval Volunteers, an amount equal to one year's pay at the rate received by that officer at the date of his death, May 1, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I want to offer a very brief amendment. On page 6, line 5, I move to strike out the words "the city of New York" and insert in lieu thereof "any State or municipality."

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was adopted will be reconsidered. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, in the committee amendment now reconsidered, in line 5, it is proposed to strike out the words "the city of New York" and to insert in lieu thereof "any State or municipality," so as to read:

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized hereafter, in leasing water-front property from any State or municipality, to provide, as a part or all of the consideration therefor, that improvements placed thereon by the United States shall become the property of the lessor upon the expiration of the lease or any renewal thereof.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, prior to offering an amendment, I ask that the language in the bill commencing on line 10, page 61, and embracing line 15 on the same page, be read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, beginning with line 10, the text of the bill as now amended reads as follows:

Navy yard, Charleston, S. C.: For the construction of a large dry dock (limit of cost, $4,000,000), $1,150,000; dredging, to continue, $25,000; railroad system extension, $15,000; toward water-front improvements, $200,000; boat storage, $10,000; central power plant improvements, $250,000; in all, $1,650,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss that provision of the bill. I will content myself by saying that three years ago, or thereabouts, I offered an amendment providing for an additional dry dock in the Portsmouth Navy Yard. I think I made a mistake in leaving the Naval Affairs Committee about that time, else it might possibly have been found in this bill. It has not been acted upon by the committee or reported in any form.

I now offer an amendment providing for an additional dry dock in the Portsmouth Navy Yard, to follow the item just read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 15, on page 61, it is proposed to insert:

Navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H.: For the construction of an additional dry dock, of a length sufficient to accommodate the largest battleship in our Navy (limit of cost, $2,000,000), $500,000.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I make a point of order against that amendment. It has neither been estimated for by the department nor reported by a standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it does not make the least earthly difference to me whether the point of order is made or not. I did not expect that the amendment would be agreed to, although it ought to be agreed to, and it ought to have been estimated for; and if my distinguished and somewhat tumultous friend from Virginia were as much interested in the navy yards in some parts of our country as he seems to be in the navy yards in other parts of the country it not only would have been in this bill upon an estimate, but it would have had his indorsement and that of his committee. Of course, the point of order will lie, and I have nothing to say on that point.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should say, in justice to myself and other members of the committee, that there is not an item of appropriation contained in this bill that was not recommended by the department, except that there was an increase of the sum of $150,000 to the sum of $200,000, as recommended by the commandant. The subcommittee and the Committee on Naval Affairs determined that in this emergency they would not recommend anything unless it was estimated for and recommended by the department. Everything contained in the bill will measure up to that requirement.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if the amendment in the provision regarding the Charleston Navy Yard was recommended by the department or estimated for?

Mr. SWANSON. Which amendment—for the construction of a large dry dock?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the amendment appropriating $250,000 for power-plant improvements.

Mr. SWANSON. All those central power plants at all the navy yards were recommended by the department on the ground that the work had largely increased, and it was of the utmost importance to increase the power. The Senator will see that nearly all the navy yards have had an increased appropriation for central power plants to enable them to do the increased work.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator say that every navy yard in this bill has had that?

Mr. SWANSON. Nearly all the navy yards. Where they have asked for an increase of central power, it was granted. The House bill carried some of them and the others were very much urged on the Senate committee by the department.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is mistaken in saying that in every instance an appropriation of this kind has been made. The Senator started out by saying that the Secretary of the Navy had estimated an appropriation of this kind for every navy yard. The Senator must be mistaken on that point.

Mr. SWANSON. I did not catch what the Senator said.

Mr. GALLINGER. I say, I think the Senator must be mistaken when he says that the Secretary of the Navy estimated an appropriation of this kind for every navy yard in the country.

Mr. SWANSON. No; I said most of the navy yards. I did not say every one. As to most of the navy yards where the work has greatly increased the Secretary appeared before the committee and stated that to do this work the central power had to be increased; and every item in this bill carrying an appropriation, except the one stated by me, was recommended and urged by the department.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator tell me what item it is that was not estimated for that is in the bill?

Mr. SWANSON. There was $150,000 appropriated for the purchase of Parris Island—3,000 acres of land—that they had recommended. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] had a letter from the commandant stating that he did not think he could get the land for $150,000 and he thought possibly it ought to be increased to $200,000; but the provision provides for the condemnation of the land, and all that the committee did was to increase the appropriation from $150,000 to $200,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the commandant does not make estimates.

Mr. SWANSON. He does not. I distinctly stated that that was not a recommendation of the department.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not follow the example of the Senator from Virginia and make a point of order against the provision, although it is quite as obnoxious to the rule as is the amendment that I offered. The point of order having been made by the Senator, I agree that it is well taken and that my amendment can not be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely want to say that if I understand this provision in regard to the navy yard at Charleston, S. C., it appropriates $1,150,000 toward the construction of a large dry dock at the navy yard at Charleston, S. C., and limits the cost of that dry dock to $4,000,000. In other words, there will be $2,850,000 to be hereafter appropriated for the building of that dry dock. Is that correct?

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not catch the Senator's figures as he went along, but I will inform the Senator that this $1,150,000 was in the last appropriation bill for lengthening the present dry dock there, and instead of lengthening the old one they concluded it would be better to build a new one, and that $1,150,000 came in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. I take it for granted that the statement I made is correct—that is, that the limit of cost of the dry dock to be built there is $4,000,000.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. And there is but $1,150,000 appropriated in this bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is but $1,150,000 appropriated in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct. Then, if we pass this item in this bill, Mr. President, in the river and harbor bill there is provided some $5,000,000 more to be appropriated for a channel leading to the dry dock, as I understand.

Mr. TILLMAN. The condition in Charleston Harbor is this: Within the jetties, after getting inside the harbor, the water gets 40 feet deep immediately, and it is 40 feet deep halfway up to the navy yard, or more than halfway, two-thirds of the way, perhaps; and the purpose of this appropriation of $5,000,000 in the river and harbor bill is to enable the Government to dredge a channel a thousand feet wide up to the navy yard, so that vessels after getting into deep water inside the jetties can go on up to the navy yard.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that, Mr. President, and my object in speaking of it at all was to call attention to the fact that if this is agreed to it not only provides for a future appropriation of $2,850,000, but for an appropriation of some $5,000,000 more for dredging purposes. That is as I understand it.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is in the river and harbor bill, and it has already passed.

Mr. SMOOT. But it is put in there on condition that this item passes in this bill; and therefore it is not only a question of appropriating here $2,850,000 in addition——

Mr. TILLMAN. The building of the $4,000,000 dry dock is the only condition in the river and harbor bill, as I recollect it. The river and harbor bill provided an appropriation in case a dry dock was built costing $4,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Providing the dry dock is built, then the bill appropriates $5,000,000 for dredging the channel a thousand feet wide.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Or, in other words, if we make this appropriation of $1,650,000 it means a future appropriation of $7,850,000.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know about the figures. The Senator is better at mental arithmetic now than I am, although I used to be able to keep up with him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not going to oppose this appropriation. It would be useless for me to do so, and yet it is a remarkable circumstance that here we are making an appropriation of $5,000,000 for a dry dock, and that we have to spend $5,000,000 to dig a channel to the place where the dry dock is to be located, while the innocent amendment which I offered as to Portsmouth, N. H., was promptly ruled out of order.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire will remember that some years ago he proposed, and I helped him get in a naval appropriation bill, an appropriation to blow a rock out of the way that made the entrance to Portsmouth Harbor very dangerous.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I remember that, and I thank the Senator now, as I thanked him before, for that; but it was not $5,000,000, nor was it a very large proportion of that amount; and it not only did service to the navy yard, but likewise to whatever commerce there is on that body of water.

Mr. TILLMAN. Charleston Harbor is the best harbor on the south Atlantic coast. That has been proven by the Helm Commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not opposing it. I do not know that I ever opposed anything that the Senator from South Carolina wanted; he is such a sweet-tempered man.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish, then, that the Senator would let the bill go through. I appreciate the Senator's friendship for me, but I do not want it on that ground. I want it on its own merits. The improvement in New York, on the East River, is for the same purpose. It is recommended by the War Department and the Navy Department, too.

Mr. GALLINGER. It would not have made a bit of difference to me upon what ground the Senate had voted my little amendment into the bill. I would not have cared whether it was on the ground of friendship or something else. I simply want to say, in reference to that, that I regret that adequate provision is not made for this splendid navy yard, where we have 60 feet of water, and we do not have to dredge or make channels.

Mr. TILLMAN. And into which you can get safely now, since the rock has been blown out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Into which we can get safely now, and we could get there before. Mr. President, I am not going to oppose the Senator's plan for getting a navy yard in South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. We have already got a better navy yard there than there is at Portsmouth.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, it is interned. It is very much like some things the Shipping Board did.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not defend the Shipping Board, because it has not treated us right down there, either.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Shipping Board gave out two contracts to build ships in my State, and they are both interned behind a bridge the draw of which is so narrow that they can not get out. I apprehend that that draw will be lengthened, at the expense of a bankrupt railroad company, or else that they will be floated out on some of the airships that are going to be built in due course of time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, this is one of the largest appropriation bills, and the most important, perhaps, next to the Army bill, that this Congress has had under consideration. The Senate has made a good many amendments to the bill as it came from the House, and that will mean that in order for it to become a law we must have a committee of conference. I therefore move that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments and that the Vice President appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. PENROSE, and Mr. LODGE conferees on the part of the Senate.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4557, which is a bill to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator does not intend to proceed with the bill to-night, does he?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No, Mr. President; I do not expect to ask for the consideration of the bill to-night. I want to take it up, so that it will be the unfinished business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I ask if that is the bill that was under discussion here at one time?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; this is an entirely new bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4557) to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 23, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 22, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God Almighty, ever ready to help those who are willing to be helped and who will put themselves in a receptive mood that they may receive Thy holy influence, let Thy spirit, we pray Thee, come with all strength and potency into the hearts of the enemies of humanity; that they may open their eyes to the wrongs they have committed; repent and make restitution so far as within them lies; cease to do evil and learn to do well.

If their hearts are obdurate and refuse Thy entreaties, sharpen their conscience that it may burn into their souls as white heat and give them no rest, day or night, until they repent and try to remove the evils they have wrought; for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have two or three privileged resolutions for which I would like to get immediate consideration.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman withhold for a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent which will necessitate about half a minute's explanation. I introduced bill H. R. 11982, to amend the act approved April 22, 1908, relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases. At the time of the introduction of that bill I was under the impression the original act had passed through the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Afterwards I discovered that that had been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and upon consulting with the chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary both agreed that this bill ought to be referred to the Judiciary Committee instead of the Interstate Commerce Committee, to which by mistake it has been referred.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There was no objection.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF STEELE AGAINST SCOTT.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois will withhold for a moment until I present a privileged report (No. 595) from the Committee on Elections No. 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. It is a report on the contested-election case of Steele against Scott. I ask to send it to the Clerk's desk and have it lie over and be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that it lie over and be printed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PROFITEERING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, pending the request of the gentleman from Illinois, I would like to state that on the Speaker's table is Senate joint resolution 152, relative to profiteering, known as the Saulsbury resolution. The Senate has asked for a conference, and I would be glad if that be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Senate joint resolution 152.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to take this resolution from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, there are no Senate amendments. The Senate disagreed to the House amendments and asked for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Mr. CROSSER, and Mr. CARY.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and print therewith an article from a great magazine writer, Samuel C. Blythe, explaining minutely the plan of the Columbus war-chest fund that was raised. The members of that fund have——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MINORITY VIEWS ON CENSUS BILL. (H. REPT. NO. 581, PT. 2).

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the Committee on the Census filed a report on the bill H. R. 11984. As a member of that committee, I ask the privilege of filing minority views now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to file minority views on the census bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 9715. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew in Ashley County, Wilmot Township, State of Arkansas.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 8764. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia, had asked a conference with the House on the joint resolution and amendments, and had appointed Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. SHERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 950. An act to provide for the nonmineral entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing coal, phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals in Alaska;

S. 3527. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1885;

S. 2975. An act for the relief of Katherine Macdonald;

S. 2910. An act providing for an additional judge for the northern district of California;

S. 4151. An act to provide for a determination of heirship in cases of deceased members of the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, conferring jurisdiction upon district courts to partition lands belonging to full-blood heirs of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes;

S. 3945. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Fred H. Gallup major of Field Artillery in the United States Army;

S. 3125. An act for the relief of certain enlisted men of the United States Navy;

S. 4543. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 3735. An act to provide for enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

S. 4542. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 2654. An act providing for the appointment of two additional district judges in the northern district of the State of Illinois; and

S. 1923. An act for the relief of John Doyle, alias John Geary.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 8496. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 9160. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 9506. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 9612. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 9641. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 10027. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 10477. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 10843. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 10850. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 10924. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 11364. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 11658. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 11663. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7634) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. HOLLIS, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4543. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4542. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3572. An act authorizing the Coos Bay, Umpqua, and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians in the State of Oregon to submit claims to the Court of Claims; to the Committee on Claims.

RIVERS AND HARBORS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the rivers and harbors bill, to disagree to all Senate amendments, and to ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the river and harbor bill, to disagree to all Senate amendments, and to ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. If that can be done formally, of course I have no objection; but if it is going to take up time——

The SPEAKER. It takes no time, unless somebody makes a speech.

Mr. SIMS. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SMALL, Mr. BOOHER, and Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] first because he has been endeavoring to be recognized for some minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from Illinois has kindly consented to let me in ahead of him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, some days ago, in discussing a bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture, I stated I had been informed that Mr. Hoover had stated before that committee that the food survey amounted to a farce. I have a letter from Mr. Hoover stating that he did not say that, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, May 20, 1918.

The Hon. PHILIP P. CAMPBELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL: I notice in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 17 that you quote me as having said to the Committee on Agriculture that the food survey by the Department of Agriculture was a farce. I think if you will read the record of all proceedings of the Committee on Agriculture, wherever I have been present, you will find that no such statement was ever made or even suggested.

Yours, faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, my information was of a nature that justified me in making the statement I made. I had been informed by those who had been present at a meeting that Mr. Hoover had said that the food survey was of little, if any, value.

I inadvertently used the word "farce." I still say that it was a useless expenditure of money to make the food survey. The survey was made, I am informed, as of December 1, 1917, and released on the 27th day of April this year for use, long after most of the food surveyed had been consumed. The survey was a farce, whatever Mr. Hoover may have said about it. The fact that the Department of Agriculture does not emphasize the importance of another survey of the food of the country as a reason for asking for more money is evidence that the Department of Agriculture recognizes that work as manifestly useless.

SALARIES OF FEDERAL JUDGES—MINORITY VIEWS (H. REPT. NO. 573, PT. 2).

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. To ask unanimous consent to file within five days minority views on the bill H. R. 12001, the Federal judges salary increase bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks leave to file within five days minority views on the bill H. R. 12001, to increase judges' salaries. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

WAR-RISK BUREAU.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I send a privileged resolution to the desk and ask for its present consideration. And I have several others. I have stricken the "whereases" out, because they would take away the privilege of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 367.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to report to the House the cause of the delay in making adjustments and payments and also to advise the House of the number of allotments thus far adjusted and paid, the number adjusted on which payments have not been made, and the number of unadjusted allotments; the number of persons employed in the War-Risk Bureau, the aggregate monthly expense of such bureau, the percentage cost of adjustment and payment, and when the work of the bureau is likely to be current.

The SPEAKER. How does it come to be privileged?

Mr. MADDEN. This is asking for a state of facts.

The SPEAKER. How does it become privileged?

Mr. MADDEN. Simply because it is asking for a statement of the records of the War-Risk Bureau.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, is this resolution being presented as a privileged resolution?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. This is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MADDEN. It is out of order if it is Calendar Wednesday. I will file it in the basket.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair was that Calendar Wednesday was abolished for to-day.

Mr. MADDEN. I have 11 other resolutions here that I wish to present.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

BUREAU OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. SIMS (when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 11048.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the bill H. R. 11048, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11048) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] in the chair.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. What is the scope of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is quite an important measure, and I think should take the ordinary course. Therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] to act as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON took the chair as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11048, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11048) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department, approved September 2, 1914."

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, is hereby amended by adding to such act a new section, to be known as section 2b, to read as follows:

"SEC. 2b. That when it appears to the Secretary of the Treasury that vessels of foreign friendly flags, or their masters, officers, or crews, or shippers or importers in such vessels, are unable in any trade to secure adequate war-risk insurance on reasonable terms, the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, with the approval of the Secretary, is hereby authorized to make provisions for the insurance by the United States of (1) such vessels of foreign friendly flags, their freight and passage moneys, and personal effects of the masters, officers, and crews thereof against the risks of war when such vessels are chartered or operated by the United States Shipping Board or its agent, or chartered by any person a citizen of the United States, and (2) the cargoes to be shipped in such vessels of foreign friendly flags, whether or not they are so chartered. Such insurance on the vessel, however, is authorized only when the United States Shipping Board or its agent operates the vessel or the charterers are, by the terms of the charter party or contract with the vessel owners, required to assume the war risk or provide insurance protecting the vessel owners against war risk during the term of the charter or hire of the vessel.

"The Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is also hereby authorized to insure the masters, officers, and crews of vessels operated or chartered as aforesaid against the loss of life or personal injury by the risk of war and for compensation during the detention following the capture by enemies of the United States, whenever it appears to the Secretary that the owners, operators, or charterers of such vessels are unable, in any trade, to secure such insurance on reasonable terms."

SEC. 2. That section 5 of such act as amended by an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes," approved June 12, 1917, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to establish an advisory board, to consist of three members skilled in the practices of war-risk insurance, for the purpose of assisting the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in fixing rates of premium and in adjustment of claims for losses, and generally in carrying out the purposes of this act, the compensation of the members of said board to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not to exceed $20 a day each while actually employed. He is likewise authorized to appoint two persons skilled in the practices of accident insurance for the purpose of assisting the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the adjustment of claims for death, personal injury, or detention, the compensation of persons so appointed to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not to exceed $20 a day each while actually employed. In the event of disagreement as to the claim for losses or amount thereof, between the said bureau and the parties to such contract of insurance, an action on the claim may be brought against the United States in the district court of the United States, sitting in admiralty in the district in which the claimant or his agents may reside. The Secretary of the Treasury is, in his judgment, authorized to compromise the claim either before or after the institution of an action therein."

SEC. 3. That section 9 of such act as amended by an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes," approved June 12, 1917, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That the President is authorized whenever in his judgment the necessity of further war insurance by the United States shall have ceased to exist to suspend the operation of this act in so far as it authorizes insurance by the United States against loss or damage by risks of war, which suspension shall be made, in any event, within six months after the end of the war, but shall not affect any insurance outstanding at the time or any claims pending adjustment. For the purpose of the final adjustment of any such outstanding insurance or claims, the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance may, in the discretion of the President, be continued in existence for a period not exceeding three years after such suspension.

"The words 'end of the war' as used herein shall be deemed to mean the date of proclamation of exchange of ratification of the treaty of peace, unless the President shall, by proclamation, declare a prior date, in which case the date so proclaimed shall be deemed to be the 'end of the war' within the meaning of this act."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I will first read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to this bill and suggesting its immediate passage:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 19, 1918.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The inclosed bill to amend the act of September 2, 1914, establishing the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department, is a measure which has been prepared by the advisory board in the marine division of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. It has my full approval, as well as the unanimous recommendation of the advisory board, and I would appreciate your cooperation in having this measure introduced in the House and in securing its passage.

The amendment is intended to accomplish three things: First, to permit the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance to insure the vessels of friendly nations when such vessels are chartered or operated by the United States Shipping Board or its agent, or chartered by citizens of the United States, or the cargoes on vessels of friendly nations whether or not they are so chartered; second, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to compromise disputed war-risk insurance claims; third, to extend the authorization which created this bureau for the purposes of the division of marine insurance for the period of the duration of the war, and for six months thereafter, unless sooner suspended by the President.

* * * * * * *

Very sincerely, yours,

W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

In the hearings before the committee on this bill Mr. De Lanoy made the following statement, which is brief:

The original bureau, as you are aware, insured against war risks the hulls of American vessels and their cargoes. The developments since then—that was three and a half years ago—have rendered it advisable and necessary to include insurance of hulls and cargoes in vessels of friendly nations when such vessels are chartered or operated by the United States Shipping Board or its agents, or chartered by citizens of the United States, and this bill (No. 11048) would also include insurance on cargoes of vessels of friendly nations whether or not they are so chartered.

Mr. De Lanoy was asked about the operations of the war-risk insurance bill up to the present time, the vessels, and cargoes, and costs and financial results, and he made this statement in reply to a question of Mr. ESCH:

Mr. ESCH. If Director De Lanoy has the statistics, I think it would be valuable for use in the House to have the amount of insurance issued on vessels inserted as a part of the hearings, and the amount of losses paid to date, and the balance on hand to the favor of that fund.

Mr. DE LANOY. I have such a statement, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, under date of April 30. The bureau has issued on hulls and cargoes 15,823 policies—that is, for the period September 2, 1914, to April 30, 1918—and the Government has insured a total of $1,134,920,000.

To-day the net amount of risks is $58,524,324. The high-water mark of risks was about $175,000,000. Now, as to the financial part, the premiums received amount to $41,833,967.88 and the losses to date $24,479,855. There is a difference of nearly $17,500,000, gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. In the hands of the Government?

Mr. DE LANOY. The expenses to March 31, 1918, from September 2, 1914, were $117,531.26—that is, 43 months—to take in over $41,000,000 in premiums.

Mr. Chairman, the Secretary's letter and the statement of Mr. De Lanoy cover the whole question, and the object and purposes of this bill.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. DENISON. This bill, then, would extend the war-risk insurance business of the Government to cover the vessels of other friendly nations?

Mr. SIMS. Its cargoes.

Mr. DENISON. Vessels and cargoes?

Mr. SIMS. When chartered by citizens of the United States, or operated by the Shipping Board of the United States, or the cargoes of friendly nations, whether so chartered or not. That is the scope of the bill.

Mr. DENISON. In other words, this Government will insure the cargoes of the ships of other allied governments or neutral governments? Is that true under this bill?

Mr. SIMS. That is substantially true.

Mr. DENISON. Whether they are chartered by the——

Mr. SIMS. Whether the ship itself is chartered by the Government or by a citizen of the United States or the Shipping Board.

There are ships, as the gentleman will remember, that are running from South America and other neutral countries to the United States, and the war-risk insurance charged by private companies is practically prohibitive. If the Government of the United States under this bill is permitted to insure the cargoes of such vessels, it will increase our tonnage very materially and be of very great benefit, and will enable us to use a great many more of our vessels, possibly, in our transport service with our allies between here and France, in shipping munitions and other war supplies. It will be of great benefit and add materially to our tonnage, and the Government, as an insurance proposition, will profit by it if conditions in the future should be as those in the past have been.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. If there are any good and forceful reasons why we should do that, I hope the gentleman will present them to the House. If the Government is going into the insurance business and is going to insure the cargoes of other nations we should know about it fully.

Mr. SIMS. With our allies, which means practically with ourselves, so far as the war is concerned.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not the authorization referred to broader than that? Is there any limitation whatsoever on the authority of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau as to placing insurance on cargoes when shipped in vessels of friendly flags, whether or not they are so chartered?

Mr. SIMS. I have just stated it covers cargoes of friendly vessels.

Mr. STAFFORD. They may be in no wise connected with the Nation's business, either its export or import trade.

Mr. SIMS. It may be a neutral nation carrying food or using its vessels to carry commerce between us, and thus enable us to use ours.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no limitation that it must in any wise be connected with our Government. The phraseology is very general. I direct the gentleman's attention to the second provision of the first paragraph:

> The Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, with the approval of the Secretary, is hereby authorized to make provisions for the insurance by the United States of (1) such vessels of foreign friendly flags, their freight and passage moneys, and personal effects of the masters, officers, and crews thereof against the risks of war when such vessels are chartered or operated by the United States Shipping Board or its agent; or chartered by any person a citizen of the United States, and (2) the cargoes to be shipped in such vessels of foreign friendly flags, whether or not they are so chartered.

That would give authority to the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance——

Mr. SIMS. Let the gentleman read the rest of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will read:

> Such insurance on the vessel, however, is authorized only when the United States Shipping Board or its agent operates the vessel or the charterers are, by the terms of the charter party or contract with the vessel owners, required to assume the war risk or provide insurance protecting the vessel owners against war risk during the term of the charter or hire of the vessel.

Mr. SIMS. It applies to the vessel's owner.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing there which will prevent the War-Risk Insurance Bureau from placing insurance on cargoes and transportation that has no relation whatsoever to American trade.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the chairman of the committee yield for another question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. DENISON. I assume that Mexico is a friendly nation under the present situation. I would like to ask the chairman whether, if parties in Mexico want to ship materials to Spain, this Government can be called upon to insure that cargo under this bill?

Mr. SIMS. No; no nation can call on us.

Mr. DENISON. I will put it this way: Can that cargo be insured by this Government?

Mr. SIMS. In other words, would the Government be authorized to do so? Is that what the gentleman means?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. If it comes within the provisions of the bill, and it is in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury in the execution of the law that it is for a friendly purpose, I do not see why the cargo would not be insurable under this bill. But that is an administrative matter which would have to be looked into. There is nothing mandatory about it.

Mr. DENISON. There ought to be something in the bill limiting this right of insurance to something in which this Government has a live interest.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think the gentleman would insist that the bill itself should specify friendly nations or exclude any nation by name.

Mr. DENISON. Not at all; but the character of the cargo or the ship ought to be specified or limited to such a character of ship as this Government has some interest in, either directly or indirectly at least.

Mr. SIMS. If the Government of the United States by insuring the cargoes of neutral and friendly nations enables those neutral or friendly nations to do business that they can not otherwise do on account of the prohibitive rates of insurance companies, it should do so, especially in the case of a large cargo, or a ship carrying an immense cargo that can not on that account get insurance in insurance companies. You have to have the approval of this Government or the administrative officers to get it in all cases. Now, it will be of very great indirect benefit to us. Think what has been done under the war-risk insurance of vessels for three years, with over $17,500,000 to the good. It could not affect us adversely in a financial way, and can not become a burden on us. But, on the other hand, it will be of great benefit. It will relieve, to some extent, the burden of tonnage upon our own vessels that might be used for other purposes.

This is a good bill. There is no objection to it. It is a war measure, and it is only extending the provisions of the law that we passed along the same line.

Mr. DENISON. But the effect of this bill might have a tendency to cause other nations to place the burden of the insurance of the shipping world upon this Government. That is the tendency of it, when they see we are willing to do it.

Mr. SIMS. It depends upon whether or not they come within the provisions of the law, and the administrative officer will exercise the proper care. I do not think they are going to do a wildcat business at all. What the bureau has already done stamps it with approval and administrative ability of the highest order.

Mr. DENISON. It has not done anything of this kind heretofore, insuring the vessels or cargoes of foreign nations?

Mr. SIMS. If a cargo of wheat is going to France from a friendly nation to feed our soldiers, why would the gentleman object to the Government of the United States insuring that cargo?

Mr. DENISON. That is an extreme case. Why should we insure a cargo of bananas, for example, from Mexico to Spain?

Mr. SIMS. I do not think that would be done. I suppose the gentleman goes on the theory that the administrative officers will do the most foolish and most unpatriotic thing that could be permitted under the law. I do not believe it.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Do the provisions of this bill cease at the close of the war?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; six months after the close of the war. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to other provisions of the bill than those referred to by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The original war-risk act of September 2, 1914, confined the operations of insuring risks on vessels to American merchant vessels. By the amendment of June 12, 1917, we extended the insurance to officers and crews, still confining it to merchant American vessels. In view of the tremendous shortage of tonnage at the present time, due to various causes, the fear of shipowners to engage in commerce that may jeopardize their vessels by submarine activities, it was difficult to get vessels of friendly foreign flags to engage in commerce where it was necessary to pass through the submarine zone.

The purpose of the bill is to give insurance to friendly foreign flags, not merely the vessel itself, but also, under certain circumstances and conditions, to the officers and crews, in order that there might be no hesitancy on the part of the owners to putting their ships into the commerce subject to great danger.

The amendment to the original act is contained in the first section of the bill, which adds section 2b thereto. The purpose of the bill is to make tonnage available for not only American commerce, but really for commerce of the allies, in order that we may get the greatest possible number of ships to daily send food and munitions of war from the United States to Europe. Anything that will do that certainly ought to be encouraged not merely as a war measure, but in order to expedite business and to insure the safety of these foreign vessels and their officers and crews.

Only recently the Shipping Board has taken over something like 200,000 tons of Japanese ships, and it is now engaged in negotiation for almost an equal amount of tonnage of Norwegian ships. The owners of the vessels do not wish them to be jeopardized by going into the war zone unless they can be given protection of the war-risk insurance. The private marine insurance companies can not do this business. The risk is too great, the amount involved in the cargoes is too large, and hence the Government must carry it alone, and for that reason we have put the provision in the bill.

The second part of the pending bill relates to a subject matter that ought to be legislated upon. It is section 2 of the bill, which reenacts section 5 of the original war-risk insurance act, and the only new matter is contained in lines 7, 8, and 9, on page 4 of the bill:

The Secretary of the Treasury is, in his judgment, authorized to compromise the claim either before or after the institution of an action therein.

That provision is contained in various other acts enacted by Congress. I recollect that a like provision is contained in the compensation act. It hastens the adjudication of claims, and it avoids long delays as the result of litigation. In these matters expedition is very essential.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. I will.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman has referred to the original war-insurance act and the amendment of June 12, 1917. That amendment added a new subsection to section 5, which fixed the compensation to be paid under the insurance act to the officers and crew of the vessel in definite terms. This bill seeks also to amend section 5. What I want to know is whether the amendment fixing the compensation, which was a part of section 5, remains in effect?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; but I intend to offer an amendment to clarify the situation, because, as the bill is now drawn, it adds a new section—section 2b—to the original act of 1914; the act of 1917 added a new section known as section 2a. Therefore this would not be proper unless we change this bill so as to show that we intend to amend the original act as amended by the act approved June 12, 1917. I shall offer that amendment at the proper time.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think it ought to be made clear that the provisions in the amendment of June 12, 1917, not inconsistent with this act, are retained.

Mr. ESCH. They are retained, and I shall offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. I will.

Mr. DENISON. Can the gentleman state whether or not the allied governments have similar war-risk insurance acts?

Mr. ESCH. I can state definitely with relation to Great Britain and France that they do, but I am not clear as to Italy.

Mr. DENISON. Can the gentleman state whether or not these governments have broadened the scope of insurance so as to insure the cargoes and vessels of friendly neutral nations?

Mr. ESCH. Not to my knowledge. They may have done so. They are so pressed for shipping that they are relying on the United States to do the transatlantic carrying. Italy has at present a very small available merchant marine, and it is confined largely to the Mediterranean traffic. So the United States, in order to supply Italy, will have to do it by American ships or vessels chartered by the Shipping Board or by charters held by American citizens.

Mr. DENISON. Under this bill would the Government be authorized to insure a Dutch ship? I notice that Holland has forbidden her ships from leaving port, doubtless for fear of their being sunk. Would the Government be authorized to insure these ships?

Mr. ESCH. I think so, because Holland is a friendly nation, and this bill covers friendly foreign flags.

Mr. MADDEN. But anyway the Secretary would not have to write the risk if he did not want to?

Mr. ESCH. No. It says that when, in the opinion of the Secretary, he finds the war-risk insurance, and so forth.

Mr. ANDERSON. May I ask another question?

Mr. ESCH. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON. The amendment of June 12, 1917, to which reference was made, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, to issue reinsurance on a vessel and cargo insured by a friendly foreign nation. This bill extends that provision so as to permit the bureau to insure the vessel and cargo directly. Is that correct?

Mr. ESCH. That is right, and I think it is an advantage. Now, there is one other provision that I want to call attention to and that is section 9, page 4, fixing the termination of the war-risk insurance for vessels, officers, and crews.

Under the last amendment of the act, which is the act of June 12, 1917, a limitation was made of four years. Those four years will expire on the 2d of September next. Hence the necessity for an extension of the war-risk provisions of the war-risk act. That is done in this section 9 so as to make this provision terminate within six months after the end of the war, and it then defines what we mean by the end of the war in terms somewhat similar to those adopted in the railroad-control act. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield me 5 or 10 minutes?

Mr. ESCH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill is all right and I have no objection to it, but what I rose for, since we are considering the War-Risk Bureau, is to call attention to the inadequacy of the War-Risk Bureau service in respect to paying allotments. I want to say for Mr. De Lanoy that he has been very nice to everyone and has tried to do everything he can apparently, but notwithstanding all that there seems to be a lack of system in the War-Risk Bureau which makes it impossible for those who are dependent upon payments resulting from their husbands or sons being in the Army to get the money. I want to cite a typical case. On the 21st of March a woman whose husband is in the war, a volunteer in France, leaving a wife and three children at home, wrote me and told me of her desire to have her allotment allowed. On the 28th of March I wrote to Mr. De Lanoy and called his attention to the case, gave the unit in which the man is serving, told him about the number of children in the family, filed the claim for the allotment with all of the information that is required under the act. I received a reply on the 15th of April telling me that the matter would be gone into and given early consideration. I sent that reply to the wife of this soldier and stated to her that I thought she would not be delayed very long in obtaining an adjustment of the case. On the 20th of April she wrote me, telling me that she was pleased to have my assurance that the War-Risk Bureau would soon adjust the case, and calling my attention to the fact that the allotment which she was looking forward to was the only means of support for herself and her three children, and that she was in great distress.

On the 11th of May, in response to a further letter to Mr. De Lanoy, I received a letter calling my attention to the fact that on the 7th of December, 1917, this case had been adjusted, and that on the 7th of March, 1918, he had ordered a check made and sent to the woman whose husband was in France. I sent that letter to the wife of this soldier on the 14th of May, and on the 17th of May she wrote me to the effect that she had received my letter advising her of what the office of the War-Risk Bureau said with respect to the case, but that she had not yet received any payments under the allotment that was made last December, and no evidence of any indication that she will. On the 20th of May I wrote to this woman and told her that I had again taken the case up with the War-Risk Bureau. To-day is the 22d day of May, and of course I have not yet received any reply. However, here is a case that was adjudicated on the 7th of December, 1917, with information to the effect that the check had been ordered made out on the 7th of March, 1918. Here is the wife of a soldier in France with three children, with no income whatever, waiting to hear from the War-Risk Bureau, and in the meantime being compelled to depend upon friends and neighbors for something to eat. I happen to know the case. This is only one case. It is a typical case, and I cite the case because I want the Members of the House to realize how difficult it is to get adjustment of cases pending before the War-Risk Bureau. I do not want to find any fault with anyone connected with the War-Risk Bureau, and I am offering this suggestion publicly, with the hope that they will take notice of it. I introduced a resolution this morning which, on account of this being Calendar Wednesday, was ruled out of order. Had it not been Calendar Wednesday, that resolution would have been on its way up to the Secretary of the Treasury. That resolution reads as follows:

Whereas complaints are reaching Members of Congress in constantly increasing numbers from the wives and mothers of soldiers whose allotments from their husbands and sons are their sole or principal means of support that they are unable to get their allotments adjusted or, if adjusted, have not received remittances; and

Whereas in many cases the families of soldiers are in distress and in need of immediate assistance; and

Whereas the Congress has authorized the Secretary of the Treasury, through the War-Risk Bureau, to make prompt adjustment and payment to allottees: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to report to the House the cause of the delay in making adjustments and payments, and also to advise the House of the number of allotments thus far adjusted and paid, the number adjusted on which payments have not been made, and the number of unadjusted allotments; the number of persons employed in the War-Risk Bureau, the aggregate monthly expense of such bureau, the percentage cost of adjustment and payment, and when the work of the bureau is likely to be current.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I want to say that I am very much in favor of my colleague's resolution, and I have a number of cases practically like the one that he already cited, but I want to ask him if he has not some suggestion to make at this time which might lead to improvement of this condition. I noticed by a statement issued by the Bureau of Public Information some time ago that this department has 3,300 clerks. If we were to add a few more clerks they would only be in each other's way.

Mr. MADDEN. The suggestion I would like to make is that some one that has a knowledge of accounting, a knowledge of system, a knowledge of organization, shall be placed at the head of each one of the divisions connected with the War-Risk Bureau. It is evident that there is no one there who has any knowledge of system or any knowledge of organization, any knowledge of assimilation, any knowledge of coordination. It is not that they have not plenty of people there. It is the fact that they have people there who do not know why they are there or what they are doing since they went there. I am told by one of the employees down there—a first-class stenographer—that three men, all subject to military service, are sitting around where she is at work with her typewriting machine, with their feet upon their desks, with no knowledge of the purpose for which they are there, except that they have a pay day on the 1st and 15th of each month. Of course, there ought to be some remedy for this, and the remedy is to clean it up, to coordinate, to systematize, to put somebody in who has knowledge of office work. There is not a bit of reason in the world why this work can not be kept up. The mere fact there is a large number of cases coming in is no excuse, because that can be met as readily as any other increase of work has been met. They have no trouble in the Navy, they have met every increased demand upon them. They knew how to assimilate the men necessary to be employed in the accounting department, and what we need now is less politics and more humanity, more organization, more business, less favoritism, more execution and less promises.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. COX. What is the gentleman's judgment on this proposition, whether or not the Secretary of Agriculture would ask for the exemption of 2,000 more employees and put them in, whether the work would not soon be current?

Mr. MADDEN. I want to tell the gentleman I have introduced 11 resolutions addressed to the head of each department of the Government like this. This one happens to be addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to report to the House the number of men in his department that are liable to military service for whom he has requested and obtained exemption from military duty, the names and addresses of such persons, and the character of work they are performing in the Treasury Department.

One of those went to the Secretary of Agriculture, one went to the Secretary of State, one to the Secretary of War, one to the Secretary of the Navy, and so forth, and we propose to find out how many slackers we have hidden away.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman's resolutions will pass without a dissenting vote.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think there will be trouble about passing them, because I believe every Member of Congress wants to get the facts.

Mr. COX. I was wondering whether the Secretary of Agriculture would ask exemption of 2,000, and whether or not that would bring the work up current.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Does the gentleman know whether or not the young men in the War-Risk Insurance Service have been exempted from military service because they are there?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know that; I can not say that.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I will tell the gentleman I do not think they are exempted; and that when the time comes to be called, they will be called and subject to draft. They do take them in the civil department, but it does not give them any exemption.

Mr. MADDEN. That is all right. What I want is efficiency. I want results; that is all. I am not finding any fault with the employment of those men. I do not care whether they employ men within the draft age or not if it does not exempt them from military duty. What I want is to get action—action, results.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Illinois has asked the question, but I wanted to know whether or not the gentleman had inquired in order to ascertain whether the three young men to whom he referred as being subject to the draft and being employed in the War-Risk Insurance Bureau had been exempted because of their employment or work there, subject to their call hereafter? My information is that they can be employed, but they are not exempt and on call must respond to the draft.

Mr. MADDEN. I have not inquired whether they are exempt from military service; but I have inquired to this extent, that whatever reason there is for their employment they are not doing anything. That is the point.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. COX. I will undertake to answer the query of the gentleman from South Carolina. If he will conduct a little inquiry of the Federal Farm Loan Board he will find three men exempted from draft—two single men and one married since the war—doing practically nothing.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In what department?

Mr. COX. The Federal Farm Loan Board, taken out of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What are the names of those men?

Mr. COX. I think I can give their names if I am ever called upon.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I call upon the gentleman now.

Mr. COX. I am not going to disclose them now.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, I beg to suggest to the Secretary of the Treasury, to the head of the War-Risk Bureau, and to the heads of the other departments of the Government to understand that there is no disposition whatever to cripple them in the discharge of their duties, no disposition whatever to criticize them unjustly, no disposition whatever to criticize them at all, except in so far as just and constructive criticism will call their attention to the necessities of prompt action to the duties devolved upon the men who are in command of this bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SIMS. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the committee for a few minutes to reply to my colleague in reference to war-risk insurance. If he bases his attitude on the "typical case" which he stated, I do not believe he has much right to complain. I do not believe that the House ought to put this bureau to the expense and trouble of making this report because of that one typical case. But let me call your attention to the situation. This law was passed the 6th day of last October, seven months ago. There was not a particle of organization to begin this work with. After that law was passed, or at the time it was passed, there was not even a blank printed on which the bureau could do its work. In the first place the Secretary of the Treasury had to find a man to take the place as director of the bureau. Before even he had done that applications for insurance, allotments, and allowances began to pour in on the bureau, and now to-day there are more than 2,000,000 applications pending—that is, more than 2,000,000 applications have been received at the bureau for insurance on the lives of our soldiers. On the 4th day of May 1,864,416 applications had been received for allotment and allowance. Now, when we consider that this bureau began its work less than six months ago, with an organization made up largely of raw material, made up of men and girls who had no business training and no experience in work of that kind—in spite of that fact this bureau has passed 760,000 cases for allotment and allowance and has issued and mailed more than 600,000 insurance policies, and in addition to that has issued many thousands of policies which it has not yet sent out, for the reason that the soldier did not give directions in his application as to whom it should be sent.

I want to say to you that I think the work that has been done by the bureau is a marvel of efficiency when you consider the circumstances which have surrounded it.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I was going to ask my colleague if he was not mistaken in the last statement he made about the number of policies of insurance. I saw in the bulletin issued by the Bureau of Public Information where they had insured some time ago 1,700,000 men and that the average policy was $8,500. So I am afraid my colleague had his figures too small.

Mr. ESCH. The difference arose in the fact of the difference in the amount of the insurance and the amount of allotment. The gentleman is right about 750,000 allotments being passed on, but there are practically now about 2,000,000 policies.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I am correct in my statement. They do not mail out a policy from the bureau unless the soldier indicates in his application to whom it shall be mailed, and they have on file in the department a great many insurance policies under those conditions, but the number of those I can not give you. But on May 4, 590,000 policies had been mailed. But, as my colleague from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] has stated, the policies average over $8,000 apiece, and the policies that have been issued and mailed and the policies that are still in the office vaults of the bureau amount to $16,000,000,000.

Now, just compare that with the Pension Bureau, if you will. I do not think anyone will deny that the Pension Bureau is efficient. I have not heard any complaints about its work. If you can get a widow's pension through the Pension Bureau short of eight or nine months, you will do better than I can.

I will undertake to say that more than half of the widows' pensions that have been granted within the last year have been pending before the department for a year. Now, they are not inefficient, and I will undertake to say that it does not take any more work to pass on a widow's pension claim than it does to pass upon an allotment or allowance in the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. Now, taking those things into consideration, and taking the fact into consideration that the people of the country do not understand yet how to proceed to get these allotments and allowances, which fact accounts for a great deal of the correspondence that comes to the Members of the House and to Senators—taking all things into consideration, the work accomplished entitles the men in charge to our admiration rather than our knocks. The lawyers of the country do not know what the law is. A week ago I had a request from one of the circuit judges in my district asking me to send him 60 copies of the war-insurance law, so that he could give a copy to each member of his bar, so that they would know what the law is. That accounts for a great deal of the delay, if you can really call it delay. But I will undertake to say that you can not justly call it delay if a soldier enlists in December, as in the case the gentleman from Illinois referred to, and his dependents get their allowance on the 7th day of March. That is not unnecessary delay. They have to make some investigation. They can not pay out this great amount of money without knowledge as to whom they are sending it.

Let me call your attention to another thing that the bureau has experienced. They have to make many changes in the record, and they have millions of records. They have to keep a record of every allotment, a record of every allowance, a record of every insurance policy, a record of every compensation case, and a record of every marine-insurance case.

They have to make every month 200,000 changes in those records. When a soldier dies they have to change the record; if his wife dies, they have got to change the record; if a child dies or a child is born, they have got to change the record; if an allottee changes her place of residence, they have got to change the record. If a soldier is promoted or demoted, the case must be readjudicated and the record changed. And one gentleman in the bureau showed me personally a great table covered with checks, over 40,000 of them, which they had sent out and which had been returned through the Post Office Department for the reason that the post office could not find the addressees. Forty thousand of them were there on the table in one room in the bureau. Now, they had done their part. They had mailed these letters according to the information they had. Sometimes the address on the application is not very distinct and not very well written. There are thousands and thousands of cases where the allottee, or the person entitled to compensation, moves from one place to another without notifying the bureau. They are not responsible for that.

Mr. COADY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. COADY. To emphasize the importance of the investigation they should make, about which the gentleman is talking, I know of several cases, under my own investigation, where the soldier was married, but had made allotment to his mother. They had made false statements, which were found by investigation.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. In some applications the soldier states that he has not any dependents, and afterwards the bureau gets claims from dependents. They have to investigate it and to find out the bona fide dependent. There are many cases where two persons or more than two make claims for the same allotment. They must investigate that. One gentleman at the bureau told me of an instance where there were five women who claimed the allotment of one soldier, and on investigation they found the soldier had married every one of them, and all five of them really thought they were bona fide claimants. The bureau has to guard against those things. At Camp Meade alone there were 22 cases in which more than one wife claimed the allotment of the soldier.

Now, a few cases like that certainly suggests to the bureau that they must use some care. They can not simply reply to a letter received from some person and send a check for the amount claimed. Everything must be adjudicated according to the law, and the bureau must have satisfactory proof on which to base a judgment.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. The record shows, I think, that there were 55 "John J. O'Briens," and that 15 of them had wives by the name of "Mary."

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I think I heard of that instance, too.

Mr. DENISON. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Did my colleague learn, in conferring with the heads of the bureau, of any lack or need of help in the bureau? Is there something the bureau would like to have from Congress that would aid it in the efficient administration of its duties?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I think they have all the help they need at this time. I have no doubt there are many persons ready and willing to go into this bureau, but they can use only so many until they get the work thoroughly systematized, and I dare say they will take on employees just as fast as they can use them profitably and to advantage.

It is proper to call attention to another phase of the difficulties with which the bureau has to contend. The bureau is in eight different buildings in different parts of the city, none of them convenient and some far removed from the main office. This tends to confusion and delay and has been a great obstacle to efficiency and prompt service.

Mr. DENISON. I was going to state that I did not consider that this resolution that my colleague [Mr. MADDEN] had introduced was a criticism unfriendly to the bureau. I do not so consider it. I think that Mr. De Lanoy has done wonderfully well so far as he himself is concerned, and I know he has been trying to do well.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I do not regard my colleague's resolution as a criticism at all. I am sure he offers it in good faith to get the information it calls for, but it is unfortunate at this time that we should do or say anything to increase the anxiety of persons awaiting their benefits under the law. It only adds to the labors of the bureau. It increases the correspondence and delays rather than hastens the work. The bureau is certainly doing its best, and I think we had better keep our hands off for the present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to a very definite instance that has come to my attention, where a young man entered the service and made an allotment to his father, and in December was married and made a new allotment to his wife. He was married in December. The case came to my attention on the 23d of March. On the 15th of May I was able finally to get action, and it then developed that the new allotment made by the soldier was made on the 1st day of January, that it was received by the War-Risk Bureau on the 23d day of January, and was not acted upon until the 15th day of May. For two months prior to the 15th of May they were assuring me that no new application had been received, although the man's service had been given, so that he was fully and completely identified, and there were no complications in the case.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. That shows how Members will look at this thing from different angles. Under the conditions as they exist, taking all these things into consideration, I give it as my opinion to the gentleman that the proceeding in that case shows that the bureau was entirely efficient and acted within a reasonable time, and does the gentleman know how many hundred thousand cases had prior right to the attention of the bureau?

Mr. CRAMTON. From the 23d day of January to the 15th day of May, simply to make the change from the father to the wife, while the soldier was fully identified by his service?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Does the gentleman deny that the bureau should make some investigation?

Mr. CRAMTON. Not in that case. The soldier stated that this woman was his wife. No investigation was made or required, except for them to get around to action on the case.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. There are thousands and thousands of cases where the soldier has filed, before his death, in the Pension Bureau a statement that a certain woman is his wife, and yet you can not get a widow on the pension roll inside of a year to save your life. The Pension Bureau has been organized for half a century and has grown up gradually, and has not had difficulties to meet or been obliged to contend with a situation like the War-Risk Bureau at all; and comparing the two, I must say that the War-Risk Bureau has excited my admiration for the manner in which they have done this immense amount of work.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Is the gentleman familiar with the classificatiton by percentage instead of the flat rate for the men in the Army and Navy, which necessitates a vast amount of work? I am assured by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that it will be corrected by a bill now reported. The present law imposes a tremendous amount of complicated work upon the War-Risk Bureau at present.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I think that is true. That work adds greatly to the duties of the bureau and requires care in its performance.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. That is, they fix the allowance and the allotment on a man's wages, we will say, this month; and next month there is another wage; and the next month it is a different thing, so that they are in a constant quandary as to the calculation, entailing a vast amount of work.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. As I stated, every month the bureau has to make 200,000 changes in the records in cases upon which it has already passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, this bill for the insurance of vessels and cargoes and crews is a war measure that is imperative and immediate in its necessity. I am sorry the debate has occurred at this time on the other part of war risk—the allotment and soldiers' insurance. That debate is appropriate, but we have already on the calendar a bill correcting a great many difficulties and simplifying the business of allotment and allowances, and I hope that bill will be called, as it is subject to call, immediately or shortly after the disposition of this bill.

But this bill for the insurance of neutral vessels and of cargoes in neutral vessels and for extending the time in which this can be done, so that all protection by insurance shall not come to an end, and to allow compromise of claims, is absolutely the most important war measure that has been before this House for some time.

Before I went to Europe and while I was in Europe last year I inquired of foreign commissions here, and also of our chief officers, what was most necessary to be provided, and the answer was always, "Transportation, transportation, transportation." Transportation is what will carry our soldiers abroad, what will carry their supplies, what will carry food to our allies, and that food and those men and those supplies are the things most needful in this war. It is essential that they should be carried as quickly as possible, and no agency has been so effective in securing this result as this Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, which insures vessels, cargoes, and crews.

They have insured risks of over a billion dollars. They have had $175,000,000 of risks at one time. They have over $58,000,000 now. They have taken in $41,000,000 of premiums. They have paid out only $24,000,000 of losses. They have $17,000,000 and odd to the good. It is a success. If private companies had been able to assume these risks, which no private companies would have been, they would have charged at least $40,000,000 more in premiums, and they would have had nearly $3,000,000 of expenses. The expenses of this bureau have been only $117,531.26. It is that insurance which enables us to take care of our soldiers and take care of our allies.

We find now that we need to expand and extend it. Shipping is short. We are building ships, but they are not completed. We have had to take over neutral vessels—thousands or millions of tons, or hundreds of thousands, at any rate; but, including the Dutch ships, I think it is millions.

We have had to agree with some foreign countries, I think with Japan, that they will allow their ships to be chartered to Americans. They could not do this business for any reasonable rate for the Americans unless the ships could be insured and protected in the same way that we protect our own. They are doing our work and it has to be done. It must be done now. These ships are sailing now or ought to be sailing now. The bill ought to be passed without delay.

The bill is simple. It allows a compromise of claims; a simple business matter; it extends the time at which the power of this bill would end from the 2d day of next September till the end of the war and for six months afterwards, with a reasonable time allowed for adjustment, and with the power in the President to end its business at any time. We need not debate these propositions. It also allows the bureau to insure not only American vessels but vessels chartered to United States citizens. It is right; our citizens want to use these vessels and our Government wants to use them, and they could not use them without that insurance.

Again, it extends the right of an American or anyone else to insure a cargo going abroad for the supply of our troops and our allies, even if it go in an English ship or in a French or neutral ship. It is our property and ought to be insured, and under proper regulations that right ought to be granted. If there is any change otherwise made by the bill, I know of none. This House ought not to spend time debating this bill, but it should be passed as the most important war measure that can come before this House. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, is hereby amended by adding to such act a new section, to be known as section 2b, to read as follows:

"SEC. 2b. That when it appears to the Secretary of the Treasury that vessels of foreign friendly flags, or their masters, officers, or crews, or shippers or importers in such vessels, are unable in any trade to secure adequate war-risk insurance on reasonable terms, the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, with the approval of the Secretary, is hereby authorized to make provisions for the insurance by the United States of (1) such vessels of foreign friendly flags, their freight and passage moneys, and personal effects of the masters, officers, and crews thereof against the risks of war when such vessels are chartered or operated by the United States Shipping Board or its agent, or chartered by any person a citizen of the United States, and (2) the cargoes to be shipped in such vessels of foreign friendly flags, whether or not they are so chartered. Such insurance on the vessel, however, is authorized only when the United States Shipping Board or its agent operates the vessel or the charterers are, by the terms of the charter party or contract with the vessel owners, required to assume the war risk or provide insurance protecting the vessel owners against war risk during the term of the charter or hire of the vessel.

"The Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is also hereby authorized to insure the masters, officers, and crews of vessels operated or chartered as aforesaid against the loss of life or personal injury by the risk of war and for compensation during the detention following capture by enemies of the United States, whenever it appears to the Secretary that the owners, operators, or charterers of such vessels are unable, in any trade, to secure such insurance on reasonable terms."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "fourteen," insert "as amended by the act approved January 12, 1917."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendment to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOUSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11048) amending the war-risk insurance act, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BANKHEAD, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for four days on account of official business.

BUREAU OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate joint resolution 63, to establish a reserve of the Public Health Service.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman will withdraw that point of order, I will call up another bill. I realize that by making points of no quorum the gentleman can prevent the passage of the resolution, and I do not want to have such a waste of time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to withdraw the point of order under those very liberal terms. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 4482) to amend an act to authorize the establishment of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department, approved September 2, 1914, as amended.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BOOHER in the chair.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the House substitute for the Senate bill be read and considered instead of the Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to consider the House bill instead of the Senate bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the first reading of the substitute be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], who reported the bill, such time as he may need.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, this is not anything like as big a bill as would seem from the way it is written and the report made on it. From the beginning we have seen that in all probability some amendments would be needed to the war-risk insurance act, and from time to time we have reported two or three unimportant amendments, and each time the question has been up we have made the statement to the House that an omnibus amendment bill to the war-risk insurance act would be reported and that a great many amendments would be covered. It might be stated also in the outset that the substitute for the Senate bill 4482 is exactly in the language of the two bills previously reported to the House by the House committee—House bill 11520, reported from the committee by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], which deals with amendments to article 2 of the act, and House bill 12037, reported by myself, which amends articles 1, 3, and 4 of the war-insurance act.

We found after the law became operative, after many cases had been investigated by the bureau, that it seemed to us that the term "parent" should be extended or expanded and made broader and more comprehensive than in the original act. The original act provided only that the term "parent" should include father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, stepfather, stepmother. We think that the language should be expanded so that it will include father through adoption and mother through adoption. We have also found that in many cases there have been people who have stood in the place of the parents to the enlisted man, but under the law they were not capable of being made the beneficiaries of the allotment provision of the bill or of the insurance. We therefore extended the word "parent" to include also anyone who had stood in loco parentis to the enlisted man for a period of five years. The committee reporting the amendment say that the term "parent" should include anyone who has stood in loco parentis for a period of five years next preceding the enlistment of the man or his draft into the service. The matter has since come up in committee, and we are very doubtful as to whether that should stand, and in all probability some member of the committee will offer an amendment to strike out the word "next." That was the sentiment expressed by some members of the committee, that it should include any person who had stood in loco parentis for five years at any time preceding the enlistment. Those are the amendments we have made in expansion of the term "parent."

Section 2 of the bill amends section 23 of the original act. Under articles 3 and 4 compensation and insurance could be paid to people who were not the duly constituted guardians of the enlisted man or the soldier. We believed after consideration that the compensation and the insurance, which runs over a great period of years and is quite a sum of money, should be made definite; that the money should be paid to some one or through some one only who was under the laws of the State a duly constituted guardian of the enlisted man. As for the allotment, something that requires quicker work, we decided that it should be paid to the guardian or curator under the laws of the State, and if there were no such then that it might be paid to the party who was responsible for the care and support of the child.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who is to determine whether the person other than the guardian or the curator stands in such position that the money will be properly conserved for the benefit of the minor?

Mr. RAYBURN. A suitable person, in the opinion of the bureau, if there is no guardian.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am assuming that there is no guardian or curator. How is the bureau going to determine whether the person is responsible or not?

Mr. RAYBURN. They would simply have to determine that like they would have to determine any question with reference to an allotment or in respect to the man who claimed to be the beneficiary of the man who was killed under the insurance provision——

Mr. STAFFORD. I have a case in mind where the allotment by the soldier was made to the mother. The mother has died since the boy entered the service, leaving a dependent brother, one who is disabled from the performance of any labor at all. I assume that under such circumstances the bureau would be privileged to select perhaps the sister, in case the brother was living at home with the sister and she was providing him with support, without the formality of court proceedings to appoint a guardian.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, yes. We have tried to make this law all the way through so that we would have as little necessity for going into court as possible. If Members will turn to the report accompanying the bill, on page 14, they can very easily follow as I refer to the report made. The parts of the old law that are stricken out have a line drawn through them and are printed in the report also, and the new matter is all in italics, which will make it easy for members of the committee to follow.

After section 26 of the act, in article 1, we add new sections—27, 28, 29, and 30. Section 27 just adds a new penalty provision for anyone who would get money under articles 2, 3, and 4 fraudulently and with intent to defraud the Government. Cases of this kind have arisen since this law has been in operation, and it has been thought by the bureau that the penalty provisions of the law are not sufficient. Section 28 makes a uniform rule applicable to all the sections of this bill that no claim under the allotment, compensation, or insurance shall be assignable or shall be subject to tax or claims of creditors, putting it all in one article of the bill, so that it will not have to be repeated in each article, and it repeals that part of the bill in each of the other articles.

Section 9 provides that when a person is discharged from the Army on account of being an enemy alien or a conscientious objector all claim he may have had to compensation shall be canceled, and if he has taken out insurance that that insurance policy shall be canceled at that time, and, of course, the payment of the premiums shall stop at the same time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does he also forfeit the premiums previously paid?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; he forfeits the premiums he has previously paid, and justly so, for the reason that he has had the protection during the time that he was insured. Some one in the committee suggested that he ought to have some equity in an insurance, as he had paid a certain length of time, that in all probability he ought to have some kind of cash surrender value in the policy, but it was decided, and I believe it is the correct view to take of it, that he has no equity in the policy whatever, as any equity he might have in the policy was taken up by the protection he had while the policy was running. I might say right here also that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] offered an amendment in the committee, and I inserted a statement from him in this report respecting it, that would further amend this to deny the right of compensation and right of insurance to anyone who is discharged for certain breaches of military rule. His statement is as follows:

> Men are rightly barred from war insurance and compensation who are conscientious objectors or alien enemies, but the bar should extend to all who are dishonorably discharged for an offense involving moral or unpatriotic turpitude, such as desertion, spying, mutiny, stealing, etc.
> Men should not be allowed to claim, after discharge, that they were injured in service and should get money from the Government to whose service they were unfaithful. The section should be amended as above suggested.

Which amendment he will offer in his own time.

Now, section 30 simply names the act, that it shall be hereafter cited as the "war-risk insurance act." Those are all the amendments to article 1 of the original act.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The following section provides insurance or indemnity for all persons employed in active service under the War Department or the Navy Department. I would like to inquire whether or not that would include clerks in those departments?

Mr. RAYBURN. To what provision does the gentleman refer?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Following section 30. It is section 300. I will read it again:

That for death or disability resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted by any commissioned officer or enlisted man or by any member of the Army Nurse Corps or the Navy Nurse Corps when employed in active service under the War Department or Navy Department.

Mr. RAYBURN. I should like for the gentleman to allow me to come to that later.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I did not know but what the gentleman had skipped that.

Mr. RAYBURN. No. Now the part of the bill which amends article 2 is covered in the full report by the committee, which report the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] made and reported to the House, and I shall not touch on that, but ask that he take that up. Now, I come to the very proposition the gentleman has in mind. Section 10 of the act provides for the amending of section 300 here as a provision of article 3 of the act.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What page is that?

Mr. RAYBURN. I am reading from the report, taking what I say from the report.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have the report.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is two-thirds of the way down the page where it will be shown. Page 14 of the report. I am simply taking the report that I made and also these matters inserted and stricken out so I can follow the bill. I am not referring to the pages of this bill. It strikes out of that where it says:

That for death or disability resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted in the line of duty by commissioned officer or enlisted man or by any member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in active service under the War Department or Navy Department—

And so forth.

Now we have offered this same section with an amendment striking out the words "in the line of duty" where they occur and also striking out the word "the" before the word "active" down lower in the section. The reason for that has been that the term "in the line of duty" has both by the Pension Department and by the Judge Advocate General's Department been so hard of interpretation or a correct interpretation that we thought it would be wise to strike it out. The truth of the matter is that the Pension Department some time ago made one construction of the term and the Judge Advocate's Department made another interpretation of the term, and we believe that where the benefits of this article are restricted to the class named here, that when we say shall be payable to those in active service, that that should be restriction enough, and that the words "in the line of duty" should be stricken out, and we have so amended it to that effect.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I assume that before an enlisted man or an officer is called to a camp, though he has been enrolled, if he suffers a mishap in his business or in any other way, the compensation would still be paid to him or to his beneficiaries?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; the Treasury Department does not look upon it in that way, and they have suggested an amendment be offered to this bill so—take a case like this. That if a man were notified that he would be called for duty, and if he would be accepted by the local board, all of his enlistment had been perfected, that he should be eligible to take out insurance and the compensation should cover him from the time that this notice was given him any time he was subject to the orders of the department. I have refused to put that amendment in this bill because I do not believe he is in that part of active service where he could come in the same class of those who have been actually called on the fighting force. Now, the reason the Treasury Department, or one of the officials, gave for that was this: He said a great many of these fellows were called. They went to the concentration camp. They were not interpreted to be in active service until their physical examination by the Army doctors, and a great many times, he said, even though they had traveled all the way on the train to the concentration camp, many of them would get sick en route, and go there and be turned down on physical examination for some physical reason, and that he thought they ought to be covered during that time. I doubt if this should be done, for the simple reason that if you were to insure him or put him in the class he would be eligible for compensation until he got there and got turned down, and he might fool away two or three weeks or a month before he would go home, and would want it to apply until he got back home. I think it should not apply until he has executed the terms of his last examination and been put in the camp in active service.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Referring again to the gentleman's amendment striking out the words "in line of duty," has it not been the experience also of the Pension Department that it is exceedingly difficult to obtain testimony for the purpose of showing that the injury or death occurred in the line of duty; not only difficult to interpret, but also difficult in obtaining competent testimony?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is very true. Questions like this have and will come up. You put a soldier in the trenches and you keep him there three or four days. He needs a vacation and needs recreation; there is no question about that. They might give him a leave of absence for a few days or a furlough for a few days, and he might go over to Paris. He might get injured there, or something like that.

Those questions all came up; and we put in here, we believe, just the words "in active service."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have two or three cases in reference to Civil War veterans, and I have had one case as to the present insurance feature under the War-Risk Bureau. A young man was accepted for service and examined and went to a concentration camp, and after getting there he became sick, tuberculosis developed, and he was discharged and sent home. Now, is there anything in this law at any place which provides that where a person who is held to be sound in body and limb sufficiently to be taken into the Army, it would be sufficient proof upon which to base a claim for insurance under this bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not think there is any question in the world but that it is conclusive that a man is a sound man if they take him into the Army.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. So that might give him a status for this insurance?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. WALDOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. WALDOW. Some time ago some boys, in traveling from their town to one of the camps, were unfortunate in being caught in a train wreck and four or five of the boys were killed and any number of them were injured. Would they be covered under this amendment of yours?

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, yes.

Mr. WALDOW. They would be covered?

Mr. RAYBURN. They would be either covered under the insurance or under section 313, which allows them the right to sue. And that is a subdivision of the original bill.

Mr. WALDOW. I understood the gentleman to say that he did not want the men covered by insurance until they had received their final examination by the physician in camp.

Mr. RAYBURN. I thought the gentleman was referring to soldiers who had been home and were going back to camp.

Mr. WALDOW. No.

Mr. RAYBURN. Under those circumstances I do not think it would.

Mr. WALDOW. Does not the gentleman think this law ought to provide for some protection for the boys under those circumstances?

Mr. RAYBURN. That has been suggested by the Treasury Department and it is up to the House.

Mr. WALDOW. I simply desire to call the gentleman's attention to the accident which occurred in my own State, down at Albany, where there were 40 or 50 boys injured and 4 or 5 killed, and say that I think they ought to be protected in some way. They were on their way to active duty.

Mr. RAYBURN. If they were covered I think they would get less money than they would if they were not covered.

Mr. WALDOW. These soldiers, of course, would have to sue. Whom would they sue, the railroad?

Mr. RAYBURN. They would sue the railroad, as has always been done.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. IGOE. Is it the intention that section 300 as amended shall relate back to cases now pending?

Mr. RAYBURN. It includes all the amendments as to the father and mother, and the additions that we made, and makes them retroactive.

Mr. IGOE. That is specifically provided, as I understand, in section 9, on page 18. Now, section 10 of this bill amends section 300, and unless you provide specifically that it is retroactive——

Mr. RAYBURN. I shall be very glad to offer that amendment if it is not covered.

Mr. IGOE. I make that simply as a suggestion.

Mr. RAYBURN. It has been our intention to make this law apply back; make it retroactive. Section 301 is amended so that we strike out the word "widowed" wherever it occurs before the word "mother." I do not believe that before a mother can get this compensation it should be a prerequisite that she should be widowed, for the simple reason that there are a great many dependent mothers. There are a great many mothers who would not be as dependent if they were widowed as they probably would be with an old and a decrepit husband on their hands. And, furthermore, I do not think we ought to put that restriction on it, anyhow. I think that if a man has a dependent mother she should get this compensation whether she is a widow or not. And I think, also, as we have provided in this bill, that the father should be added here and given the same status as a mother under the law; that is, if there is a dependent father.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Was there any construction put upon the word "dependent"? I illustrate my inquiry in this way: Suppose the soldier occasionally sent home to his mother a $5 bill, say every two weeks or every month or every two months during his service; would that be considered a dependency?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the term "dependency," as it has been interpreted by this bureau, means about this, that if the party were living the mother would have been substantially dependent upon him for support. I think that is the interpretation they have placed upon it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I wanted to inquire as to whether or not this dependency must be total or partial, according to the interpretation the department has put on the act heretofore?

Mr. RAYBURN. Well, I think it does not have to be total. They are substantially dependent upon him, which I think would mean a partial dependency.

Now, the next amendment that we have put in here just simply makes the section all the way through conform to the writing in of the word "father" and the striking out of the word "widowed" where it precedes the word "mother," and it also includes the widower the same as the widow, if a man were dependent upon his wife for support.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What additional compensation has been afforded to dependent fathers and mothers, if any, by either of these amendments?

Mr. RAYBURN. Well, the compensation will be made more, that is all, in any case of the mother or father, but if there is a dependent mother or dependent father the compensation will be more to both of them than it would be to one of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman specify wherein the bill differs from the existing law as to the amount of compensation paid to dependent mothers and fathers?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; I think I can. In the original act it was provided that if the injury resulted in death and the soldier had a widowed mother, the amount should be $20 a month. This simply says that if he has a mother or father dependent upon him the amount shall be $20 for each. Therefore if he has a dependent father and a dependent mother, it would be $30. If the soldier is totally disabled, then $10 each for the parents.

Mr. TOWNER. I think likely the gentleman's question referred to the rate. I think there is only one change in the rate. Under the old law it was $7.50. Under the gentleman's amendment it is $42.50.

Mr. STAFFORD. My question was as to the compensation to dependent mothers and fathers.

Mr. RAYBURN. That change of figures was not because it was a typographical error. It was made because it was wrongly put in in the beginning.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman to explain whether the original bill or the amendment here would cover a case like this: A marine was killed in the service on shipboard, due to an explosion. His mother was dependent upon him for such sustenance as she had. His mother had two other children. The mother was deserted by the husband, and had been for some years deserted, and had received no assistance from her husband. Now, the marine being dead, he left the mother without any support whatever. The department, I understand, ruled in this case that no assistance could be given to her because of the missing husband. She has no trace of the husband. She is simply a deserted woman.

Mr. RAYBURN. We provide for that by striking out the word "widowed" and leaving it "mother."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that the case would be covered by the amendment proposed?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is this bill retroactive, so that it will affect a soldier who has had an injury or died before this amendment was passed?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. The amendment is made effective as of October 6, 1917, when the original bill was passed.

Section 14 simply adds two new subdivisions to the act, and provides that where the husband and wife and children are not living together the compensation shall be apportioned among them.

Section 15 makes the provisions of section 301 and section 302, where it was provided that the mother was entitled to compensation whether she is a widow or not, effective as of October 6, 1917.

Section 16 repeals section 311 of the act for the reason that it is covered in article 1 or in the amendment that goes to the nonassignability of these claims, which is made to apply to all.

Now section 17 repeals section 313 of the original act. In the proposal of this bill we had an amendment to section 313 of the original act. Representatives of the War and Navy Departments came before the committee and said that it was placing such an additional burden upon them in looking up claims about injuries to men where the Government could take their case and sue to recover for personal injuries that they thought that they ought to be relieved of that, especially during the period of the war. No special objection was made from the Treasury Department at that time, but we adopted the provision of the bill here, repealing section 313 of the act. Since that time I believe that the majority of the members of the committee have come to the conclusion that section 313 should be amended in some respects, so as to relieve the War and Navy Departments of that responsibility and work, but we thought this investigation could be made during the period of the war by the War-Risk Bureau, and when we come to that provision of the bill under the five-minute rule I shall offer to reestablish an amendment to section 313.

The reason for that is this: The same sort of case was cited by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDOW]. Many times you will have a train wreck and have 100 men killed. If the relatives of those men were allowed to sue, probably they would recover $5,000 or $10,000; but where they elect to sue we believe that if they do sue and those people are paid for the death or injury that results, the Government therefore should withdraw that much of compensation.

Therefore the amendment that I shall offer will provide that where a personal injury occurs and the party, or the Government for him, elects to sue the offending corporation, if it be a railroad, for the accident, and the man recovers, or the Government recovers for him, on account of the negligence of the railroad, $15,000, that the compensation which he or dependents would get as a result of the injury or death should be subtracted from the total amount before the lump sum is paid him or his dependents, for the reason that the Government has lost by his death and should be allowed to reimburse itself. The difference should be held and paid out monthly, as the compensation is paid, so that the party could not dissipate all of it and then come to Congress pleading dependency.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Referring to another subject, if the gentleman will pardon the interruption, when the law was first passed it provided a certain period within which the soldier could take out the insurance. There was a time limit, I think, until May 15, possibly. I would like to inquire whether under this bill, for those who are selected now or those who enlist voluntarily, there is any insurance or benefit accruing under this act until they have made application or until the insurance policy is issued?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; the man has 120 days from enlistment to take out insurance, but that automatic feature expired on February 12 last. The reason for making the automatic insurance was that there were a great many men who were injured or died before the law went into effect and since the declaration of war and since they joined the colors. Further, we thought it would take that long to get the matter advertised so that they would know whether they wanted insurance or not. No automatic insurance applies now.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Those now selected and inducted into the Army have 120 days to take out insurance, and during that 120 days are they insured or not?

Mr. RAYBURN. They are not.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood that during the 120 days if any accident occurred, if they were killed in action, the full benefit of the insurance feature applied to their relatives.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is not true now. The automatic feature of the insurance expired on February 12 and has never been revived.

Mr. STAFFORD. The privilege was extended to those who had not taken out insurance.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; for the very good reason that we had some so far away that they could not be reached before February 12 and have the insurance scheme explained to them and give them an opportunity to take it out; therefore we extended the time 60 days. Now no automatic insurance applies because in every home, in every Army camp, in every recruiting station, the recruiting officer is instructed by the Navy Department and the War Department the first thing to tell the recruit about the benefits of the insurance, and there is no reason on earth for any man not knowing about the insurance and being able to take it out if he wants to.

Mr. WALDOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. WALDOW. Coming back to the gentleman's argument before he was interrupted, did I understand him to say that he was going to propose an amendment that would protect or insure the soldier from the time he was enrolled?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I am not. The Treasury Department asked me to offer an amendment of that sort, but I am not going to offer it.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In reference to the automatic insurance you have extended the meaning of the word "parent" so as to include others not provided in the original bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; I was coming to that.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The enlisted man believing the original bill permitted him to apply for insurance for the ones your bill now includes will not for some time be apprised of the change in the law. Ought you not to provide for automatic insurance to those whom you now include in your amendment?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I do not, as it would be very hard of administration and would open up so many questions and would practically draw open the whole insurance question, although I agree that in many cases it will work an apparent hardship or injustice. The automatic insurance under the old law could be paid to the wife, child, or widowed mother. We strike out the word "widowed" and allow it to be paid to the mother, and if the mother is not living, then to the father.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I understood that you had expanded that in that you had given the word "mother" a broader meaning than was heretofore interpreted.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; and it is retroactive.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. If an application is on file and has been rejected for the reason that it did not follow that old law, and it could be so interpreted as to include the clause, the application will be allowed?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; it will be reopened.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Has the gentleman any information as to the number of men in the service who enlisted to avail themselves of the opportunity of taking out insurance in the 120 days?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; out of the 2,000,000 men, less than 200,000 have failed to take out insurance.

Mr. TREADWAY. As the law provides now, these men never will have a chance to take it out?

Mr. RAYBURN. No.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does the gentleman think that that is entire justice to a man in the service, if he has neglected to take out insurance?

Mr. RAYBURN. I am glad the gentleman has asked the question, for I feel very strongly on that for this reason: I feel that it would be an absolute injustice to these men not to have a time limit. I will give the gentleman my reasons. I had that opinion before any representative of the War or Navy Department came before the committee. After that my belief on that proposition was reinforced and greatly strengthened. If you turn a fellow loose and say that at any time you can take out this insurance, it will be the greatest invitation in the world for him to procrastinate. He will say, "Well, I don't want to take $6.50 out of my pay this month for insurance; I will wait until next month"; and so it will go on and on and on. Furthermore, the Government will not get the premiums to put into this fund that they are going to begin to pay out in enormous sums after we get a million or two men in France. My judgment was backed up by Admiral Cowie and Col. Lord, who came before our committee and said that the greatest inducement that they had—the greatest incentive that a man had—to take out insurance, and take it out readily, was that they only had 120 days to take it out; and Director De Lanoy, who has had 30 years in the insurance business, testified that, out of sixteen or eighteen hundred thousand men taking out insurance, he did not believe that more than 60 per cent would have taken it out before the 120 days expired if the limitation had not been placed in it.

About the 200,000 men who did not take out any insurance, and never will have the privilege of doing so, I want to say this: There are a great many men in the Army to-day who do not want this insurance. There is no one in the world whom they want to inherit what they can get by the insurance. They are men who have people who are in the permitted class of beneficiaries. There is many a man who has a mother who probably has put him out and married some sorry fellow when he was a boy, and he has grown up under the care of some one else, and he knows if he does take out this insurance he can not name that other person, and he will not take out the insurance because he does not want his mother, who probably has treated him wrongly, who drove him from her roof at a time when he was young, and her husband, to get any benefit through him. Then there are thousands of men in the Army who do not have any dependents at all. They call them "nones," although in the hearings it is printed "nuns." There are a number of those in the Army, and as far as allotments and compensation and insurance are concerned, especially as to allotments, hundreds and thousands of them have gone into the class writing that they had no dependents whatever. These people, of course, do not want to take out this insurance and pay six or eight dollars a month out of their salary which they think they can use. I think it is very unwise on their part, because, although to-day they have not any dependents, the time may come when they will have some, and they might become disabled. Even though a man has a leg or an arm shot off, one of the reasons given for the passage of this law was that when such men came out of the Army, the best blood in the land, some of it, having both legs or both arms off, we wanted those people to feel that they could get married and establish a home, and that the provisions of this bill would be liberal enough for them to do that.

I believe that the greatest injustice that we could do to these soldiers would be to take off the 120-day limit—not only to the soldiers themselves, but to the Government. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in a $30-a-month pay for a soldier a man can make an allotment of $15 a month and can pay a premium on $10,000 worth of insurance and then have more money to spend than Gen. Pershing said his men ought to have to spend, because he says that if his Army in France has more than $10 per month of idle money to spend it will absolutely demoralize them. For that reason and for many others I feel absolutely certain that it would be a great mistake for this Congress to throw down the bars.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I appreciate the gentleman's explanation, and I think it is a very convincing one. I have had at least one instance of hardship resulting from the fact that a boy had neglected to avail himself of the 120-day period. However, there will always be a case of hardship now and then, and the explanation the gentleman gives, I think, covers the point very well indeed, with the greatest fairness to all concerned.

Mr. RAYBURN. I might say, further, that Mr. FRENCH introduced a bill to take this time limit off. He came before our committee, and we gave him an extended hearing—all the time he wanted—and after we argued the question with him, or after some of us did, and after he had sat in the committee and heard the statements of Admiral Cowie and Col. Lord and the representatives of the Army and Navy, Mr. FRENCH said to me that he thought in all probability his bill was a mistake.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I presume the matter was discussed in the committee when the committee had hearings. Does the gentleman know, or have insurance actuaries determined, whether or not the premium paid on this insurance will make the Government safe, or is it sufficient to carry the insurance?

Mr. RAYBURN. We have piled up a considerable fund since this insurance went into effect, and it may be surprising to Members of the House to know that out of more than 1,600,000 or 1,800,000 men, whatever it may be, who have taken out insurance, the average amount of insurance they have taken is $8,200, or within $1,800 of the maximum amount. When we passed this law the estimates were made upon the basis of a million men in France during the second year of its operation, and that it would cost the Government $500,000,000. Of course, at this time there is quite a fund to the credit of this insurance.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Assuming that peace should come soon, I have no doubt that the premiums would carry the insurance for years to come.

Mr. RAYBURN. The intention of this insurance is simply this, that it is calculated upon the American table of mortality, with a 3½ per cent charge, and in time of peace it will carry itself. It is written on the basis of the cheapest safe old-line insurance in the world, which is a yearly term renewable insurance, minus the loading, which is the agents' charges, and so forth.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I have no doubt that it will carry the insurance for a good many years, and probably there will be no new blood coming in under the insurance after the war ceases——

Mr. RAYBURN. Not for a long time.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. But when these men become old and begin to die, then I dare say that the premiums will not be sufficient to make the Government whole.

Mr. RAYBURN. There is a probability that it will carry itself all the way through peace times.

Mr. LONDON. What is the total number of men insured?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is practically 1,800,000, and when we had the hearings upon this bill it was shown that less than 200,000 men had failed to avail themselves of this insurance. I think that more than 90 per cent of the men avail themselves of insurance.

Mr. LONDON. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that where insurance rates are based upon the American table of mortality the accumulated reserve will prove to be sufficient, even if the number of men insured is less than a million. That has been the experience of every large fraternal insurance order and, as the gentleman knows, most of the fraternal orders have been compelled by State laws to adopt the American table of mortality as the basis for their fraternal insurance rates.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. That is true only in case the company continues to take in young blood so as to keep down the average death rate.

Mr. LONDON. It has nothing to do with the question of young blood and new men coming in.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. After the war and the soldier is discharged and it is found he is perfectly sound and has received no injury either by wound or disease, his insurance policy still continues, does it, during his life?

Mr. RAYBURN. He is given five years in which to convert it into another kind of policy.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Until then if he pays the same premium it runs along after the war——

Mr. RAYBURN. No; it will go up. An annual renewable insurance goes up, and that is the reason against any such insurance. It is fine insurance for a young man, but very poor for an old one.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is good all during his service in war, during his time of service?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think so, because it is the cheapest insurance that can be had for men of the age of the average soldier.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it necessary to renew the policy every year?

Mr. SWITZER. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether the committee has any estimate of the number of policies that may lapse after the war.

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I can not read men's minds after the war any more than before it.

Mr. SWITZER. I know; but you had estimates in the original hearings on this bill as to the number of men who would take insurance, and the argument was that it would be 25 per cent. I believe the same experts that had experience in the past probably could inform us about what per cent it would be.

Mr. RAYBURN. No; the gentleman I am sure is mistaken about the 25 per cent of men taking insurance. The estimate was that probably they would take on an average of $2,500 insurance instead of $8,200.

Mr. SWITZER. Twenty-five to 50 per cent, I recall it distinctly. Now, have not practical insurance men sufficient experience to inform us about what per cent of those million or two million policies will lapse?

Mr. RAYBURN. They probably could, but I never asked any.

Mr. SWITZER. The gentleman has no information?

Mr. RAYBURN. I have none whatever.

Mr. SWITZER. If the policies do lapse, the Government will get the benefit of the premiums that have been paid in as an offset——

Mr. RAYBURN. The men will have gotten the benefit of the protection, too.

Mr. SWITZER. As an offset against the increase that will have to be paid by those who stay in.

Mr. ESCH. As a matter of fact, there is no danger of lapse because the premiums are deducted from the pay.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. CANNON. What I do not know about this bill will make a book and a good-sized one. I understand the policy must be taken out and that it must be renewed. Am I right?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think if he just goes on and pays the premium that the bureau looks after it all right. As long as he pays the premium, it runs on during the war. I do not think he has to make a new application or be reexamined, but if he sends in his premium the policy is considered in force; that is what I mean by a yearly term renewable insurance.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. If he is in France or in a hospital or prison, can his friends renew it for him?

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, yes; the department asks no questions about where the premium comes from, just so they get it.

Mr. CANNON. Now, that makes me ask another question, which I ought to know. Can he designate the beneficiary? This broadens it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; it broadens the meaning of the term "parent," thereby enlarging the permitted class of beneficiaries under contract insurance. It also broadens the class who may inherit the automatic insurance, and where the automatic insurance was to be paid only to the wife, child, or widowed mother, we strike out the word "widowed," and make it payable also to the father. We have extended the beneficiary class in this way.

Mr. CANNON. Can he designate, can he cut out the wife or mother or father, can he designate?

Mr. RAYBURN. He can designate anyone in the permitted class as beneficiary that he pleases.

Mr. CANNON. That answers it.

Mr. RAYBURN. The compensation, of course, is different. I think probably I was a little in error a while ago when I answered, and I shall be glad to correct it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ESCH. I yield 10 or 15 minutes to the gentleman——

Mr. RAYBURN. I think five minutes will be sufficient. I desire to apologize to the committee for speaking so long, but I have been catechized quite a good deal.

Of course, that would be the father by adoption, a mother by adoption, and anyone who stood in loco parentis.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I hope the gentleman will correct that.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

The only amendment that we make other than that is the one I referred to, about the automatic insurance, simply striking out of section 401 the provision for the nonassignability of any claims under this, for the reason that it is covered.

Mr. HASTINGS. The country is very much interested in the administration of the law, and I am sure the gentleman has given it a great deal of investigation. Can he inform the House of the average length of time it takes to pay the beneficiary after death occurs—the average length of time it has taken heretofore, after a soldier dies, before the insurance is paid to the beneficiary? Now, that is one question. The second question is, What is the average length of time before those that are entitled to it under the law have received their allotment?

How are they getting along in paying their allotments? A good many Members of Congress have inquiries about that, and we have heard a good deal of discussion here, and I would like to have the result of the gentleman's investigation upon those two points, both upon the payment of insurance and the allotment.

Mr. RAYBURN. I can not answer the one as to the payment of insurance because I have not had any occasion to investigate that, as no case like that has come to my view. I think it would take only a very short time to make all the proof that was necessary.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is not the question. Was there any testimony before the gentleman's committee showing what was the average length of time after the death of a soldier before the insurance was paid? Was it two months, three months, or five months?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know whether there was any such testimony or not. If there was I do not remember it. As far as this allotment is concerned, I want to say this, that I have never in my life seen any bureau charged with as great an amount of work and of as varied a character as the War-Risk Insurance Bureau that has carried on the work as well and that has been as prompt as that bureau has been. Of course——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Not just now. I want to say just a word, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

I will say this, that when you have to write 1,500,000 checks every month and mail them out over the country, when you can not get the help to do it, and when that department has absolutely gone out here in this town and employed everybody that could write a check and who needed employment, and when we provided in the law that the allotment should be $15 a month, or one-half of the man's payment, never thinking at that time that the men would be getting promotions all the time by the hundreds and thousands, and not having a flat allotment as we have provided in a part of this bill that will be presented by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], and that that alone has necessitated the writing of more than 200,000 letters a month, it means a great deal; and that when we write down there concerning one little case and get exasperated because somebody back home is saying that we ought to answer them by letter the next day or by wire the same day, I think, understanding all that, a lot of us should stop some of the criticism that we have made, not because we intend that it shall be unjust, but because he has failed to comprehend a great amount of detail in this bureau. Further than that, it is a new thing. It is different than paying out pensions. With 2,000,000 men, when you are paying out allotments and writing the insurance policies and mailing them out and making all the investigations that have to be made in reference to the allotments, compensation, and insurance, it is quite a different matter than paying pensions to people when proof has already been made and only a check has to be mailed out.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas as to whether he considers a case adjusted on the 7th of December, on which no payment has been made up to the present day, a prompt adjustment of an allottee's case?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not.

Mr. MADDEN. He said the department had made very prompt adjustment.

Mr. RAYBURN. I did. I say, considering there are nearly 2,000,000 cases, it has been very prompt; and if the gentleman has one case in all of that number in the condition that he says it is, it is not a prompt adjustment.

Mr. MADDEN. Correspondence has been carried on beween the department and the bureau and the friends of the allottees ever since——

Mr. RAYBURN. Is that the only case the gentleman has that has taken that much time?

Mr. MADDEN. That is the only case. That is true so far as I am concerned, but here they made the allotment in December, 1917, and they have not made any payment under this allotment yet. So they do not mail the checks out every month.

Mr. RAYBURN. They have not in that case. Probably they have been lost or probably they could not locate the beneficiary. I say that that one case is mighty bad.

Mr. MADDEN. There are thousands of cases like that.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not think so.

Mr. MADDEN. Other people say there are.

Mr. RAYBURN. I call upon any other Member of Congress to present a case like that. I say that the case is mighty bad, though.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I assume the change in section 401, cutting out the word "widowed," provides for such cases as where the mother has been divorced without fault, does it not?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. It says "the mother."

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Another question, if the gentleman please.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. For the purposes of the record, largely: Does the gentleman have any doubt in his mind but that these various amendments become retroactive?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do as to one, and I am going to offer an amendment to make that entirely certain.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In other words, the intent of these amendments and the other amendments that the gentleman has in mind is to make them effective as of the date of the passage of the original act?

Mr. RAYBURN. Just so.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow a question from me?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. I notice that the change of phraseology applies to the person in loco parentis. Will that require a court proof that a person has acted in the place of the mother in bringing up a young child to manhood? What is the gentleman's understanding of that phrase?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the term "in loco parentis" has a distinct legal meaning. They will have to comply with that.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman kindly explain what that is?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is pretty hard for me to explain it. Of course, the words "in loco parentis" would not mean a father or mother by adoption, because we cover that by another phrase. I think in cases where it was known that a woman or man had taken the place of the father or mother, and had in all ways acted in the place of the father or mother, such a person would be considered "in loco parentis." Before I put my scattering remarks into the RECORD I am going to get, if I can, a definition which I will stand by, although it is going to be pretty hard to do it.

Mr. TREADWAY. An illustration occurs in my own correspondence like this: A woman had living three young children. Three sisters took into the family, without legal adoption, one of those children each. One of those boys is now in the service. Under the existing law the aunt of this boy, who took the boy into her family and brought him up without legal adoption, is not eligible to this insurance. Under the new clause would the gentleman consider that she was eligible under the phrase "in loco parentis"?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think so. I would say so if the department asked me what I thought the intent of Congress was in that regard.

Mr. TREADWAY. It seems to me that the phrase should be exact in its meaning. Does not the gentleman also think so?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. The gentleman stated a moment ago that the soldier would have to renew his insurance at the end of each year. Do I understand that there is anything that the soldier has to do affirmatively?

Mr. RAYBURN. Not at all. All that has to be done is that the premium shall be paid; that is all. I take that from the interpretation of the law, that it is a yearly renewable insurance. All term insurance is that.

Mr. MAPES. How is the premium paid after it has once started?

Mr. RAYBURN. They will take it out of the soldier's pay if he elects that it be paid that way, or any member of his family or anybody else, whether related to him or not, can undertake it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MAPES. Suppose that, as in the case mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois a moment ago, the soldier were taken prisoner and kept in confinement for a year or so?

Mr. RAYBURN. If he had been paying it himself they would withhold it here at the source, and they would continue to withhold it; and if some relative or friend would pay it, they would take it up. I do not think it would change his status.

Mr. MAPES. Do his friends pay it in a number of cases?

Mr. RAYBURN. There are a large number of cases where they are paying the premium.

Mr. MAPES. Otherwise the premiums would be held out?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Must it be on his request, or will it automatically be held out if he is not heard from?

Mr. RAYBURN. It will be paid as originally provided. If he has asked that it be taken out of his pay, that arrangement will continue; if paid by some one else, then that will be followed.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In case a soldier is accepted for service it is the practice now to inquire, if he should be discharged for disability, where his disability was incurred, and sometimes it is held that it was incurred before his enlistment. Would the gentleman's amendment have application to a case of that kind?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not think I grasp the gentleman's question.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In case a man is regularly mustered into the service and subsequently, after a period of service, is discharged for disability, it is the practice now to inquire when that disability originated; and in some instances, where it is thought that he might have had the disability when he came into the servce, he is denied the compensation. In other words, the Government is not estopped by accepting the soldier for service from saying that he was not fit for service when he undertook the service.

Mr. RAYBURN. As a question of law, I would say that the question of a man being physically fit was foreclosed when they took him into the service.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is this amendment that is proposed here now supposed to affect that question? The present practice is not to give the compensation where the medical officer sees proper to say that the soldier had the disability at the time he enlisted, although he might have served an indefinite time. I have in mind a particular case in which a soldier enlisted last May but was discharged in February for tuberculosis, and in the meantime he had had three or four medical examinations and had been pronounced perfect, and yet he was discharged for tuberculosis, which the medical officers certified was incurred prior to his enlistment.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would not stand on that. I do not believe they would have a right to say that hereafter, when they had accepted a man for active service.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In that particular case the War Department had held that there is no method by which they can correct that great injustice that is done by the surgeon's certificate.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Miss RANKIN. On page 16 it is said, "(b) If there is a wife and one child, $25." On what do you base that $25? What is contained in your hearings on that question?

Mr. RAYBURN. That was in the original hearing, away back yonder. We thought that was the best we could do under the circumstances.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think the answer is she will get $15 more.

Mr. RAYBURN. That means $40.

Miss RANKIN. What is she going to do?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know what the fellow is going to do who goes out to be shot. He is going to suffer a good deal. Some of us who are wearing last year's clothes and not eating as much as we used to are suffering a good deal during this war, and we all have to deny ourselves a little.

Miss RANKIN. This is not a question of charity, is it? Is it not a question of justice, and is it not because we believe it is necessary to protect the race?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; that is the reason why we wrote this bill. It is ten times more liberal than the Federal Government has ever been to its soldiers before. If this man has taken out insurance after he allots his wife $15, if he dies she will draw $57.50 a month as long as she lives, or for 20 years in 240 payments. She will also get compensation that will run up to about $100 a month. If he is killed she will get along fairly well on that. We can not make everything exactly right. War is not right. That is the reason why we hate it so. Usually we would fix it so that they can not throw them out of their homes. We did that in the soldiers' rights bill. I think those people will get along. I do not think they can live in opulence, but they can get along.

Miss RANKIN. Does the gentleman think that a woman can raise a child fit to be a soldier on $40 a month, with the present high cost of living?

Mr. RAYBURN. That would be ample in some places.

Miss RANKIN. In what places?

Mr. RAYBURN. In some parts of the United States.

Miss RANKIN. Not in any place in Montana.

Mr. RAYBURN. Probably not.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Assuming that a man dies and has taken out no insurance, has this bill broadened the list of beneficiaries to whom a pension may go?

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman means compensation?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. It strikes out the word "widowed" where it appears before "mother."

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. So that it can go to the mother.

Mr. RAYBURN. Wife, child, mother, or father.

Mr. WALDOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. WALDOW. Following the line of thought of the lady from Montana, is it not true that the United States has been more liberal with insurance and compensation than any other nation?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; it is the only country on earth that has an insurance act for soldiers, and the compensation and allotment is many times more liberal than in any other country in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I only want to make one or two remarks. As to allotment, what it does is good. It simplifies the question; makes it an even $15, and on even months. It will save figuring. I do not think the bill goes far enough. It would be much simpler, as I said when the bill was first passed, for the Departments of the Army and the Navy to pay the allotment and allowance directly to the families as they now do on voluntary allotments. The system has been in vogue 40 years. It has worked exceedingly well, and then we would not have all of this certificating backward and forward from one department to the other before any payment is made, with a great deal of difficulty in finding out how much has been paid by one department or the other.

The practice that prevails in the Army and the Navy as to voluntary allotments, and has prevailed for years, ought to be continued, and most of the delays and trouble that have now taken place have done so because that practice was not followed.

Insurance is another and a different question. That has to be arranged by some outside bureau, as pensions were. There is no doubt about that. When there is compensation after death or disability it is the same. I thought this could be better administered in the Pension Department, but we will not quarrel about that. This department is doing the work as well as it can.

I do want to call attention to one thing further. Section 29, introduced by the department, says that a man shall not get insurance or pension or compensation, or whatever you call it, if he is discharged for being an alien enemy, or if he does not want to fight. But suppose he is a deserter and is a conscientious objector and discharged for desertion, is he to come in in a year or any time afterwards and say, "I want a pension, or I want insurance"? Suppose he is a slacker that will not go to the front, or a coward, or a thief, or worse yet, a spy. The law as it used to be as to pensions was that a man must have an honorable discharge in order to claim a pension or for his family to claim a pension under the law. Otherwise every slacker that wants to get out of the Army can commit some offense and get dishonorably discharged, and then come in and claim a pension for some injury received in the service; a claim got up just as some claims are got up against the Government or against great corporations or against individuals. That section ought to be amended so as to say that if a man is dishonorably discharged he shall not claim a pension and shall not claim insurance.

But that will wait until we get to the amendments. We are discussing the bill as a whole. Our insurance now amounts to $16,000,000,000. It is claimed that over 600,000 men were put out of the fighting among the British alone during one month, either by death or disability. In our Army not merely 25 per cent have taken out insurance, as was prophesied, but almost all have taken out insurance, averaging $8,200 apiece. If 600,000 men were killed or disabled they or their families would ask of the United States no less than $6,000,000,000, payable in 20 years in installments of 240 monthly payments.

This is an awful war. The finances of the United States need care. We are not making any amendment in that regard, but if we are to stand up under this war we must reserve payments for families who need them, and not, according to this bill, encourage young men with no dependents to take out insurance to go to his estate or, because it may be to the advantage of some one hereafter, to continue them at rates not the market rate. It is a pretty large question. It has grown upon us in a most unexampled way.

It was a new departure with reference to soldiers. I wish, and every man in this House, I believe, wishes, that he had the health and strength and the opportunity to do his duty for his country on the fighting line, and without any provision for being paid for doing it, if he had no dependents, by an insurance which he can not fully control of $10,000 to certain relatives if he dies. What a soldier asks is support, support while he serves, and from us food, ammunition, reinforcements, sufficient pay and allowance to his family, and care of his family if he die or be disabled. When that is done the great Government over us has done what it should, and it is doing it liberally. Whether this insurance plan will work out to a real success is one of those things as to which there may be some doubt. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I have no more requests for time.

Mr. SIMS. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (4) of section 22 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, relating to the definition of the term "parent," is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(4) The term 'parent' includes a father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, father through adoption, mother through adoption, stepfather, and stepmother, either of the person in the service or of the spouse. For the purpose of Articles II and IV only, the term 'parent' shall include also a person who has stood in loco parentis to the enlisted person for a period of not less than five years next preceding October 6, 1917, or the person's enlistment or entrance into or employment in active service in the military or naval forces."

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does not the committee mean to strike out from line 25, page 12, the words "next preceding"? I understood the committee was going to offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I am not going to offer the amendment; I am against the amendment. I do not know who is going to offer it. I said it was advocated in the committee.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the section that has just been read. It seems to me that something ought to be done in reference to the suggestion just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS]. I thought that possibly instead of 5 years that ought to read 10 years, but if that is not a good suggestion, certainly it is very wise, in the opinion of some, that the words "next preceding" should be stricken out. The situation is this: Men go into the service and are obliged to go in at the age of 21 years. Some do enlist at a younger period than that—but let us assume that at 21 years of age they entered the service. Five years next preceding that would take the man back to 16 years of age. The support of children is not as essential from 15 years to 21 years as it is prior to becoming 15 years of age, and so it seems to me that either that limit ought to be 10 years that this person has acted in loco parentis or else it ought to be any 5 years not next preceding, because those are the very 5 years when the boy can make his own way. In loco parentis ought to apply to the years earlier than 16 years of age. To bring the matter directly before the committee, I move to strike out the word "next" in line 25, page 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 25, strike out the word "next."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 23 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 23. That when, by the terms of Articles III and IV, any payment is to be made to a minor, other than a person who is or has been in the military or naval forces of the United States, or to a person mentally incompetent, such payment shall be made to the person who is constituted guardian or curator by the laws of the State or residence of the claimant, but when, by the terms of Article II, payment is to be made to such a minor or mental incompetent, such payment shall be made to the person who is constituted guardian or curator by the laws of the State or residence of the claimant, or, if there is no guardian or curator, to some person who is otherwise legally vested with the responsibility or care of the claimant and who is, in the opinion of the bureau, a suitable person to receive such payment."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] what he understands is meant by the words "otherwise legally vested with the responsibility" in line 17 on page 13?

Mr. RAYBURN. That language is in the present law, but it applies to articles 2, 3, and 4. We did not think that ought to apply to articles 3 and 4 for the reason that that covered what might be a large sum of money, payment of which would extend over a period of many years, but the allotment is money that should be paid immediately in a great many instances, because there is very great need for its being paid immediately.

Mr. WINGO. What is meant by the words "otherwise legally vested"? Is there any way by which a person could be legally authorized to receive payments on behalf of the minor except by complying with the laws with respect to guardianship?

Mr. RAYBURN. We intend that that shall mean that somebody who is charged with the responsibility and care of the child shall get the money, even though he has not been appointed administrator or legal guardian.

Mr. WINGO. I have this case in mind: A soldier has a sister who is 13 years of age, who is living with a person who is not related to her at all. That person has never been made the guardian of the minor. She is recognized as a member of the family, although no relationship exists. In that case would this person have to be appointed the guardian of the child in order to get the allotment?

Mr. RAYBURN. Not the allotment. They would have to be if they received pay as insurance or compensation.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, this does not apply to the allotment?

Mr. RAYBURN. It applies only to the allotment and not to the compensation and the insurance. We take the compensation and insurance out of that provision and say that it can not be paid to anyone unless there is some legally constituted guardian or curator in so far as compensation and insurance money is concerned, which may be a large amount of money and which may extend over several years; but as to the allotment, where the laws of no States have been complied with, as to the appointment of a guardian, it may do a great injustice to the minor or to the people taking care of her in this instance not to permit them to take this money, when they are charged with the responsibility of her care.

Mr. WINGO. The law will make it possible for the bureau to make this payment upon proper showing by the person who has that girl in his home and who has had ever since she was a small child.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This language also might include a testamentary or other trustee of some kind—a trustee appointed by some article in writing.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That four new sections are hereby added to Article I of said act, to be known as sections 27, 28, 29, and 30, respectively, and to read as follows:

"SEC. 27. That whoever shall obtain or receive any money, check, allotment, family allowance, compensation, or insurance under Articles II, III, or IV of this act, without being entitled thereto, with intent to defraud the United States or any person in the military or naval forces of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee in reference to the intention of the authorities in reference to this section. You say "with intent." Of course, in law certain presumptions flow from every act. I have in mind this case, called to my intention, touching a man who enlisted just prior to November and made an allotment at the time to his wife. On January 14 he was discharged from the Army. His wife in the meantime had written to him asking about the allotment. He wrote his wife he had allotted half his pay. He was getting $45.50. Finally she received a check for $120, dated March 14. Of course, at that time the man had gotten home, because he was discharged in January. The discharged man sat down and wrote the bureau that his wife had received the check, giving the number of his command and calling attention to the fact that he was drawing $45.50 a month, and that on that basis, instead of sending her $30 a month, as they were doing, they should have sent her $37.75 a month. They did send $30 for four months, which is $120, whereas he contended she was entitled to more. In the meantime he advised the bureau she would not cash the check. He called attention to the fact that he had already been discharged from the Army. They gave no answer to that, but subsequently she got another check for $30, dated April 1, a monthly payment. Not having an answer to her letter, they went ahead and cashed the first check, as they needed the money. Subsequently he called the attention of a friend of his to the situation, and the friend convinced him that instead of being entitled to more, as they were contending, as a matter of fact he had already been overpaid. He immediately sat down and wrote me and called attention to the fact, and returned the last check, which they had not cashed, and wanted me to ascertain through the department whether she had been overpaid; so, if so, she could refund, and also asked me to direct the attention of the Government to the fact that he was no longer an employee of the Government, having been an enlisted man and having been out for several months. Previously the bureau had advised me it had no record of an allotment in this case. Now, is it proposed to prosecute in a case of that kind?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not think that man had any intention of defrauding the Government. I think the intent is the very essence of the thing. The conclusive presumption is that he had no intention of defrauding the Government, but he wanted to do the honest thing.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman is right, and hope the Government will take the same view we do.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I merely wanted to know if the gentleman has any knowledge of the number of cases where money has been paid to people who had no right to it?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not, except they say there are a few cases, and this provision was put in to cover those.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I thought if there were more than a few cases there might be necessity for this legislation, and I assumed perhaps there was a great number.

Mr. RAYBURN. They come up.

Mr. LONERGAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will yield.

Mr. LONERGAN. Is there any retroactive clause in this bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is our intention to make it as of October 6, 1917.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman does not mean that this criminal feature is retroactive?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; I meant the beneficial portion of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 28. That the allotments and family allowances, compensation, and insurance payable under Articles II, III, and IV, respectively, shall not be assignable, shall not be subject to the claims of creditors of any person to whom an award is made under Articles II, III, or IV, and shall be exempt from all taxation: Provided, That such allotments and family allowances, compensation, and insurance shall be subject to any claims which the United States may have, under Articles II, III, and IV, against the person on whose account the allotments and family allowances, compensation, or insurance is payable.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. I noticed in the bill section 311 of the war-risk insurance measure is repealed. The section reads:

The compensation under this article shall not be assignable and shall be exempt from judgments and executions and free of taxation.

Now, this act we are now considering repeals that section, and I want to know whether the section 28 that has just been read is to take the place of the section repealed in the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; and it also applies in Article IV of section 401 of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 29. That the discharge or dismissal of any person from the military or naval forces on the ground that he is an enemy alien or a conscientious objector shall terminate any insurance granted on the life of such person under the provisions of Article IV, and shall bar all rights to any compensation under Article III or any insurance under Article IV.

SEC. 30. That this act may be cited as the war-risk insurance act.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 22, after the words "conscientious objector," insert "or a deserter or as guilty of mutiny, treason, spying, or any offense involving moral turpitude or willful and persistent misconduct."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing much to add to what I have said. In my opinion, a man dishonorably discharged under any circumstance should not have the right to pension. He is expected to do good service. That is the only reason for his getting compensation and insurance. But in deference to others this amendment is limited to persistent and willful misconduct or offenses involving moral turpitude, such as desertion, mutiny, and spying, which are a great deal worse than being a conscientious objector or being an alien enemy. If it is applied to the last, it ought to be applied to the other. It seems probable that the best way to encourage bad behavior in the Army is to tell every man in it who gets tired that he can merely behave badly and get discharged for bad behavior, and that he can then say he was injured in the trenches, he has lost his health, and that he wants to have compensation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand the gentleman's amendment would apply to a person who was guilty of willful and persistent misconduct who is still in the service?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No. He is discharged for that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I see.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the amendment read plainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I would be glad to have the old section read as it would read if amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the section as it would read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 14, line 22, after the words "conscientious objector," insert: "or a deserter, or as guilty of mutiny, treason, spying, or any offense involving moral turpitude, or willful and persistent misconduct," so that the section as amended would read:

"SEC. 29. That the discharge or dismissal of any person from the military or naval forces on the ground that he is an enemy alien or a conscientious objector, or a deserter, or as guilty of mutiny, treason, spying, or any offense involving moral turpitude, or willful and persistent misconduct, shall terminate any insurance granted on the life of such person under the provisions of Article IV, and shall bar all rights to any compensation under Article III, or any insurance under Article IV."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That section 200 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: Page 15, line 5, after the word "of," strike out the word "the" and insert in lieu thereof the word "said," and after the word "act" strike out the following: "entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, as amended"; so that the section as amended will read:

"That section 200 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 200. That the provisions of this article shall apply to all enlisted men in the military or naval forces of the United States, except the Philippine Scouts, the insular force of the Navy, and the Samoan native guard and band of the Navy.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: Page 15, line 14, after the word "Navy," insert:

"This section shall be deemed to be in effect as of October 6, 1917."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, the original act provided that the provisions of this article shall apply to all enlisted men of the military or naval forces of the United States. This bill excepts the Philippine Scouts, the insular force of the Navy, and the Samoan native guards and band of the Navy. It was not originally intended by the committee or by Congress, or the departments having the administration of this law in hand, to include the Philippine Scouts or the Samoan native guards and band of the Navy. And hence we put in that exception in the pending bill. But to make it retroactive it seems to me the amendment I have offered ought to be adopted.

Mr. ROBBINS. Just what do insular forces of the Navy include?

Mr. ESCH. There are about, I think, something like 800 men. The Samoan native guard and band is a very small organization.

Mr. ROBBINS. I understand what the Philippine Scouts and the Samoan band are, as accepted in the ordinary terms, but what is meant by the insular force? Are they Americans or natives?

Mr. ESCH. They are natives of the islands.

Mr. ROBBINS. The Samoan Islands?

Mr. ESCH. Samoan or whatever islands we may have. I suppose it relates to the Philippines——

Mr. ROBBINS. And Hawaii, too?

Mr. ESCH. I do not think we have any in Hawaii. We have our own American troops there.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the second and third paragraphs of section 201 of such act are hereby amended to read as follows:

"The monthly compulsory allotment shall be $15. For a wife living separate and apart from her husband under court order or written agreement or for a former wife divorced the monthly compulsory allotment shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order, decree, or written agreement, to be paid to her, and for an illegitimate child, to whose support the father has been judicially ordered or decreed to contribute, it shall not exceed the amount fixed in the order or decree.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask some gentleman of the committee who is in charge here a question. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] yield?

Mr. ESCH. I will.

Mr. LONERGAN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin please state if, under the practice of the bureau at this time under existing law, a woman who was divorced from her husband on his petition receives benefit under the law?

Mr. ESCH. I should think that she would come under the provisions of the act if she were the guilty party and he secured the divorce on his application.

Mr. LONERGAN. What does the gentleman think of making this law specific on that point? This is merely suggestive—what I am about to say.

Mr. ESCH. Does the gentleman wish to offer an amendment?

Mr. LONERGAN. I would like to get the gentleman's opinion on this: In line 21, after the word "divorced," incorporate the words "on her petition or on decree obtained on her cross complaint, unless the divorce be obtained on the ground of insanity on the petition of the husband."

Mr. ESCH. Of course the court decree would determine the relative rights of the parties, and that is already set forth, I think, in the original act. For a former wife divorced the monthly compulsory allotment shall not exceed the amount specified in the decree of the court. The language of this bill is, "For a former wife divorced the monthly compulsory allotment shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order, decree, or written agreement to be paid to her." Evidently that decree would fix her status. I hardly think it would be necessary to offer the amendment that the gentleman suggests. I doubt whether in the administration of the law a wife who was divorced because of her own fault would be given an allowance by the officials having the administration of the act in charge.

Mr. LONERGAN. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin in a position to state what the practice is?

Mr. ESCH. No. I doubt whether we have data sufficient in the bureau up to date to establish a practice. I can not cite you a particular instance. Possibly the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], who has had larger experience in the administration of the law, could advise the gentleman.

Mr. LONERGAN. Could the gentleman from Texas say as to that?

Mr. RAYBURN. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. LONERGAN. I say, would a woman who had been divorced be a beneficiary under the law?

Mr. RAYBURN. It depends on the decree of the court. If it has been decreed to her, she would; otherwise not. If she were entirely at fault I am sure alimony would not be included.

Mr. SNOOK. I will say to my colleague that I have a case of that kind, and in that case they have followed the language of this act, and it depends on the decree of the court. The wife gets the allotment, provided the court has decreed alimony. I have a case like that where the wife got nothing.

Mr. ROBBINS. I should think that the original act would control. The section to be amended, on page 15, provides this:

The monthly compulsory allotment shall be in an amount equal to the family allowance hereinafter specified, except that it shall not be more than one-half the pay, or less than $15; but for a wife living separate and apart under court order or written agreement or for a former wife divorced it shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order, decree, or written agreement to be paid to her. For an illegitimate child, to whose support the father has been judicially ordered or decreed to contribute, it shall not exceed the amount fixed in the order or decree.

That is the case that the gentleman raises.

Mr. LONERGAN. Exactly.

Mr. ROBBINS. It shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order. There the court has gone into the question. If she is at fault, there would be no decree of the court giving her alimony. If the decree of the court is that she was without fault, the decree and alimony would be in her favor. If the allotment was $15, she would get $10, because the court's order allowed her $10, even though the allotment was $15. Therefore I think it was unwise to put in this act a provision depending on our legislation, whereas in the original act the allotment depends on the adjudication of the court which entered the decree. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut is unnecessary and would be dangerous at this time.

Mr. LONERGAN. I wanted to get the opinion of the gentleman on the committee as to what the practice is under existing law.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Texas what is meant by this language: "A wife living separate and apart from her husband under court order or written agreement."

Mr. ROBBINS. That is a qualified divorce.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is where they may be living separate and apart by court order, but without formal divorce.

Mr. HAMLIN. A limited divorce?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is not an absolute divorce.
